A WIRE from Oakland, Cal., informs that Monday of this week was proclaimed a holiday by Mayor Davis, in honor of the visiting First National stars, who arrived from Los Angeles to be guests of the city and Turner and Dahken. The parade, which took place at noon, was witnessed by a crowd estimated at more than a hundred thousand. The line of procession included members of the chamber of commerce, the merchants' exchange and rotary clubs. Besides these, fifteen other lodges and organizations, including five trade unions, took part in the parade. The stars followed the line of march in elaborately decorated automobiles.

During the afternoon the stars participated in a baseball game, after which they were guests of honor at a banquet tendered by the chamber of commerce. Later, the stars made their appearance at the T and D Theatre. The day became officially known as First National Day, and proved to be the most successful exploitation stunt given in the West in five years. Among those who were present for the celebration were Agnes Ayers, Wesley Barry, George Beban, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Marjorie Daw, Carter de Haven, Margaret De La Mott, Charles Murray, Marshall Neilan, Ben Turpin, Bobby Vernon, Robert McKim, Roy Stewart and Hewling Mumpers.

Sol Lesser and John McCormick, the First National publicity representative, are accredited with the successful representation, and the staff of the T and D Theatre for the efficient advertising campaign.

Educational Managers to Meet August 20th

Because of the great volume of bookings already developed and the necessity of the field force understanding thoroughly the operation of the home office, the first conference of branch managers of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has been called for August 20. The meeting, which will embrace only the eastern territory, will be held at the Hotel Astor and will probably continue for a couple of days.

Managers of the offices in Boston, New Haven, Buffalo, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Cincinnati will be present. Already managers of most of these offices have visited New York and have talked over the general plan of operations with Educational officials, but it is believed that better results can be obtained by having all of the managers together.

E. W. Hammons, president Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., will preside at the meeting and will give the visitors a thorough insight into operations up to date. Talks will be made by the heads of the various departments, and the managers will be especially urged to ask questions and settle any matters about which they have been in doubt.

Immediately on the conclusion of the conference, Mr. Henry Ginsberg, manager of the domestic sales department, will start on a tour of the other exchanges, covering the entire country with the exception of the eastern district.

Crandall Staff to Study New York Theatres

Harry M. Crandall, president of Associated Pictures, Inc., and owner of the most important chain of theatres in Washington, D. C., has hit upon a scheme for increasing the efficiency of his organization. On August 1st, Mr. Crandall will personally conduct his entire executive staff to New York in order that they may become personally familiar with the methods of production, distribution and presentation of motion pictures.

During the three-day conclave in New York it will be the purpose of the house managers of the various Crandall theatres to study the methods of conduct of the foremost of New York's picture theatres—the Capitol, Rivoli, Rialto, Strand, Criterion and others.

In addition to Mr. Crandall the party will include Joseph P. Morgan, general manager of the Crandall enterprises; John J. Payette, assistant general manager; Nelson B. Bell, director of advertising and publicity; Abe Dresner, manager of the Exhibitors Film Exchange, owned by Mr. Crandall; Thomas M. Eastwood, manager Knickerbocker theatre; Charles E. Talbot, Metropolitan theatre; John Upperman, Savoy theatre; Joseph J. Bell, Joy theatre; Harry E. Lohmeyer, Avenue Grand theatre; Zebulon Clark, Apollo theatre; Nat Glasser, York theatre; Samuel MacMurray, Rialto theatre, Roanoke, Va.; John Stump, Strand theatre, Cumberland, Md., and Robert Slote, Apollo theatre, Martinsburg, W. Va.

ZaZu Pitts Married to Tom S. Gallery

According to advices from the West, ZaZu Pitts and Tom S. Gallery, "Miss Pitts' leading man in "Brighter Skies," were married at Santa Anna, Cal., last Saturday.

plates we select the kind of fashions we want, and an order is immediately issued for the number of costumes desired for the cast. The garments are at once made up, reshipped to us and the cast members take their place in the picture attired in fashions that are actually months in advance of prevailing modes but which will coincide with the models worn by the women generally at the date of the picture's release.

"Before I conclude I wish to pay through the columns of the press a very personal tribute to the work of Milton Hoffman, now general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky's London studio. I am convinced that we have started out in our London work along the right lines. I feel that we have grasped the correct ideals and methods. But that we have is due in greatest measure to the sound and generous advice of Mr. Hoffman."

A Few Words of Advice to the Independent Producer

By W. W. Hodkinson

ALMOST from the very day of my entrance in to motion pictures it has been my business to survey the producing field in search of quality pictures. The Progressive Motion Picture Co. was the first organization applying selective machinery and encouraging quality in production. Since I have formed my own organization, which enables me to carry out my plans and policies without fear of producer control, I have more than ever been engaged in searching the horizon for any and every sail flying the flag of independence. Of the growth in the independent producing field as to quantity and its improvement as to quality we need not speak. These matters belong to the history of the day and are subjects for daily comment in the newspapers and for weekly comment in the trade press. I have found it possible out of the irregular and somewhat aimless mass of independent productions to assemble a complete program for the exhibitor—rivaling, I hope, the efforts of the most successful group in the producing field. The verdict of the exhibitor and of his public is final in such matters and I must needs abide by their decision.

The object of this article is to offer a little advice to the independent producer. In the matter of cost my sympathies are with the independent producer, and while I must in justice to the exhibitor preserve high standards, I do not reject a picture lightly or without constructive criticism. What I want to point to here, with all the emphasis of a shaking forefinger, plus the plainness of a megaphone, is the frightful waste in the independent producing field. I do not speak so much of the independent producers who have gained a foothold, though they too have incurred avoidable loss. I address myself particularly to the newcomer in the field, whether he be director, promoter or capitalist.

We, that is to say my staff of reviewers and myself, are looking at independent productions practically every day. Time and again we have looked at pictures indicating talent on the part of the director or the cast but lacking in a good plausible and interesting plot. On the other hand we have seen many a good plot spoiled by the lack of skill of a second-rate director who has sold himself to some financial backer as a second Griffith.

I would like to impress upon every man who wants to enter the independent producing field that the rewards for a good producer are most flattering and that in no branch of the industry is a successful effort repaid more generously than in the producing field. It is necessary, however, to have a compass, to get the right bearings and to take the safest and shortest course

Rumors Rife as H. Davis Reaches Los Angeles

NUMEROUS rumors have been heard on the coast for weeks concerning the future of H. O. Davis, former general manager of Universal City and the big Triangle organization which operated at Culver City, and the arrival of Mr. Davis in Los Angeles a few days ago caused a new and added impetus to the riot of reports. Since Mr. Davis' arrival in Los Angeles he has conferred with a number of influential men of the film industry, but his only statement concerning the various reports is that they are reports and he is in Los Angeles for rest and vacation.

Perhaps the most persistent rumor is that Mr. Davis is to be backed by the Curtis Publishing Company interests, with whom he has been identified as general manager of the Ladies' Home Journal for the past eighteen months. This report is to the effect that the Curtis people will film the most successful stories they publish for their publication, releasing their productions simultaneously with the appearance of the story in their magazine.

to the port of success. It is quite possible, indeed it has often happened, that in spite of precautions taken by experts the good ship "Feature" is wrecked on the rocks of popular disapproval, just as some of the most skillful mariners have often run out of their course and perished on the shoals. Such disaster of course does not mean that navigation is a useless science. In the same way I say that the right steps at the start of making a picture will in most cases prove a security against loss and waste.

I will not attempt to lay down any hard and fast rules for the independent producer, but I will say that he ought to avoid unnecessary handicaps and proceed on a line of reason and experience. He must have at least some of the elements of success with him before the first turn of the crank is made. His own enthusiasm, however sincere, and the enthusiasm of the men who encourage him, help but little if the elements of probable success in picture making are ignored. It may be that if he comes to me with a good filmable story my staff may be able to aid him in securing the other elements of probable success. There may be a good capable director looking for a chance to display his genius. We may be able to secure his talent for a prospective producer. Good directors in this field, the men with an undoubted gift of visualization, are extremely rare.

We must from time to time break the ancient molds and give our public new plays in new garments. Ours is a plastic art. It is capable of infinite development. As in a game of chess there is always the possibility of a new move. The motion-picture art at this very moment is looking for a pathfinder. Every day I am scanning the horizon for the man who will soar "with no middle flight" and who is bold enough and talented enough to explore the realms of the unknown and the unattempted. The motion picture is not for the detection of groundlings only. It has the right to aspire to the upper regions.

I do not hesitate to say that to the personal knowledge of my staff and myself many hundreds of thousands of dollars are wasted annually by reckless, abortive, ill-advised motion-picture productions. If all that money or a considerable part of it could be enlisted in an intelligent effort to make motion pictures, what a blessing it would be to the motion picture industry. It might be the means of that infusion of new blood without which the very heart of the industry loses the rhythm of health and vigor. It may be a means of discovering and bringing into the industry the very best of elements in the world of investors.

I know of no other agency to which the independent producer, who is ambitious to excel in point of quality, may turn for counsel and comfort. We want to encourage vision, we bid a special welcome to the man who is capable of rising above the mediocre. No one succeeds in this field in a way that is worth while unless he spurns the twin evils—rut and routine. "Movies" cannot hold the public indefinitely.

N.A.M.P.I. Aids in Fight Against Indecent Film

When the Censorship Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, headed by Gabriel L. Hess, chairman, learned of the action of the Hon. Bernard N. McFeely, City Commissioner, Hoboken, N. J., in his endeavor to prevent the showing of a picture, "Some Wild Oats," he immediately communicated with the Hoboken City Commissioner, assuring Mr. McFeely that the Association as a whole disapproved of the class of pictures for public exhibition. Mr. Hess cited the Association's stand during the fight against the pictures, "Fit to Win" and "The End of the Road."

Douglas D. Rothacker is getting a large number of industrial contracts signed up these days. He brought two home last week and at present is in Minneapolis after more. J. W. Carnrick, who used to sell short subjects for Pathe, landed two industrial contracts for Rothacker in Ohio last week. Treasurer H. J. Aldous is spending several days at Rothacker's New York office.

American Film Co. has just shipped the first prints of "A Live Wire Hick" to Pathe's New York offices for distribution. It is a five reel special starring William Russell and is an adaptation from "New York Luck" which was a successful box office attraction when it was released some time ago.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy, distributors of the Ford Educational Weekly, will also supervise the distribution and general subscription arrangements of the Ford Educational Library, which is being assembled to provide educational films for schools, colleges and educational institutions throughout the world. The films will be distinctly for classroom work. John P. Brand, well known as an editor of publications devoted to the field of visual education, has been engaged as general manager in charge of distribution and subscription of the new library.

Paul Cromelin Describes Piracy in Germany

To his instructive account of motion-picture conditions in Europe as published last week, Paul Cromelin, president and general manager of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, added illuminative details in an address before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers Thursday last. An interesting phase of that address was the speaker's description of piracy of films now rampant, particularly in Germany.

In Cologne, for instance, stated Mr. Cromelin, he was face to face with glaring announcements of the impending exhibition of a serial for which his firm held the foreign distribution rights and of which he had not disposed. Not only was Pierre La Rue—"Der Mann mit den Roten Augen" ("The Man with the Red Eyes")—stolen lock, stock and barrel to be exhibited to the waiting Colognians, but even the exploitation methods of that serial were brazenly copied without fear or favor. True, the wily Hun had switched the villain's part to a Frenchman—which of course was both diplomatic and likely to further popularize the picture with the natives. It took drastic measures and a deposit of 60,000 marks security with the law authorities to put a stopper on this particular instance of piracy, said Mr. Cromelin.

Sol Lesser Will Close His New York Office

Sol Lesser has decided to close his New York office and transfer all operations to Los Angeles. As soon as all details are properly disposed of, the New York office will be discontinued.

Chicago Notes By L. H. Mason

Jones, Linick & Schaefer managers were the guests of Adolph Linick on July 22 at his big Flossmoor country estate. They brought back glowing accounts of the entertainment given them by their chief. There was golf, a chicken dinner, a rose festival and other things dear to the hearts of "Adolph's boys." It is Mr. Linick's intention to make this an annual affair. He feels that a get-together frolic is a necessity from time to time as all work and no play makes managers dull boys. Among the guests at Flossmoor were: Norman E. Field, Ralph T. Kettering, Emil Mayer, John G. Burch, George Moore, Louis Jones, Sigmund Falter, James C. Mathews, Thomas Burchill and Harry Earl.

Jimmy Carrier, publicist and exploitation expert of note, visited Chicago last week. He has returned to Cincinnati where he will do exploitation work for Universal, specializing for the present on helping put over the Cannibal pictures which are making a tremendous success at the LaSalle theatre, Chicago. Brother Eddie is rusticating for a few days at Peoria, Ill., and is expected to make another visit to Chicago shortly.

Harry Rice has declined to run as candidate for congressman-at-large on the soldiers party ticket headed by Barret O'Hara and will continue to occupy his desk in the Universal Exchange on the fifteenth floor of the Consumers building, where his pay check arrives regularly each week. Harry appreciated the nomination which came as a surprise to him but announced that he has retired from politics.

District Manager Harris P. Wolfberg and his force of hustlers made a new business record for Famous Players-Lasky's Chicago exchange during the week ending July 24th, which goes down in the office history as its banner week. During the period some of the biggest picture contracts ever made in the middle west were closed, several being centered in Chicago while others took Manager Wolfberg to other cities, including Cincinnati, where I. Libson closed contracts for his string of houses in Cincinnati, Columbus, Dayton, Hamilton, Ohio and Louisville, Kentucky. The Lipson deal alone, according to reports involves more than a half million dollars.

Eddie Eckels, general manager of Independent Films Association, is elated over the way independent exchanges are closing for the Neal Hart series of Pinnacle Productions. He states that within ten days after Hart had signed a contract with Pinnacle, Independent Films had closed and received deposits on sales contracts totaling $142,000, covering the 15 states of Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Virginia, Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and New York and that since then the $200,000 mark has been passed with contracts for Southern and New England states.

Leading Chicago exchangemen are optimistic over the outlook for the 1920-1921 period, and basing their predictions on the bookings being signed up for fall and winter programs they declare it will be an even more prosperous season than the one just closing, which to date had been the best recorded by the moving picture industry of the central west. Reports coming in from all exchanges show that the theatre owners are alive to the necessity of putting on high-class features and are taking more interest in early booking than ever before.

Canadian Club Honors Film Players

OVER a hundred guests were present on Thursday evening, July 22nd at the Canadian Club, New York City, as guests of the organization's president, Arthur Knowlson, to greet the members of the company who will appear in Ralph Connor's "The Foreigner." Wilton Lackaye was in his usual form as toastmaster, and short speeches were made by Ernest Shipman, president of the Dominion Film Company; Gaston Glass, Anne Sutherland, Robert Haines and Hanby Schwalbe, treasurer of First National. Winnipeg Productions, Ltd., is the name of the organization which will stage the Ralph Connor stories, under the supervision of Ernest Shipman, and with Henry McRae directing. If the spirit shown at the dinner is any criterion few picture organizations have set out on their career with greater sincerity of purpose and promise of success.

McGee Clinches "Neglected Wives" for South

D. H. McGee, of Jacksonville, Florida, was so anxious to protect exhibitors to whom he had given dates on "Neglected Wives" that when a dispute arose as to the ownership of the feature in the Southern territory he quickly boarded a train and came to New York, where the matter was definitely settled this week. Mr. McGee returned South at the end of the week to begin a strong campaign on this Wistaria production, which is also known as "Why Women Sin."

Governor Smith Greeted by Exhibitors

Governor Alfred E. Smith of the State of New York, upon his arrival in the city of San Francisco recently, was met by a committee of motion-picture owners headed by First Vice-President C. C. Griffin, executive member for California, Daniel Markowitz and A. N. Jackson, who waited upon the governor as soon as he stepped from the train, as a committee representing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The exhibitors introduced themselves to the governor and presented him with a beautifully engrossed copy of the resolution of thanks which had been adopted at the national convention in Cleveland of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, praising Governor Smith for his enlightened statesmanship in dealing with motion picture legislation. The governor was surprised and touched when he received the resolution, and made a neat speech in reply.

Duluth Theatres Print Newspaper

EVEN the shortage of paper doesn't feaze the determined exploitation man, as is evidenced by inspection of a special edition of a newspaper gotten out by P. F. Schwie, general manager of the Duluth Theatre Company of Duluth, Minn., under the title of the Duluth Theatre Record in the interests of the four Duluth theatres controlled by the Theatre Company; the New Garrick, New Lyric, New Grand and New Astor.

The front page of the "newspaper" was secured was headed by a seven-column banner reading "Society Girl in Frame-Up Plot to Compromise Rival," same referring to the story of Nazimova in "The Heart of a Child," booked for the New Garrick. Then under subheads followed a story written in "yellow journal" style in which the plot of the picture was set forth in detail.

Under other and smaller heads was publicity for Bert Lytell in "Alias Jimmy Valentine," playing at the New Lyric; Norma Talmadge in "She Loves and She Lies," the bill at the New Astor, and for a vaudeville bill at the Grand. Cuts of Nazimova and Lytell brightened up the front page and on the second page were four displays for the four theatres and their respective bills. Short stories about the bills at the four houses, the players and an advance story for "Why Change Your Wife?" a future attraction at the New Garrick, were also carried on the first page.

The Duluth Theatre Company houses are in the Finkelstein and Ruben string with Duluth business men in charge of the theatres. Besides Mr. Schwie, M. S. Cook

"Rigoletto" at the Capitol This Week

THE Capitol musical program this week includes an orchestral and vocal rendition of portions of the opera "Rigoletto" that does much credit to Supervising Director S. L. Rothapel.

The number opens with the orchestral introduction of the score which blends into the "Duke's Ballad" with Sudworth Frasier as "Mantova." Mr. Frasier sings from the stage, with a setting of velvet curtains draped to disclose a large French window. This set is used throughout the several divisions of the number, for all the vocal selections.

The solo is followed by the dancing of the "Minuet" by a selected cast from the Capitol ensemble with "The Curse of Monterone" given by Louis La Valle as "Monterone" following. "Away, Thou Audacious Disturber" by the male ensemble singing from the pit is the second part of division (d) of the number to be followed by "Caro Nome" with Irene Williams and Gladys Martell alternating as "Gilda."

Division (f) "Unto a Lonely Abode Directed" is sung by the male ensemble, with the number closing by the rendition of the quartette selection for Rigoletto, a role sung by Bertram Peacock, the Duke, Gilda and Maddalena (Melanie Verbouwen).

The settings are by artist Wenger, the ensemble is in charge of William Axt and the ballet number is directed by A. Oumansky.

and B. J. Cook, vice-president and treasurer respectively, are actively connected with the management of the four houses. The editor of the Record is not credited, but we suspect that Mr. Schwie and his publicity department are responsible for the text and layout of the sheet.

Collins Builds Display for "Broken Blossoms"

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS" displays for the most part have been taboo lately since most of the lobby decorations we have seen for this picture were of a type that cost quite a sum of money and this picture is now playing for the most part in the small-town theatres where expensive exploitation does not pay. However, E. N. Collins, manager of the Liberty theatre and Garden Airdome of Electra, Texas, is a small-town manager who played "Broken Blossoms" not so long ago and for his engagement built a display that is within the reach of any handy manager or his assistant and still is tasty and effective.

Mr. Collins built a lattice work of common lath over the front of his theatre and painted it white. He then pasted red tissue paper over enough openings between the lattice work so that when the letters of the title of the picture, "Broken Blossoms," were cut from a six-sheet there was a place for each letter. Strong lights placed behind the lattice work gave the Liberty a very effective illuminated sign. Artificial flowers were entwined throughout the lattice work as a finishing touch.

Mr. Collins built his display so it could be taken down and at some future time will use it again, with some changes, for another feature.

Mr. Collins is one of the too few small-town managers who belie the theory that because one is holding forth in a town of limited population it is necessary to put up a three-sheet and a few photographs as exploitation mediums and to pass everything else as too expensive and not a paying bet for short-run houses.

Grauman's Prologue for "Prince Chap"

Los Angeles Showman Uses Studio Atmosphere as Basis for Specialty Number

PURSUANT with his policy of presenting prologues in keeping with the feature picture, Sid Grauman staged a specialty number for his engagement of "The Prince Chap" at Grauman's theatre that was a revelation even to Los Angeles, where the art of picture presentation is, usually at least, a step ahead of any other city.

On pre-reviewing the picture Mr. Grauman realized the possibilities for a prologue of unusual effectiveness in the attic type of studio in which many of the principal scenes of the feature are filmed. He had his technical director construct a stage set, working from stills and scenes from the picture, and in the finished product he staged the prologue described below.

The lights in the theatre were slowly lowered, as the orchestra started playing "Auld Lagn Syne," the rattling of dishes and the sound of laughter floated out upon the audience, and as the curtains were drawn away from the front of the stage, the scene revealed the interior of a double set of studios. Their locale was easily determined by the skylights which punctuated the ceilings; bric-a-brac, paintings, sketches, statuary and the many other bits of furnishings usually present in a studio, were placed about the premises with artistic carelessness.

One of the studios was inhabited by a quartette of young artists, who were busily engaged in preparing a bowl of punch. They were costumed in the regular artists' smock, cap and slippers, and offered a harmony vocal number that was especially fitted to the atmosphere.

The other studio was occupied by another artist, seated in a huge arm-chair before a fireplace, a beautiful little girl reclined on a couch beside him. As the quartette finished their song, the lone artist in the adjoining studio started singing the chorus of "I Know What It Means to Be Lonesome"; at the conclusion of this number the little child rose from her couch and walked over to a dressing table, where she picked up a photograph, and after gazing at it, kissed it, and looked wistfully toward the artist in the arm-chair. At this juncture he began the chorus of "Mother," while the quartette in the other studio hummed an accompaniment to it.

As the strains of this touching ballad died away, the artist turned to the little girl and said, "I shouldn't be lonesome, I'm your 'Daddy.'" The little girl nestled up close to him, and the organ began pealing forth the opening strains of "You've Been More than a Daddy to Me." The child, who was possessed of an exceptionally pleasing voice, sang the refrain of this number, and the effect was such that many of the audience could be seen wiping away a furtive tear.

Sid Grauman certainly understands the value of injecting heart-interest into affairs of this kind, and the example given above was one of the most effective ever presented in his big cinema temple.

Landers Knows the Value of Exploitation

BECAUSE Charles H. Landers is an exhibitor in a small town, a live wire and a good showman, as evidenced by the fact that he is making the Fredonia opera house, which he manages, one of the best paying propositions in his village, we are using this story from his pen in spite of the fact that it has a lot more boost for a picture than we usually allow to get by in these pages. We want to encourage the "80 per centers" to write us what they are doing in exploitation. Who is the next to relate his experience as Mr. Landers has done? He tells you what happened when he hitched up to King Exploitation during his engagement of "In Old Kentucky."

"Three days may sound like a mighty short run for a motion picture production to those exhibitors who have hundreds of thousands of people to draw from, but when at the end of two days the total of your box office receipts shows that you have received an admission for every man, woman and child living within a radius of two miles of your theatre, you would figure you had done something if you packed them in on the next day. That's what we did at Fredonia and it was a successful experiment."

"I planned on having 'In Old Kentucky' for but two days. That has always been the limit for Fredonia. I figured my rental capacity business for two days, allowed myself a generous two days' wages and the rest I took around to our local printer. I had enough to buy the whole front page of the Fredonia Censor. The editor wouldn't sell me the whole front page so I compromised by taking the upper half and a quarter-page inside. This left enough over to pay for two separate throwaways. We made the top front page advertising look like a sensational news story. It was labelled 'Extra-Extra.' One of the throwaways was designed to play up the melodramatic features of the film, the other to emphasize the wholesome, lovable romance of the picture."

"After the matinee on the second day, I telegraphed to find out if I could hold the print an extra day, and when the arrangements were made, I announced it. The third day was as strong as the first, and in addition to having the satisfaction of having hung up a new record for Fredonia there was the third day's receipts which were pretty nearly all the profits, for the exploitation had been charged off entirely against the first two days."

"If there is anything to be added that can be of help to an exhibitor, I may say that the way to success is to figure on it and buy advertising as if money was already in."

¶ 1779 exhibitors expressed their preference in trade papers. And The News was so far in the lead that it equalled the votes for the next four papers combined.

Dutch Dance Rivoli Specialty This Week

INTRODUCTORY to a dancing specialty being given at the Rivoli theatre this week, under the title of "At the Mill," a short film strip showing a scene in Holland with a windmill of the Dutch type and a landscape in perspective is given place on the tag of the Rivoli Pictorial.

As the film runs out, the drapes of the proscenium opening are parted on a canvas in replica of the scene in the picture. At the left on the drop is a typical Holland windmill with the window practical. The landscape is beautifully colored and made more attractive by artistic lightings.

The male dancer, Paul Osgard, makes his entrance from the wings and after working single for a time, lifts his partner in the act, May Kitchen, from the window of the windmill where she has appeared as he began his dances.

They finish the act together, interpreting many Holland Dutch dances, accompanied by the orchestra.

Both dancers are attired in Dutch costumes and wear wooden shoes. The number is proving popular with Rivoli audiences.

Scantly Clad Girls Parade on Broadway

"Ballyhoo" advertising for motion picture theatres in New York is not so common an occurrence as in other cities, due principally to the fact that the police look with disfavor on the aspiring plans of press agents when it comes to using Father Knickerbocker's streets for any other purpose than what is legitimate, but once in the while some one does slip something by.

This "slip something by" is a correct term for a stunt which was pulled last week prior to the opening of "Up in Mary's Attic" at the Broadway theatre.

As a part of the program at the Broadway for the run of "Up in Mary's Attic" a "bathing girl" revue was planned. The company of "bathing girls" secured for this act was marshalled into a temporary dressing room in the neighborhood of the theatre and after attiring themselves in one-piece bathing suits paraded up Broadway to the theatre entrance while a gaping crowd, which increased by leaps and bounds as the march proceeded, inspected bare limbs and feminine forms.

The "bathing girls" were ostensibly en route to the roof of the Broadway theatre where a rehearsal for their act on the stage was held. This rehearsal also had an audience since a good many of the buildings about the location of the Broadway are skyscrapers and residents of the numberless offices in this vicinity were able to look down on the performance.

After the rehearsal the girls trooped back to their dressing rooms, using Broadway for their thoroughfare.

Schade Conducts Big Campaign for "Deep Purple"

FIELD exploitation man Holland of the Mayflower Corporation was detailed to assist Manager George Schade of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, with his campaign for "The Deep Purple," and between the two, many clever stunts were put over before the feature had completed its week run at the Schade.

Working on the principle that every knock is a box-office boost, they had a "Mrs. Watson of the New York Purity League" make a house-to-house canvass denouncing "The Deep Purple" in the blackest of terms and warning all who boasted of spotless morals to keep away. That started things moving. By the time "Mrs. Watson" had planted her sinister propaganda in all sections of the city, the entire populace was buzzing about "The Deep Purple."

A few days before the opening a campaign was launched to counteract the demonstrations of "Mrs. Watson" in her anti-"Deep Purple" crusade. A private showing was arranged for the clergy, physicians, civic workers and newspaper people, and from this audience was secured testimonials which disproved "Mrs. Watson's" statements. These testimonials were printed in the papers and given prominent advertising in other ways.

Later, on the opening date of the film at the Schade, Sandusky picked up one of its favorite papers, a special edition, of course, to look for the latest in murder mysteries or news from the presidential front. Instead it was confronted with a flaring four-column head reading: "W. J. Burns Lauds Screen as Way to Fight Crime. Slander of 'The Deep Purple' by Mrs. Watson of the New York Purity League Unjustified."

Then followed a reproduction of a press book story written by W. J. Burns, ex-Secret Service head and one of the country's leading experts on crime detection, in which he exposes the methods of criminals who specialize in the badger game and emphasizes the efficacy of the screen in putting the public on its guard by the publication of films like "The Deep Purple."

The remainder of the front page was devoted to a series of feature stories and shorts, a two-column scene cut and other advertising matter for the Schade theatre, with some text matter, made up the rest of the page.

When the smoke of battle had cleared away "The Deep Purple" meant considerably more to Sandusky than it did before the Schade's exploitation campaign was started and many an extra dollar had been coaxed into the theatre by the publicity employed.

¶ If your pictures, Mr. Advertiser, were preferred 4 to 1 would you ask a price as low as the other fellows? Then what about advertising rates?

Boston Scene of Great Campaign for Beach Picture

THE largest exploitation campaign ever launched in Boston took place during the recent showing of "The Silver Horde" at the Majestic theatre. Packed houses proved big results were obtained by the many effective stunts used in putting the picture over. One of the novel features was the biggest poster sign ever put on the front of a theatre in the city. The Majestic has the largest front area of any theatre in the Hub and this was entirely covered with cabin and snow scenes which proved a most effective magnet to passers by and a big patron-puller.

The "Yukon Buckboard" was another big feature, and with the sign inscribed "Traveled all the way from Kalvik River, Alaska, where scenes of Rex Beach's famous story, 'The Silver Horde,' were taken." The traveler was dressed in Eskimo costume and made a unique appearance during the hot summer days of the showing.

A most effective tie-up was with the Boston Traveler, that ran a special aeroplane exhibition at Revere Beach, Boston's most popular summer resort. During the flight 2,000 free passes to "The Silver Horde" were dropped to the thousands of outstretched hands on the beach below. Among these was a silver pass which entitled the finder to $50 in cash if presented at the Traveler office.

A stunt that caused a big sensation was a tie-up with a million-dollar shoe sale. A mysterious Alaskan artist occupied one of the spacious windows together with a beautiful model who was busily occupied trying on various styles of shoes, including Eskimo fashions used in the territory where "The Silver Horde" was taken.

Rothapfel Presenting Prologue with "Cupid—The Cowpuncher"

AS a prologue for "Cupid the Cow Puncher" at the Capitol this week, S. L. Rothapfel is introducing a quartette attired in Western togs which sings "Under the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," a song referred to a number of times in the picture's titles, while a rope artist impersonates Will Rogers with fancy lariat twirling.

A backing made up to represent the main title of the film, including the art background and the lettering of the announcement, is used with a transparent screen cut at the center in the shape of a big heart, screening the singers slightly. The prologue is lighted with spots, bringing the rope artist into prominence and illuminating the singers but dimly. The drapes close at the close of the song and the projection machines start with a strip of film used in presenting Rogers in an issue of the "Illiterate Digest," showing him twirling a lariat as has been his impersonator and talking to a number of cowboys. This bit of film fades into the film title of the picture.

During the showing a Japanese performance was arranged. Over 600 Japanese sailors from the warship Kasuga attended. Special Japanese films and Japanese music were part of the evening's entertainment.

A very effective prologue was arranged. Scenes, which were a reproduction of those in the locale of "The Silver Horde," special electrical effects, and high-class soloists were very well received. A special red-ink extra of the Boston American flooded the principal streets a day in advance of the showing.

Johnson Sends Out "Hospital" Invitations

For the showing of "The Love Expert" at the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, J. L. Johnston, publicity director for the Finkels and Ruben houses, obtained some excellent exploitation results with a little novelty in the shape of an announcement card printed in orthodox style and enclosed in a nice envelope, which read, "Miss Constance Talmadge, The Love Expert, announces the opening of a temporary hospital for broken hearts at the Strand theatre, etc." "Advice to the Lovelorn" and "Come and Bring the Ladies" was added at the bottom of the sheet.

Four thousand of the announcements were distributed in the hotels, apartments and homes of Minneapolis with gratifying results.

Novelty Poster Used by Omaha

For the showing of "Dangerous to Men" the Sun theatre, Omaha, used a very novel half sheet cut in circus style, much deeper than it was in width, on which in bold red type, mostly caps, was printed "She didn't mean to be wicked but just a little dangerous to men with that irresistible bundle of personality, Viola Dana," etc.

The unusual wording together with its gaudy flaming colors attracted more attention than a six-sheet of ordinary style would have done.

Passersby would catch sight of that "She didn't mean to be wicked" and halt in their tracks until they had read the whole bill. The Sun played the picture the week of July 4th, which made the red lettered poster doubly effective as advertising.

Get Novelty Into Your Exploitation

States Catherine Schliep, Manager of the Willard Theatre, Creston, Iowa

THE News is making every effort these days to obtain exploitation stories from the smaller cities, believing that it is the theatre in the little town which is most in need of new ideas to attract an adequate patronage for the rentals being paid.

It is therefore with unusual pleasure that we present an exploitation article by Miss Catherine Schliep, manager of the Willard theatre of Creston, Iowa, setting forth a concrete example of how she obtained results in her efforts to put over "Back to God's Country."

"An easy and effective method of exploitation which could be much more widely utilized with good effect to any theatre is the child's penchant for talking as a basis for a word-of-mouth advertising campaign. Children are easily interested in motion picture productions at small expense and they are the most persistent boosters for pictures that an exhibitor can acquire.

"There is no set rule that can be used for arousing their interest, for novelty is one of the things they demand. There are a great many productions, however, that have features which can be turned to the purpose of gaining the attention of juveniles with the result of passing on that interest to adults. In connection with the Willard showing of 'Back to God's Country' the dog in the play, known as 'Wapi, the Killer,' was selected by me as a means of getting the cooperation of the children in advertising the picture.

"I got plenty of lithographs showing 'Wapi,' and after they were posted, I had a small streamer pasted over them reading: 'Your dog will get you free admission to the Willard. Bring him to the theatre at 11 A. M. on the opening day.' The response was far greater than I ever expected. I really didn't know that there were so many dogs in Creston. Small boys, big boys and some girls brought canines of every size, shape and color, and for a time the house employees had their hands full to prevent the starting of a free-for-all dog fight.

"I formed them in nearly regular ranks and had the owners parade their pets through the downtown section of the city. The unique spectacle and the yappings of the dogs attracted more attention than any parade that has ever been held here. With the parade concluded I gave each of the participants a ticket to the theatre for the afternoon.

"In itself the parade was good advertising, but the bigger benefit came from the enjoyment the kiddies had in participating in it and also from the impressions of the picture they carried into their homes."

Majestic, Boston, Conducts Big Exploitation Campaign

On this page is shown the lobby decorations for "The Silver Horde" engagement at the Majestic theatre, Boston. It is said to be the most elaborate thing of its kind ever presented in the city.

Boston Laundry Cooperates in Putting Over "Suds"

THE showing of "Suds" at the Majestic theatre, Boston, was preceded by an exploitation campaign which set new standards for originality and thoroughness for the Bean City.

Kenneth McGaffey, Miss Pickford's personal representative, conducted the campaign, and in addition to the customary newspaper and other orthodox methods of exploitation, put in effect a number of unique tie-ups which did much to bring the feature to Boston's attention.

The cooperation of the largest laundry in Boston was secured and entirely without expense to the attraction, a large Pickford "Suds" announcement was carried on every shirt board and every paper band that circles the shirts coming from the laundry.

The huge fleet of laundry delivery wagons carried signs on their sides advertising the attraction. The wording which made an excellent tie-up for the laundry was as follows: "See Mary Pickford in her greatest success, 'Suds,' at the Majestic theatre. We are anxious for you to do so as you will better appreciate the sanitary, modern methods of the Pilgrim Laundry."

For newspaper advertising the laundry used a three-column space carrying a letter from Miss Pickford as Amanda Affick, the character in the picture, suggesting that she quit her job in "Suds" and go to work for the Pilgrim people. The advertisement was illustrated with a picture of Miss Pickford in one of the many comedy scenes of the picture.

As there is at present great competition between the several companies making mechanical washing machines and as these companies usually have display rooms in popular localities, it was an easy matter to secure the use of a great deal of window space for the comparison of the comedy washing methods of "Suds" and the highly efficient methods of the particular washing machine used.

For stores whose product had no direct tie-up with the attraction, a frame with four pictures of Miss Pickford was used, three being scenes from "Suds" and one being her latest photograph. Included in the frame was a small card announcing that she was to be seen in "Suds" at the Majestic.

Unusual Exploitation at Philadelphia

A street procession that would do credit to Barnum and Bailey's Circus paraded the streets of Philadelphia during the week of the run of "Down on the Farm," heralding the production in a manner that the City of Brotherly Love was entirely unaccustomed to, and something quite unusual in an exploitation idea for one of the country's first class cities.

Up and down the principal thoroughfares moved the procession, which consisted of a hay-wagon with performing clowns atop, cows, horses and chickens. The parade served a double purpose, for every time the wagon stopped the curious public was afforded an opportunity of purchasing tickets for the picture. It was quite a novel thing, different than Philadelphia was used to.

During the run of the picture many humorous letters were received by the management of the Opera House from children expressing their delight at the coming of the picture.

Isis Plays Up "Silver Horde"

Exploitation that not only brought to the fore the feature being shown but which played up the thought that inside the theatre it would be cooler, has recently been put over by the Isis theatre of Richmond, Va.

First, they gave a touch of Alaska and of Alaskan coolness to the lobby of the theatre by erecting around the box-office an imitation log cabin with drifts of snow along the edges of the logs. The box-office window was curtained to give it the appearance of a window in a small dwelling house.

Above the log cabin was spread a long net in either end of which were several salmon. The only other lobby decoration consisted of framed "Silver Horde" posters and stills.

The effect of coolness was imparted to their poster advertising by a special 48-sheet which they devised and posted on fences. At either end were a few scraggly pine trees with a snowy waste pictured in the foreground, while a range of snow-clad mountains loomed up in the background. The lettering was simple and so arranged as not to interfere with the snowy invitingness of the scene. Several hundred throwaways and a large quantity of heralds were used and they, as well as the newspaper advertising, bore down on the idea of Alaska snow and coolness.

Allen Exploitation Contains Much Merit

Toronto Theatre Stages Big Campaign for "Don't Ever Marry"

EXPLOITATION of "Don't Ever Marry" at the Allen theatre, Toronto, Canada, where a week's engagement has just been completed, contained many new wrinkles and much pep and ingenuity.

The campaign began a week before the opening date with the usual newspaper displays and in addition postcards on which were written such epigrams as "Remember, the hand that rocks the cradle also dries the babies' tears," "Every Ouija board in the country fairly shouts 'Don't Ever Marry,'" and "Do you put on the brakes while your husband goes at full speed?" were distributed in the lobby.

A down-town store where popular music is sold, known as "The Song Shop," loaned a portion of its front window in which a miniature church interior was constructed and a wedding procession of Kewpie dolls in costumes, with a card, "Take our advice—'Don't Ever Marry.'"

Another music store featured the song, "There's a Little Bit of Devil in Your Eyes" with a "Don't Ever Marry" card in their window. Both these shops were at strategic points where crowds waiting for street-cars at rush hours would not fail to see them.

The lobby of the theatre was also very attractive with cards designed by the management, as shown in the photograph. And the wit of the cards got more than a passing glance from the public.

A stencil of "Don't Ever Marry" was made and whitewashed on the sidewalks of the down-town streets at intervals of about fifty feet. This was done in "the wee, small hours" of the Saturday night before the initial showing. It is said that the citizens were considerably puzzled at the significance of the words.

The "big event," however, took place in the middle of the week of showing. The management of the Allen theatre offered a marriage license, wedding ring, and a handsome set of dinner dishes to any couple who would defy the "Don't Ever Marry" slogan. Two young couples took up the challenge and were married under a spot light on the stage of the Allen theatre on the Wednesday of the current week. Of course the house was crowded to see the "stunt." And in fact all through the week, which was very warm weather, the audiences in the Allen were much over the average. The ushers in the theatre were camouflaged to look like Wesley Barry and had freckles painted on, (those who hadn't these beauty marks naturally), and as Wesley is most popular in Toronto, this idea amused the patrons of the theatre considerably.

Mr. Cohen of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., together with Mr. Harrison of the Allen theatre were responsible for the planning and executing of this exploitation campaign.

Offers Reward for Stage Wedding

Miss Sylvia Grogg, manager of the Hippodrome theatre, Bakersfield, Calif., discovered the true value of exploitation when she offered one hundred dollars to the couple to be married on the Hippodrome stage.

This stunt was pulled during the showing of "Don't Ever Marry." The one condition was that the couple must first see the Neilan production.

C. F. Thomas, well known in Bakersfield, notified the theatre that he had persuaded Miss Agnes Bey to take up the offer with him. The Hippodrome advertised the fact that these two well-known residents were to be married at the Hippodrome and as a result the Hippodrome was packed with people attracted by curiosity to see the wedding as well as being drawn by the picture being shown.

Novelty Door Card Used by the New Astor

Quite an advertising novelty was originated by the New Astor Theatre of Minneapolis for the engagement of "Alias Jimmy Valentine" in a double-faced door card equipped with a string for hanging on the knob which read, "Lock Your Door. Bert Lytell is in town in 'Alias Jimmy Valentine,'" with the theatre date line following.

These cards were distributed about the city and got a lot of attention. The cards were about five by eight inches with red letters on white four-ply board.

The result of the stunt was a considerable increase in business, testifying to the effectiveness of the idea.

Hicks Holds Special Tin Can Matinee

Marion, Ill., Showman Puts Over Great Exploitation Stunt

"MARION, ILL.," might be good for a pun but since it is the home of the Family theatre and of Verner Hicks, live-wire showman, originator of a brand new exploitation idea, we forego our opportunity to attempt to be funny and relate the facts concerning Mr. Hick's latest stunt with our best compliments concerning it's novelty as an exploitation medium.

Mr. Hicks was to run the first episode of a serial on July 21st, and wanted to give the production a good start.

He racked his brain for something new, something which would cause a lot of talk about town, especially among the youngsters. Finally he evolved the big idea. He would have a special children's matinee at which the admission would be 5 tin cans and one cent for Uncle Sam. He told the children about his plan and waited for results. Did he get them? He did. The street in front of the Family looked like a

"Indian Cycle" Capitol Specialty

A S unit seven on the Capitol bill, a combination vocal, instrumental and film number is presented, under the title of "Indian Cycle."

The unit opens with the singing of "Hiawatha" by the Capitol ensemble. Division (b) is the rendition of "From the Land of the Sky Blue Waters" by the orchestra, during which a stage setting showing a woodland scene with a night sky in perspective, is unveiled. At the right an Indian wigwam is dimly seen and a campfire with kettle hanging from stick tripod is placed at center. An actor posing as an American Indian in characteristic costume stands with arms folded at center with a small red spot focused on his features.

The unit finishes with the "Indian Lament" as a violin solo and the projection of a scenic picture titled "In the Land of the Sky Blue Waters."

Benson Has New Business Getting Plan

N. A. Benson, manager of the Stadium theatre, Pittsburg, Pa., has a plan whereby exhibitors, showing a production for less than a week, may increase their audience at first night of mid-week showing and thus gain business by a word-of-mouth advertising. It consists of handing out with each ticket purchased, a coupon, five of which entitle the bearer to admission at the theatre Wednesday evening and half the regular price on Thursday. As a result the Stadium set a new record for its attendance in paid admissions for the Thursday, Friday and Saturday night and all the matinee shows, thus accomplishing bigger receipts and a greater following for the theatre.

Hyman Uses "Bride and Groom" for Sennett Feature

An exploitation campaign for "Married Life," that for novelty and effectiveness, considering the expense involved has not been equaled so far as we are able to relate, has just been carried to successful completion by Edward L. Hyman, manager of the Brooklyn Strand theatre.

The best part of Mr. Hyman's campaign is that it can be applied locally in almost any city with every chance for success. Mr. Hyman believes this stunt can be put over in great shape in a town of 100,000 people for a cost of eight dollars or less.

The campaign for "Married Life" started when a very pretty girl of the Mack Sennett type, and a lad of Ber. Turpin features were procured to dress in marriage garb. A very attractive bridal veil and outfit was provided for the girl and a typical Ben Turpin dress suit was arranged for the groom. Equipped with a suit case, a brown derby and a sign stating that "Married Life" was showing at the Brooklyn Strand, the two were sent out to tour the streets in the interests of the picture. The plan was for the driver to pretend that something had gone wrong with his car at prominent corners and while he made repairs for the "bride and groom" to stir up all the excitement they could.

The plan worked in great shape, a crowd collecting whenever the car stalled—by request.

Manager Hyman is one of the live wires in exploitation the New York districts possess and in his conduct of the Strand pulls many stunts that have brought extra dollars to the box office.

junkman's convention. One whole lumber wagon box full of cans was soon gathered and another was partially filled.

Some of the children in their haste shied their admittance ticket in the general direction of the carts and scrambled for a seat.

There were cans under the wagons and about the wagons and alongside the wagons. Big cans and little cans, bright new ones and rusty old fish bait tins were contributed. The Family ran two full shows and before night everybody in town knew about Hicks and his tin can show. Everybody had a good laugh, the children extolled the merits of the pictures they had seen and the grownups got interested and a general exodus in the direction of the theatre followed. Manager Hicks was short of seats for his night performances and everybody was pleased with the day's doings but the man who had to draw the tin cans away.

For the second episode Mr. Hicks was planning to hold another freak matinee. This time admission was to be a rat and one cent war tax. We don't think so much of this idea except that it will cause some more talk, which is good stuff, but the tin can idea gets our official o. k. Of course there was quite a story in the Marion papers in which the humorous side of the whole affair was played up.

One of the papers in telling Marion about the proposed "rat day" headed its article "Take a Rat to the Family," and stated that Manager Hicks had made a special condition relative to the rodents in that if the "rats are dead, they are not to be too dead," which shows what a wise man Hicks really is.

The only wonder is that some enterprising newspaper man didn't remember the old story of the automatic cat farm, whereby cats were to live off rats and the rats off the dead cats, etc.

Watch for a story about the rat show.

Trenton Theatre Pulls Good Stunt for Neilan Picture

The Trenton theatre, Lynchburg, Va., staged a knockout exploitation stunt last week when a seven-passenger automobile laden with a mother and four children, and with a high-chair, a walker, pacifiers, rattles, hot-water bags and nursing bottles hanging over the sides of the car, was driven through the streets of the city.

The mother was making a noble effort to drive the car and attend to the children at the same time. Two of the youngsters were nimble to the extreme and persisted in leaving the motor car at all dangerous traffic intersections. This forced the "mother" to abandon the car and chase the kids. With the aid of traffic cops the "family" was reunited at each crossing.

After a sufficiently large crowd had gathered the mother in desperation wiped her frenzied brow and hung out signs reading, "Don't Ever Marry." See the Trenton this week.

Educational Makes Big Showing on Broadway

THE prominent factor which Educational has become in the short subject field is evidenced by an inspection of the programs at the four principal Broadway theatres this week.

At the Rivoli three Educational releases, "The Castaways," a Bruce scenic; "An Overall Hero," a Chester comedy with the clever ape, "Hubert," playing the star role, and a short scenic strip under the title of "Holland's Rustic Life and Waterways," added to the tag of the Pictorial, are on the bill.

The Capitol is showing "Some More Samoa," an educational and scenic subject, and the Strand has "One Drop Was Enough," a Chester scenic, and "Duck Inn," a Mermaid comedy, while at the Rialto "A Seaside Siren," a Christie comedy, is on the program.

According to our recollections, this is a record for any producer or releasing corporation and probably will stand as such even with Educational for many a day.

Takes Advantage of Summer Concert Season

Because of the wide publicity afforded the now-famous municipal opera of St. Louis, which is given nightly for a period of six weeks during the summer at the Forest Park open-air auditorium, local picture houses have taken advantage of the opportunity in this way.

The overtures at each of the local first-run houses is the same as opera being performed that week at the municipal theatre. In this way patrons who are filled with thoughts of the grandeur and opulence of the public opera link up in their own minds the operatic performance with the picture shown at the film house. The result has been beneficial in many ways, not only from a viewpoint of the picture shows but also in the way of continuity afforded an educational feature.

Among the operas whose overtures have been given at the motion picture theatres are: "Robin Hood," "Babes in Toyland," "Tales of Hoffman," "The Gondoliers" and "Katrinka."

Why the Lyric, of Harlan Ia., Is a Success

Iowa Showman Tells How to Conduct Small Town Theatres

YOUNGCLAUS and Latta have made a success of the Lyric theatre, Harlan, Iowa, a town of the size where most exhibitors are feeling the pinch of high film rentals to such an extent that many are wondering how long they are to last with more going out than is coming in at the box-office.

In a recital of how the Lyric was engineered out of the rut of a no-profit house into a good investment is related by William N. Youngclaus, one of the proprietors. The article should prove an inspiration to every small-town manager, especially those who look ahead with slight prospects of legitimate profits on their investment and the amount of time and energy they are putting into their business.

Here is Mr. Youngclaus' own statement concerning the rejuvenation of the Lyric:

"Pride is the biggest single element an exhibitor must have in order to make a success of the game. If I hadn't had considerable and my partner as much, the Lyric would be nothing but a nickelodeon in a country village instead of being, as it really is, the best paying business in a thriving town of 2,800 inhabitants. By pride I mean having the nerve to refrain from putting on a show that you are not actually proud of.

"When we opened the Lyric we had figured on a probable patronage and had arranged our rentals and exploitation to leave both of us a slightly larger income than we could earn as a salary by working for some one else in Harlan. The pictures we could get for the rental allowance we had made were not of the class that we could be proud of. They did not draw well and the theatre did not get the really high class name that we had expected clean management would give it. I saw that both myself and my partner were losing prestige in the city and were going into the class of saloonkeepers and poolroom owners. Any small town knows that class, good enough fellows but in a rather low-class business.

"I got the feeling that I would like to bring in a few of the big pictures that I would like my own family to come and see and spend the remainder of the bankroll in getting them and fade out in a blaze of glory. I mentioned this feeling to my partner and was actually surprised to find out that he felt the same way about it. We went to the railroad station and got copies of all the metropolitan newspapers that are read in Harlan and sold ourselves from the amusement ads found in them, and our choice was Anita Stewart in "Old Kentucky." The rental shocked us and when the salesman took it for granted we wanted it for two days, neither of us had recovered our poise enough to contradict him.

"We found ourselves working with a vigor to put over that picture. We had something we were proud to bring to Harlan. Neither of us knew a great deal about exploitation but we borrowed a life-size papier-mache horse from the local harness shop and put it in front of the theater with a banner on each side. We put cut-outs in the lobby and then added some paintings done by a local artist. We bought more space in the local paper than the biggest mercantile advertiser and we plastered the rocks for miles around the

"In Old Kentucky" established a record for the theatre. It was the first time we had ever run the same production more than one day. Our receipts were equal to those for any previous week except when the theatre was first opened. It was the starting point of a real business. Since that time we haven't run a picture that we haven't been proud of and we have run them while they were still being exploited in the papers that come into Harlan. The Lyric has developed from "the picture hall" to "the theatre"; we have grown in standing in the community almost as rapidly as has our bank account.

"We now use nothing but our respect for ourselves as a guide to what we do at the theatre. Our exploitation satisfies our own pride, our pictures are such that we can truthfully recommend them to anyone in Harlan, and we have found that the money end takes care of itself. The theatre pays more than we had ever imagined it could because we had confined our possible patronage to the limits of Harlan and some of our most regular attendants come from ten miles in the country. One regular Saturday night family party drives a little over twenty-four miles into Harlan. In Harlan itself the theatre has become so respectable that whole families are regular patrons.

"One thing which every exhibitor should know, and a thing that my partner and myself have learned, is that a theatre can never keep patrons away by being too high class, but possible patronage is eliminated in every degree it descends in the scale toward low class."

Los Angeles Theatre Uses Original Script as Prologue Basis

Callicott Presents the Second Act of "Yes or No?" as Specialty

THE result obtained by Managing Director Jack Callicott, of the Kinema theatre in Los Angeles, in staging as a prologue to Norma Talmadge's "Yes or No?" a sequence of dialogical episodes from the second act of the original play with the two distinctly opposite settings holding the stage at the same time has been most satisfactory and somewhat of a novelty even at Gore Bros. & Sol Lesser's Grand Avenue house, where Callicott's prologue novelties have been a weekly occurrence.

In dividing the stage for the setting Callicott made good use of the width at his disposal, with the result seen in the accompanying flashlight.

The lighting of the set was unique. The short dialogue on each division was interrupted at a crucial moment by the turning out of the lights and a continuation of speech on the opposite set. Callicott banked 28 bright spots in the footlights, but departing from the manner of the original legitimate show, which utilized bright whites upon the setting, the Kinema presentation varied in that the rich home was lighted with appropriate richness in deep yellows, reds, and blues, while the tenement setting was made very effective with subdued green and grey-blue effects. The electrician had been properly rehearsed, much of the effectiveness of the act depending upon the careful watching of that department's cues.

The dialogue, written by Callicott, was excerpted from the original play and timed for five minutes. Exhibitors may find that more time utilized will spoil the effect, and the Kinema prologues have been noted to be short and to the point.

During the prologue the house was kept entirely dark. With the lights full up on one side of the double setting the characters and scene opposite could not be discovered, with a startling result upon audiences when the lights on the dark setting suddenly illumined the continuation of its action, and darkness then covering that space where a few seconds ago two characters were seen and heard. The final speech on each scene was "YES" by the Yes Girl, and "NO" by the No Girl, the picture sheet taking up the feature during the last spoken words, going directly into the picture.

Mr. Callicott's script for the prologue with speaking lines and business follows:

Scene: Rich Apartment

DERRECK: "You have every right to happiness, Margaret. Your husband means nothing to you. He doesn't appreciate you, and I love you."

MARGARET: "I want to be fair to him, Paul. I want to be frank with him and tell him. Then when I am free. . . ."

DERRECK: "I will give you a beautiful home, Margaret. I want to give you everything, luxuries, I want to . . . (Lights out)."

Scene: Tenement Home

LEACH (coming in hands Minnie a package. She opens it while he speaks): "I like to see a pretty woman wearin' pretty things, Minnie, and I thought perhaps you'd like to wear these?"

MINNIE: "If Jack don't mind I'll keep it, Leach. But I'll have to tell him first."

LEACH: "Some men is married to their wives and some is married to their jobs and forget the wives is doin' nothin' but mendin' and cookin'."

MINNIE: "That's a wife's job. I'm Jack's wife, and his cook and his mender."

LEACH: "Don't you ever get tired of this? Don't you want prettier things than this? I'd like to . . . (Lights out)."

Scene: Rich Apartment

DERRECK: "I want to make you happy, Margaret. You have a right to happiness, and I can see you are neglected. (Puts his arms around her.) Life is short. Who cares for the world's opinion?"

MARGARET: "If I only dared? Paul, I love luxury. Don't flatter me. This is serious. Do you really love me?"

DERRECK: "I do. You are beautiful. And you are unhappy. Why don't you forget it. Come with me. I'll lead you to happier days. Will you come with me?"

MARGARET: "If I do, you will never disappoint me? You will never leave me, Paul?"

DERRECK: "Never! Life and happiness are before you. Will you come with me?"

MARGARET: "Yes! I'll come. Yes, . . . (Lights out)."

Scene: Tenement Home

LEACH: "I know ye ain't happy, Min. I've watched you for days. Give me a chance. I'll give you everything to make you happy."

MINNIE: "Stop talkin' like that. You'd better get out before Jack comes home and throws you out."

LEACH (advances towards her): "No he won't. He don't care about you. He cares about his job. He forgets all about you after he's had his three meals."

MINNIE (backs away from him): "Leach, leave my house."

LEACH: "No you won't. (Starts to put his arm round her while she fights him off.) You gotta love me. I want you, and I'm goin' to have you. Come with me away from this place. I love you. Will you come, Min? Will you?"

MINNIE (struggling in his arms): "No! NO! NO!"

Lights go out while she cries.

F. P. Lasky Announces Cast Assignments

Marjorie Hume has been selected to play the feminine lead in "The Great Day," the first motion picture to be made in the new London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd. This young screen star has endeared herself to the British public and won the praise of the keenest of London's critics, says Famous Players.

Theodore Kosloff, Russian artist and premier male interpretative dancer, has been selected to play an important role in the cast of Cecil B. DeMille's next Paramount special. Mr. Kosloff will be remembered for his portrayal of Radinoff in the last Cecil B. DeMille special, "Why Change Your Wife?"

Goldwyn Star Making "Head Over Heels"

With Mabel Normand's comedy characterization in Goldwyn Pictures' version of George Ade's "The Slim Princess," scoring an emphatic success in the theatres throughout the country, and her next production, "What Happened to Rosa," ready for distribution in the first group of Goldwyn's fourth year releases, the comedienne is now engaged in the making of another picture at the Culver City studios. It is "Head Over Heels," an adaptation of Edgar Allen Woolf's play in which Mitzi Hajos was starred several seasons ago.

As in the past, Miss Normand is working under the direction of Victor Schertzinger.

Unique Lobby Display Aids Cannibal Film

La Salle theatre, Chicago, will hold "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" for an indefinite run. Probably one of the reasons for the unusual attendance enjoyed by the La Salle theatre this week is the lobby display which is new and unusual to say the least. This lobby consists of six panels representing six pages taken from Edward Lammle's diary, written at the time these pictures were taken.

Live News From The Producers

Webb Signs Long Contract

Young Director to Remain with Whitman Bennett for Three Years

WHITMAN Bennett, who is making a series of Lionel Barrymore productions and certain other special pictures for distribution through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, announces that he has signed a three years' contract with Kenneth S. Webb, as director. Apart from the contract with Mr. Barrymore, this is the first long-term contract entered into by Mr. Bennett, whose policy has been, since leaving the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to make only brief trial agreements in order to assure the absolute skill and efficiency of his permanent producing organization.

Mr. Webb has already completed the first of the Lionel Barrymore pictures, "The Master Mind," which was delivered to the First National about a month ago, and in the course of the next two or three weeks will have completed the second Barrymore production, "The Devil's Garden," founded on the novel of the same name by W. B. Maxwell.

Kenneth Webb, who, through his association with Mr. Bennett, must be now accepted into the ranks of the special producing directors, is one of the youngest men to attain such prominence in the business. Although Mr. Webb is only thirty-four years of age he has had a long association with the stage. Apart from his own theatrical work in the picture business, he was reared to a knowledge of things dramatic through contact with his uncle, the late Digby Bell, for many years one of the famous stars of the American stage.

Fox Shows New Melodrama

"While New York Sleeps" Shown to Trade in Vaudeville House

"WHILE New York Sleeps," the 1920 cinematodrama of life in the great metropolis, produced by Fox Film Corporation at heavy cost and utilizing in its scenic backgrounds various famous landmarks of the greatest city in the world, has at last been shown to the trade.

This is the first official publicity sent out by Fox in behalf of "While New York Sleeps," although it has been known that Charles J. Brabin, one of the most finished and skillful directors in the field, put in many weeks staging the picture.

Now, with the production completed and having been shown to the entire assembly of salesmen during the Fox convention some time ago, comes the initial trade screening.

"While New York Sleeps" was shown at B. F. Keith Palace theatre on Tuesday morning, July 27th, at ten o'clock. This is the third trade showing that Fox Film Corporation has held at this celebrated Broadway vaudeville theatre. The arrangement is made by the film producer through the special courtesy of E. F. Albee, and is noteworthy in the annals of the industry as the first time this popular theatre has been given over to motion picture screenings of this nature.

The film is to be advertised as an all-star production and after a glance at the names in the very small cast, one recognizes instantly that the term "all-star" is rightly used. The names are Estelle Taylor, Marc MacDermott, Earl Metcalf and Harry Sothorn.

William Hart to Start on New Picture Soon

William S. Hart will begin work on another Paramount production shortly, the title of which is still to be decided upon. He has recently completed a couple of productions for Paramount release, one of the most interesting of his latest pictures being included, "The Cradle of Courage" in which Hart has the role of a San Francisco policeman.

Dorothy Dalton Leaves to Work in Maine

Dorothy Dalton, star in Paramount pictures, accompanied by her director, Frank Reicher, and several members of the supporting cast, have left for York Beach, Me., to film a number of scenes in her new picture, "In Men's Eyes," adapted by Kathryn Stuart from E. Phillips Oppenheim's famous novel, "Jeanne of the Marshes." A large staff of electricians were taken with the company as there will be several exciting night scenes taken on the cliffs at York Beach and on the ocean.

Edward Small Issues Trade Announcement

The Edward Small Play Co., Inc., which has established headquarters at 1493 Broadway, New York City, announces that it will be its policy to buy, sell and lease books, plays and original stories for production on the legitimate stage and on the screen. It will also serve as the exclusive representative for many American and foreign authors, dramatists and composers, according to the statement just issued.

Story of Northwest to Be Released Soon

A new Universal production, a romance of the Northwest, called "Under Northern Lights," soon will be released. Jacques Jaccard wrote the story and also directed the picture, which centers around the activities of the Royal North West Mounted Police. Leonard Clapham, Virginia Faire and William Buckley play the leading roles.

'The Girl in the Web' Makes Star Favorite

Blanche Sweet steps another notch higher in her ascent to fame, with her newest Jesse D. Hampton production, "The Girl in the Web," which Pathe has scheduled for release on August 15th. This production follows "Simple Souls," in which Miss Sweet met with the greatest favor of her entire motion picture career.

New York exhibitors showed what they thought of the young star's capacity for attracting big audiences, by booking "The Girl in the Web" in record-breaking numbers, after its pre-release showing at B. S. Moss's Broadway Theatre, during the week of July 18th. And New York critics gave their opinions of Miss Sweet and the production in flattering terms.

Kansas Crops Yield Exhibitors Harvest

The fact that the greatest wheat crop in the history of Kansas will insure continued big business for motion pictures in that state, is emphasized by Harry Taylor, manager of the Kansas City Branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"Usually," said Mr. Taylor, "with the first warm days of Summer, a goodly percentage of Kansas theatres would close their doors. But business has been so unusually good this Spring that exhibitors haven't had time to think about Summer."

Aeroplane Delivery for Paramount Picture

Real service marked the delivery of films by aeroplane from the Kansas City Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to Stanley Chambers, manager of the Palace and Regent theatres, Wichita, July 4. The unusual method of film delivery was resorted to by Joseph M. Gilday, manager of the exchange, to meet a crisis; but by repeated telephone calls and other means of exploitation the near-mishap was averted to such an extent that when the films actually arrived a crowd of several hundred had gathered outside of each of the theatres.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Cooper Story to be Filmed

Maurice Tourneur Making "Last of the Mohicans" With Big Cast

AFTER keeping the title of his initial Associated Producers story secret over a month, Maurice Tourneur is to divulge its name. It is the well known American story "The Last of the Mohicans," by James Fenimore Cooper. This thrilling and beautiful tale of the pre-war days of 1757 has been published and re-published until every man, woman and child the world over is familiar with the absorbing tale in which Red Men and White mix blood in the northern part of the U. S.

Although it was announced that work would commence soon, as a matter of fact the play has been under way nearly four weeks. Now that Mr. Tourneur is actually making independent features for the Associated Producers, he can divulge the news. This popular subject will be finished soon, in time for early fall release, as over a third of the filming has already been done.

The cast is headed by Barbara Bedford, Mr. Tourneur's new "find" who plays "Cora Munro." Her young sister is by Lillian Hall, who will be an admirable "Alice." The whole cast has been carefully picked by the producer himself, and no time has been conserved in selecting or waiting for the best people to portray the parts.

Albert Roscoe, popular leading man and character actor, is in the role of "Uncas," the "last of the Mohicans." Jack McDowell handles the part of "Tamenund," while Nelson McDowell plays the eccentric "Gamut," the psalm-singer. Omar Whitehead will be "Hawkeye," the famous old scout, beloved by every American boy.

Metro Films Police Story

"Someone in the House" Reveals Methods of New York Detectives

JUST how far modern police methods have eclipsed the efforts of the detective of fiction will be shown on the screen for the first time with the completion of "Someone in the House," the big new all-star production now being filmed at Metro's west coast studios.

John Ince, directing the production, has torn a chapter from Former Commissioner Wood's rule book and has used all of the methods of crook trailing advocated by that New York police official in the unravelling of the crime mystery pictured in this production.

In the telling of the story every phase of New York life—from the mysterious haunts of the underworld to a luxurious summer home on Long Island—is faithfully reproduced. To accomplish this it has been necessary to bring shrubbery, flowers and even trees to the Metro studio grounds at Hollywood, California, from the east, in order to provide the background.

The great studio lots at Hollywood have been converted into a country place on which there is a spacious home that might have been lifted from its resting place on the shores of Long Island Sound. From the automobile approaches in the front to the walled-in formal garden in the rear, not a detail has been overlooked.

Roy Horniman Comedy Selected for Star

"The Education of Elizabeth," a comedy by Roy Horniman, has been selected by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as the next Paramount Picture for Billie Burke to follow "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," the Clyde Fitch play on which she is now at work. The scenario will be written by Elmer Harris; and R. William Neill, who has directed many Paramount Pictures, among them "Green Eyes," with Dorothy Dalton, and "The Career of Katherine Bush," will direct.

Spitz to Start Work on Feature Soon

After a year of studio management and building Eugene Spitz, owner of the Estee studios and independent producer, left this week for his annual tour of the Eastern summer resorts and the White Mountains. During the past year Mr. Spitz opened the Estee studio annex at 210 East 124th street. Madge Kennedy is working their now in a Goldwyn picture.

Just before leaving New York Mr. Spitz stated that he expected to begin work on a five-reel production in the latter part of August.

Big Press Book Issued for "Life's Twist"

The press and exploitation book which Robertson-Cole has just issued on "Life's Twist" is said to be the most elaborate to date on a Bessie Barriscale picture, and one which measures up fully to the very complete campaign books, which the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation has been publishing for the advancement of its productions.

The book is one which presents for the aid of the exhibitor the results of a deep study of the picture, from the exploitation, advertising and general publicity angles. The exhibitor who books "Life's Twist" will find every possible cooperative measure which will help him to make his house draw to the utmost.

Robert Warwick and Alma Rubens

A scene from "Occasionally Yours," a Robertson-Cole super-special, starring Lew Cody

"Occasionally Yours" Is Cody Picture

"Occasionally Yours," the third of the productions starring Lew Cody, which has been produced by Gasnier for release by Robertson-Cole, is said to have all the elements of romance and artistic beauty which made "The Beloved Cheater" and "The Butterfly Man" big drawing cards, and adds to these qualities a sophisticated humor and cleverness which is peculiarly fitted to this sort of picture and destined to give it instant success.

The new picture casts Mr. Cody who holds the unique place upon the screen of a handsome bachelor, as an artist, who plays with the hearts of women of all stations and degrees of beauty, without succumbing to the lure of any.

"Arabian Knight" Can Be Well Exploited

The unusual angles of the story of "An Arabian Knight," the Robertson-Cole picture, in which Sessue Hayakawa is shortly to be seen, are said to be taken full advantage of from an exploitation standpoint by the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation's advertising experts, who are now working on the press book for the production.

In the exploitation section is given also a very novel teaser campaign in which unusual phrases excite the interest of the reader and hold his interest up to the last ad which reveals the name of the picture and the house in which it is shown.

Hy Mayer's "Capitol Travelaugh" in Pathe News No. 67

Hy Mayer's "Capitol Travelaugh" will be introduced in the Pathe Review No. 67, scheduled for release on September 5. The first of his series of human screen documents is "The Great Melting Pot," a story which shows the distinguished caricaturist at his best.

FAMOUS Players-Lasky announces the release on July 25 of "The Fourteenth Man," starring Robert Warwick, and "The World and His Wife" with Alma Rubens. Announcement is also made of the release on August 1st of the Paramount-Carter DeHaven comedy, "Vacation Time," which is described by Famous Players as an especially seasonal release. The statement issued in connection with the feature productions follows:

"Robert Warwick, who appears in 'The Fourteenth Man,' has the most interesting story of his career and ably interprets the part on the screen enhancing the Beau Brummel society role he made popular in such previous productions—'Jack Straw' and 'The City of Masks.' Opposite him is Bebe Daniels in the role of Marjory Seaton, the young society girl with whom Warwick, in his character as a fugitive from the police, makes by chance acquaintance. The plot takes a sudden turn for the dramatic in the continued search of Scotland yard for the fugitive and his discovery of a plot by which the girl's relatives plan to rob her of an inheritance. In alternating roles as an adventurer, fugitive, and scion of blue blood the star brings the story to a climax by a series of adventures which include a regular prize fight in which he battles Norman Selby (Kid McCoy), the former champion, under Marquis of Queensberry rules.

"From Jose Echegeyay's famous play, Charles Frederic Nirdlinger wrote the original from which in turn the scenario of 'The World and His Wife' was prepared for the screen by Frances Marion. Robert Vignola directed, introducing for the first time in motion pictures his process to eliminate some subtlety and to speed up the action.

"The production was made with an all star cast, the featured player being Alma Rubens, who had a similar position in the sensational success, 'Humoresque.' Playing the leading role opposite her is Gaston Glass, who also played the leading male role in 'Humoresque.' Montagu Love plays the part of Don Julian, the husband."

Field Day a Huge Success

Oakland Exhibitors Boost First National; Many Players Attend

MAKING history by accomplishing an exhibitor undertaking of a scope said to be never before attempted and by putting on record the First Annual Associated First National Pictures, Inc., Field Day, E. L. Perry, manager of the T. & D. theatre, Oakland, California, brought a huge crowd to Oakland to mingle with the various stars, directors, and producers co-operating in the making of attractions for First National.

In the promoting of this event which held the attention of the Coast centered on Oakland on July 26th, Mr. Perry had the aid of the Turner & Dahlgren Exchange of San Francisco, which organization holds the franchise for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for that territory and which company also owns the T. & D. theatre of which Mr. Perry is manager.

Mayor Davies declared a legal holiday and practically all of the larger mercantile establishments closed shop for the day. On account of the fact that Mr. Perry is an active and enthusiastic member of the local Chamber of Commerce, that body officially endorsed Field Day and co-operated heartily to make it a success.

One of the stunts that created great attention was the fact that Wesley Barry, Aenes Ayres and Marjorie Daw, stars working for position Grounds in San Francisco and the Durant Flying Field in Oakland in order to arrive ahead of time and form the reception committee for the other stars.

Among the stars who participated in the events of the day were: Charles Ray, Anita Stewart, Ben Turpin, Phyllis Haver, Carter De Haven, George Beban, Agnes Ayres, Wesley Barry, Marjorie Daw, Annette Kellerman, Charles Murray, King Vidor, Florence Vidor, Bobby Vernon, Fay Tincher, Mary Thurman. Allan Dwan and Marshall Neilan were among the directors present.

Hodkinson Sales Chief Goes to Toronto

A. W. Smith, Jr., assistant sales-manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, left Thursday, July 21st, for Toronto, for a conference with the Canadian Exhibitors' Exchange, which is handling Hodkinson releases. According to Hodkinson, a vast number of new accounts have been brought in from the Canadian territory in the past few months, and Mr. Smith expressed the opinion that there will be 150 new accounts on the books by August.

New McLean Vehicle Is Announced

"—And So They Were Married" has been announced as the working title of the new production for the Paramount-Ince star, Douglas Maclean, upon which Joseph Franklin Poland is working at the Ince studio following a brief vacation.

Talmadge Picture to Have Fine Sets

Unusually beautiful and attractive sets will be a feature of Norma Talmadge's newest picture, "The Branded Woman," adapted from Oliver D. Bailey's well known play "Branded", by Anita Loos and Albert Parker who directed "The Branded Woman." These sets are the work of Hugo Ballin. Among the interiors are some beautiful sets for a private house in Paris and the Ritz Hotel, a New York Day Nursery, a prominent district attorney's office, a fashionable girls' school up the Hudson and some remarkable scenes in India.

Park Theatre of Boston Changes Policy

The Park theatre, one of the first houses in Boston to make a specialty of screen productions and for the greater part of the last decade prominent among the theatres catering more particularly to the admirers of the Paramount productions, has inaugurated a new summer policy—three pictures a week, screening the greatest known stars.

This is a temporary change that will continue throughout the summer months. The changes come every other day, and are a review of the best of screen productions ever presented to the public. It is understood that the Paramount interests represented in the management are responsible for the new change of policy.

Screen to Help Solve Servant Question

The Harry Levey Service Corp. has been retained by the Housewives' Economic League of New York to make a series of pictures whose purpose will be the training of "green" maids in the intricacies of housework. The pictures will illustrate sewing, sweeping, dusting, dish-washing and cooking. They will be released throughout the country and the League is arranging for school and club showings.

Christie to Arrange for Future Productions

CHARLES H. CHRISTIE, general manager and treasurer of the Christie Film Company, is due to arrive in New York this week from the Coast studios, coming East on a special mission to arrange details of several special Christie productions for the coming year.

According to Pat Dowling, Christie's assistant, who preceded the general manager's present tour of the country, Mr. Christie believes it necessary to correct an impression which has gained circulation in some quarters that Christie is undertaking special comedy productions in feature lengths. This is a mistake, inasmuch as all of Christie's special pictures which are to be greater than two reels in length, are not to be comedies but legitimate features of comedy-drama nature.

"We feel that if we are to undertake any special feature-length productions, they should be strictly feature productions rather than elaborated two-reel comedies stretched out to five-reel form," says Christie.

"Lahoma" Released by Pathe Aug. 29th

Edgar Lewis goes before the exhibitors of the country with a new production on August 29th, the date set by Pathe for the release of "Lahoma," which, in the lore of the border, is an abbreviation of Oklahoma. In "Lahoma" Mr. Lewis is said to have a picture which combines all the elements that made successes of "The Barrier," "The Great Divide," "Other Men's Shoes," "Sherry" and others of the Lewis brand.

Among the familiar faces seen in "Lahoma" are Russell Simpson, Jack Perrin, little Peaches Jackson, Louise Burnham, Wade Boteler, Lurline Lyons, S. B. Phillips, Will Jeffries, Yvette Mitchell, H. M. Lindley, and John Carlyle. The entire Lewis company was taken to the plains of Oklahoma for the filming.

Broadway Features "A Beach Promenade"

A feature of the bill at the Broadway and Hopkinson Company, called "A Beach Promenade." The picture was made with the new Stereospeed Camera, controlled by the Johnson and Hopkins Company.

The Stereospeed Camera has been developed to a point where it is able to take no less than 384 pictures a second. When these, in turn, are projected on the screen, they show the action so slowly that persons seem to float through the air.

"Big Happiness" Released Soon

Robertson-Cole Presents Dustin Farnum in a Super-Special

THE Robertson-Cole Company recommends its forthcoming release, "Big Happiness," starring Dustin Farnum, as a production possessing unusual assurances of big box-office returns. The following statement has been issued by the Robertson-Cole Company in connection with "Big Happiness" which is classed by the distributing company as a "super-special."

"It is the first of the pictures made for Robertson-Cole under the new understanding, which this distributing corporation has established with its stars, and which provides that they shall make not more than four productions a year. The first Farnum picture made for Robertson-Cole contains all the artistic, dramatic and commercial values which are to be essential factors in the entire future Robertson-Cole product. This, henceforth, is not to fall below the super-special standard."

"Aside from Farnum's established following, won through years of distinction on the legitimate stage in such outstanding successes as 'The Virginian,' 'The Ranger,' 'The Little Rebel' and 'The Squaw Man,' and his estimable career on the screen as delineator of forceful dramatic roles, there is the tremendous selling power of his versatile characterization in 'Big Happiness,' a characterization which shows him at the very peak of his power. 'Big Happiness' may be billed as Dustin Farnum's best work to date."

"Another important phase of the many selling angles which this forthcoming Robertson-Cole super-special presents is the all-star character of the supporting cast with which Mr. Farnum has surrounded himself. There is Kathryn Adams, for instance, a star in her own right and already known throughout the length and breadth of the country as one of the ablest and most convincing leading women of the screen.

"Who does not remember Joseph J. Dowling as the well loved patriarch in 'The Miracle Man?' Dowling was one of these personally selected by Mr. Farnum to play with him in 'Big Happiness.' Then, too, there is Frederick Malatesta, acknowledged to be the most polished villain of the screen."

"Laid in two hemispheres and showing gripping action in five countries, 'Big Happiness' afforded extraordinary opportunity for the display of novel and attractive settings. Prominent among the most important is a French chateau which looks as though it might have been transported bodily from France, so perfect is its architecture.

"There are numerous shots of great power and beauty showing British drawing-room interiors. One which is sure to interest and charm and at the same time give the opportunity for some excellent exploitation is that which shows Dustin and Miss Adams in the Swiss Alps."

"When one considers that there are dozens of such sets the exhibitor can gather a comprehensive idea of the money and the care spent in making 'Big Happiness' a really big picture from the box office standpoint."

Brunton Studio Has Birthday

Productions Average Two a Week in Two Years

AT a celebration of the completion of the second year's operation of the Robert Brunton studios recently a review of the activities was given which shows the stupendous growth of this enterprise. During the two years of its existence 209 productions have been made at this big plant or an average of two completed each week.

At the time this report was made to the Board of Directors and heads of departments who were entertained at the dinner given by Robert Brunton, the guiding genius of the institution, the popularity of the studios with producers who do not have their own plants was attributed to the speed of production made possible by the Brunton service. One speaker made the statement that in his mind two innovations of the film industry had been made that meant a greater saving of time. One was the electric lamp which insures interior production regardless of climatic conditions and the other was the Robert Brunton service.

The magnitude of the plant and the completeness of its facilities are important preventions of delay. The studios cover fifty-five acres of land, exclusive of a 500 acre location ranch. There are six large stages, a great mill, equipped with the latest machinery devices; a $300,000 electrical plant, maintaining a staff of fifty men; laboratories, fireproof property and administration buildings; ornamental platers shops, iron foundries and spacious dressing room buildings. Over six hundred carpenters, architects, painters, decorators, electricians, draftsmen, photographers, prop men, stenographers, scenarioists, title writers and film editors are regularly employed.

There is no need for leaving the Brunton studios to film lake or river scenes. A huge water tank, properly camouflaged by shrubbery, trees or docks, prevents this delay.

Likewise, expeditions to parks or private estates for garden exteriors are unnecessary. The studio gardens, beautifully laid out in Italian style by one of California's foremost landscape artists, serve this purpose.

If a company renting space at the studios wants a thousand feet of film negative a call is sent to the stores department, where everything from nails to dynamite is handled, and delivery is made within a few minutes. If four or five autos are wanted for a location trip the transportation department, with a string of thirty machines, is on hand to serve. Should a company be in need of a continuity quickly it finds the scenario department just around the corner and ready to oblige. If an exacting director demands Chinese jade instead of old porcelain for a drawing room set the property department, with its immense stores of furniture, bric-a-brac and what-not, sends him jade at once. In short, there is nothing vitally essential to film production that cannot be obtained from the various studio departments in a surprising minimum of time.

Metro Features Help Launch New Policy

When, recently, Managing Director Jack Callicott, of the Kinema theatre in Los Angeles, decided upon a change in the policy of his house—offering his new week's program beginning with Saturday instead of Sunday—he selected two Metro productions in succession to stand the strain of this innovation.

On the week that the opening day was moved forward from Sunday to Saturday Managing Director Callicott played "Burning Daylight," the Metro release produced by C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., with an all-star cast including Mitchell Lewis, Helen Ferguson and William V. Mong. He came right back to a Metro picture the second week, showing "The Cheater," with May Allison in the stellar role of this screen version of Henry Jones's great play.

"Under Crimson Skies" Fills Utah Theatre

"Under Crimson Skies," the Universal-Jewel picture starring Elmo Lincoln, and which is said to contain one of the most realistic fistic battles ever screened, almost crowded a double-header baseball game off the boards, when it opened recently in Salt Lake City, according to word that has been received at the Universal home office.

The picture, which is a sea tale of strong characters and stirring incidents, culminating in a South American revolution, also had other strong rivals when it opened in the Kinema theatre, Salt Lake, but the picture is reported to have broken records on the opening matinee.

Play by John Colton to Be Produced by Brady

The entire scenario staff at Universal City gathered at the home of John Colton, Monday night to extend congratulations and good wishes on the eve of his departure for New York.

William A. Brady has accepted a play from Mr. Colton's pen and will produce it with Miss Alice Brady as the star. Colton comes East to discuss details of production with Mr. Brady, preparatory to the staging of the play.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

"Dinty" Well Under Way Neilan Completes Exteriors in Frisco; Very Busy Week Reported

MARSHALL NEILAN and his company have just returned to the Hollywood studios after a week in San Francisco, where exteriors for the fourth picture for First National release, were staged. This production features Wesley Barry, the freckled faced youngster in the little role of "Dinty," a heart interest story of the slums, and follows in order of release, "Go and Get It," the newspaper story by Marion Fairfax.

By coincidence, Mr. Neilan secured a thrilling background to some scenes staged at the river front of Frisco, when he filmed the steamship Great Northern as it grounded in the shallow waters of the bay. The accident happened about seven o'clock in the morning just as the motion picture troupe was setting up for its early morning scenes at the docks. Half a mile out in the bay the steamer issued its distress signals, tugs and other boats came to its rescue and took off the soldiers on board ready to sail for foreign service. Other scenes of rescue were obtained by photographers Charles Rosher and David Kesson of the Neilan organization and will be embodied in the scenario of "Dinty."

In San Francisco, states First National, Mayor Rolph extended every courtesy to facilitate the work of the motion picture troupe. This resulted in obtaining some unusual scenes about the city which have never before been photographed.

Among those comprising the Neilan organization in Frisco were four boys and their mothers, each youngster of a different type and race; Wesley Barry, the typical Yank, Walter Chung, a Chinese youngster; Aaron Mitchell, a little dorkie; and Newton Hall, a son of Ireland. Among the members of the Neilan organization in San Francisco were Marjorie Daw, Pat O'Malley, Colleen Moore, Tom Held, George Dromgold, Charles Rosher, David Kesson, Foster Leonard, Charles Smith and Pete Smith.

Upon his return to the Hollywood studios, Marshall Neilan found several telegrams of congratulations from San Francisco newspapermen who had seen initial showings of "Go and Get It," being distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Martin Praises Americans English Publicist, in British Trade Press, Tells Impressions

The highest praise is given American showmanship by Frederick Martin, manager of publicity for the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., distributors of Paramount Artcraft pictures in the United Kingdom, in a series of articles he has contributed to British trade publications on his return to London. As a result of his investigations made during his six weeks' stay in the United States, Mr. Martin is recommending to British exhibitors the adoption of American methods of presentation of pictures. Special praise is given by Mr. Martin to the manner in which pictures are presented in the Criterion, Rivoli, and Rialto theatres.

In Mr. Martin's latest article, published in "Bioscope," he said that "it is a mistake to regard 'presentation' as the only great novelty of the modern American cinema. It is merely the finishing touch in an entertainment that is thoughtfully organized from beginning to end.

"There are, of course, many small 'shanty' shows throughout the country, but the latest theatres in the great centres are a revelation. In every feature of the building, the decoration and the entertainment, you see the effect of brainwork.

"Such theatres as the Rivoli, and the Rialto, were erected with the deliberate intention of attracting a new class of patron. They have succeeded beyond all expectations and now rank among the smartest show places in New York. Wonderful orchestras of fifty or more performers are drawing patrons directly for the music which is blended with the pictures to form a perfect symphony of sound and scene."

Broadwest Film Seek Screen Stories

Walter West, of the Broadwest Film Company, of London, announces that he is willing to pay $500 for an original film story which can be used by his company. Mr. West states that as many as 500 manuscripts a week pass through his scenario department, but that not two in a thousand are suitable for his requirements.

Universal Creates New Sales District

An important re-arrangement in the alignment of its sales force has just been made by Universal, it was recently announced by H. M. Beriman, general manager of exchanges. A new sales district has been created, embracing a large section of the Atlantic seaboard, with headquarters in Philadelphia.

A new sales district, to be known as the Atlantic Division will include such important centers as Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Wilkes-Barre and Richmond. Parts of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Delaware, and Virginia, are also included in the new territory. Later it is expected to include the Carolinas.

The new district will be supervised by E. J. Smith, as District Sales Manager.

Rothacker Film Will Improve State Roads

George Gale, Rothacker representative in St. Louis, is now directing a picture which the Missouri State Highway Commission will use in coming elections on road improvement bonds.

It is believed that a Rothacker film recently won an election on $15,000,000 bonds for additional Detroit street railways. The success of this electioneering film influenced the Missouri Highway Commission to harness the pulling power of the picture screen to the good roads movement in the "show me state."

Dr. Pauline Consults with E. W. Hammonds

Dr. J. Robert Pauline, the hypnotist who is known for his appearance in vaudeville and at the head of his own company, and who is starred in "The Mystery Mind," the Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey serial, produced by Supreme Pictures and to be released through Educational Exchanges, spent this week in New York consulting with E. W. Hammonds, vice president and general manager of Educational and heads of various departments, concerning the picture.

Dr. Pauline has arranged to give a considerable portion of his time for the next few months toward co-operating with the publicity department of Educational in supplying a series of unusual articles on hypnotism to leading newspapers.

Alice Brady Start on New Realart Pictuers

Alice Brady started work last week in New York under the direction of Herbert Blache on "The New York Idea," an adaptation of Langdon Mitchell's satirical comedy of metropolitan marriage. Miss Brady took a complete rest and vacation of more than a month following the completion of "A Dark Lantern," her current Realart production and is devoting her entire time to work on "The New York Idea." Mary Murillo wrote the adaptation of the story for Realart.

Mr. Blache has selected an excellent cast to support Miss Brady. Lowell Sherman will play the lead.

Secret Service Chief Praises Dwan Story

Allan Dwan's "A Splendid Hazard," presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation recently received one of the most unique tributes ever paid a motion picture by a personage of National prominence, when W. H. Moran, Chief of the Government Secret Service Bureau, called it the most accurate portrayal of secret service work he had ever witnessed. In placing his stamp of approval upon the Dwan First National attraction adapted from Harold McGrath's novel of the same name, Chief Moran held the general run of photoplays responsible for giving the public a false impression.

"Of all the delusions under which the public labors," said the Secret Service head, "none is more strange than its conception of the secret service man."

Realart Finishes Two

The middle of July marked the completion of two important Realart productions for the coming season at the West Coast Studios. William D. Taylor's super-special production, "The Furnace," closed on July 16, while camera work on the J. H. Wanda Hawley feature, "Her Beloved Villain" (working title), as finished on the 17th.

Hudson Assistant to Williams

First National Accords Honor to Assistant to Publicity Director

EARL J. HUDSON, who for more than two years has been the assistant of C. L. Yearsley, director of publicity for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, in addition to serving First National in other capacities, became assistant to J. D. Williams, manager of the exhibitor co-operative organization, on July 26th, according to an announcement from the executive offices of Associated First National Pictures, Inc. Mr. Hudson will be succeeded in his publicity duties by Horace C. Judge, who resigns his position with Universal.

In the capacity of Editor of Contact, the official organ of First National Exhibitor Circuit, Mr. Hudson has been in touch with the various branch offices of the Circuit and has wielded influence in bringing about the policy of interchange methods.

His publicity feats date back to a period before his connection with First National. Among the list of his accomplishments is the syndicating of a series of articles by John Emerson and Anita Loos in two hundred newspapers in the United States. With a "scenarios-criticized" angle on this stunt he caused thousands of letters to be addressed to Emerson and Loos during the eight months covered by their series of articles.

One of the most interesting trade-paper investigations was accomplished as a result of Mr. Hudson's idea of canvassing the entire exhibitor field in an effort to discover whether exhibitors desired the various motion picture companies to advertise in all amusement publications or whether it was the general wish that advertising be confined to the five recognized mediums of motion picture trade news.

As a strong advocate of exploitation material as the most helpful and logical news matter for exhibitors, Mr. Hudson is well known in publicity circles. Contending that readability of publicity matter is controlled by the amount of instruction it bears for exhibitors, he encouraged stories showing instances of showmanship as publicity.

Mr. Hudson's career in the motion picture business virtually began with his early days in Elgin, Ill. From cub-reporter on local newspapers he migrated to Chicago where he spent several years working for various newspapers of that city. He then accepted an offer from the Universal Company in the publicity department of that organization.

In his ability to judge picture values, box-office possibilities and assimilate them with relation to local conditions, Mr. Hudson is believed to be well fitted. His early years were spent in travels over almost every part of the country. With an acknowledged personal acquaintance with many exhibitors his friendship extends in all directions in film circles.

Mr. Judge comes to First National after a most enviable record as a publicity and advertising man. A graduate of the London, England, University, he has been associated with the various enterprises of Charles Dillingham and in the ca-capacity of press representative has managed and published the activities of such stars as Fritz Schaff, Elsie Janis, Frank Daniels and others. His experience as a newspaper advance man includes work for practically all of the stars of Klaw & Erlanger and George C. Tyler. As dramatic critic for the Montreal Gazette, Mr. Judge attracted considerable attention and was generally conceded to be one of the cleverest writers in that part of the country.

As an associate manager with the All Star Red Cross Company which included George M. Cohan, Mrs. Fiske, Laurette Taylor, Julia Arthur, Chauncey Olcott, H. B. Warner and James T. Powers and other stars in "Out There," Mr. Judge guided this company in a three-weeks whirlwind tour that raised $750,000 for the Red Cross.

Mr. Judge is well known as a director of publicity and combines within his experience a wide knowledge of the advertising field. He resigned as director of publicity and advertising for United Pictures theatres to join Universal.

High Hopes for "Penalty"

Goldwyn Believes Popular Novel Will Prove Box Office Picture

FOR dramatic power and intensity, with an undertone of the weird and the grotesque, the picturization of Gouverneur Morris' most famous and popular novel, "The Penalty," excels all other films of its type is the belief of Samuel Goldwyn and of Rex Beach, who have included a screen version of the novel in their Eminent Authors' Productions. The story has the haunting, vivid creepiness which Mr. Morris knows so well how to embody in his fiction.

More perhaps than any other American novelist, Mr. Morris seems to see his characters in a series of vivid actions and complications which are rapidly transferable to the screen without losing any of their value. He has the "picture" imagination which is the "making" of any artist dealing in the product of his imagination and which is indispensable to the writer for the screen. The scenarioist found in Mr. Morris' novel a series of powerfully conceived situations and actions merely waiting to be translated into "script" language. All that was necessary for him to do was to cast the story in connected form for screen production and supply the connecting links to make it run smoothly.

The quality of "pictures" imagination revealed in "The Penalty" as a novel forms the basis for the belief of the producers in the powerful effect the picturization will have upon the minds, imaginations and emotions of spectators and hence of its enormous box office pull.

"The Wonder Man" Scores

Robertson-Cole Hits Second-Runs;
Exhibitors Report Great Success

REPORTS of big business and crowded houses, despite the heat, continue to flow in to Robertson-Cole in the wake of the country-wide showing of "The Wonder Man," starring Georges Carpentier, Europe's pugilistic champion.

Telegrams and letters which are reaching A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, show that "The Wonder Man" comes in the nature of a boon to exhibitors who are "stumped" for a compelling summer attraction.

Having nearly completed playing the first run houses, "The Wonder Man" is now swinging into the second-runs with a stride which is widening and speeding up day by day, says Robertson-Cole. Most of the communications emphasize the fact that "The Wonder Man" is winning because its star is an unique figure, a man whose personality, record and ability cannot be elsewhere duplicated, and because this man, in addition to his pugilistic and war record is an actor.

Of "The Wonder Man," Will D. Harris, who operates the Hartman and Grand theatres, at Columbus, Ohio, wired:

"Notwithstanding rainy, muggy hot weather Georges Carpentier in 'The Wonder Man' drew capacity business in three out of five shows Sunday, July Eleventh, at the Grand theatre. Had I played this picture in season it would have equalled any of the big ones and I have played them all. This is one of the feature pictures that was big enough to carry itself without added attraction. Congratulations."

Michael J. Duffy, manager of Proctor's Twenty-third Street theatre, New York City, sent this letter:

"Proctor's 23rd Street theatre ran Georges Carpentier in 'The Wonder Man,' July 12, 13, 14, three extremely warm days, and we were more than pleased not only with the picture, but our business was exceptionally good."

Metro Buys Popular Story

"Barber John's Boy," by Ben Ames Williams, Appeared in Munsey's

METRO Pictures Corporation announces the purchase for production on the screen of "Barber John's Boy," a novel by Ben Ames Williams that recently was published serially in Munsey's Magazine. The acquisition of Mr. Williams' novel is in line with Metro's policy of obtaining the best screen material available in the fiction market, as exemplified by its recently announced purchases of books and plays that passed the half-million mark. In acquiring the latest work of Ben Ames Williams, Metro feels that not only has it added the name of another eminent author to its roster of celebrated novelists and dramatists but has obtained new material that is peculiarly adaptable and valuable for screen presentation.

"Barber John's Boy" is described as a novel of great power. It presents a network of circumstantial evidence on the strength of which two men are accused of a crime that neither committed. Tense in its dramatic situations and bewildering in the many twists and turns of its complicated and absorbing plot, the story is said to offer unusual opportunities for screen production. Plans for the presentation of the novel on the silver-sheet have not as yet been announced by Metro.

Read Effects Big Tie-Ups

Exploitation Campaign for Louise Glaum Releases Extended Abroad

REPORTS of the progress of the publicity and exploitation campaign, instituted by J. Parker Read, Jr., in behalf of the Louise Glaum releases, are contained in a statement recently received from the Read production headquarters on the West Coast. The more salient points given in the Read statement concerning the character of this international drive are submitted as follows:

"A scenario contest, the scope of which is probably unequalled by any other similar project, has been launched under the co-operative sponsorship of J. Parker Read, Jr., The Los Angeles Evening Express, The Newspaper Enterprise Association, and the London Daily Mail. The Evening Express in Los Angeles is one of the most influential organs in California, and the reach of the N. E. A. is expressed in a service religiously subscribed to by more than 300 newspapers of excellent circulation. The Daily Mail of London is known, of course, as the newspaper with the largest circulation in the world.

"The contest is based on a novelization of Louise Glaum's latest starring vehicle, "Sex", released by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and made by Mr. Read; and the prizes aggregate $5,000. Filmen, the Swedish magazine; Japanese journals, South American newspapers and magazines of high repute have launched their respective campaigns.

"Love Madness", a forthcoming Louise Glaum release, also is published in connection with the contest which has the benefit of a central judicial committee, including the mayor of Los Angeles, a member of the State Board of Education and Louis Joseph Vance, the noted novelist and screen writer-producer.

"The tie-up effected with the Brewster publications — Shadowland, Motion Picture Magazine and Motion Picture Classic and arrangements in co-operation with Eugene V. Brewster for the publication through Educational Films of a monthly 'offstage screen subject', dealing with prominent motion picture personalities, to be made 'under the personal supervision of Louise Glaum', is another big item in the popularization scheme."

Ford Plans Film Library

To Provide Educational Subjects for Class Rooms Throughout World

THE Ford Motion Picture Laboratory is engaged in the production of an educational film library, to be known as the "Ford Educational Library," that will provide for the public and private schools and colleges of every nation in the civilized world films distinctly for class-room use. By placing at the service of every educational institution a product based on the principles of sound pedagogics and edited by leading professors of the universities of the United States and competent authorities in screen instruction in the schools Henry Ford not only will supply school needs but will fulfill the ambitions of the pioneer professors and instructors.

On September 1, the first issue of this Library will be available. The subjects will be specially prepared for use in any class-room by members of the headquarter profession and the units as arranged will be distributed under a plan that will fully meet all conditions in each school. The Library will further offer to every university and college in the United States facilities for the production by their own professors, of films for world-wide school use in any quantities that may be necessary to meet the constantly increasing demand.

Doctor S. S. Marquis, former dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, Mich., who has represented Henry Ford for a number of years, will have general charge of the Ford Educational Library. Dr. W. H. Dudley, Chief of the Bureau of Visual Instruction, University of Wisconsin; Professors Charles Roch, Visual Instruction Service, Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts; J. V. Ankeney, Visual Presentation Department, University of Minnesota, and W. M. Gregory, Director of Visual Instruction, Cleveland, Ohio, Normal Training School, are associated and actively engaged in the editing and final review and approval of the films. Distribution and general subscription arrangements will be supervised by Messrs. Fitzpatrick & McElroy, 202 So. State street, Chicago.

New Comedy Company Formed in London

Announcement is made of the formation of a new British producing company under the title of The Minerva Film Company, Ltd., with headquarters at 110 Victoria street, S. W. 1. The newly formed company will specialize in producing short comedy films "that an ordinarily intelligent person will appreciate rather than just accept for lack of something better," says the announcement.

Adrian Brunel has been made director of production and scenario editor. He will have associated with him Aubrey Smith, Leslie Howard, A. A. Milne and Nigel Playfair, all of whom are well known in the English theatrical field. "Twice Two," one of a series of scenarios by A. A. Milne, is now under production. Mrs. Hayden Coffin, Barbara Macfarlane, Sir Simeon Stuart and Ivan Samson are included in the cast of this comedy.

Cohan Classic Will Be Spread Broadcast

One of the valuable "pulling" qualifications of Charles Ray's picture version of George Cohan's stage success, "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway", as seen by the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, is that thousands who have never seen the stage-play during its road tours but have been delighted with its attractive melodies and humorous dialogues which have been spread broadcast since their publication, will now be enabled to see the production on the screen.

Then, adds the Kane statement, there is the additional feature of seeing a popular star in a play that has won an immense popularity among the theatre-going public. In interpreting the part of "Kid" Burns, says the Kane statement, Mr. Ray retains the inimitable character-drawing of the author. It is Ray's "humaness" that has won for him his present popularity, and it was "Kid" Burns's "humaness" that won the hearts of the admirers of the Cohan success.

Pathe Renews Two Contracts

EMINENTLY satisfied with the treatment accorded their product during last year, W. W. Hodkinson, Inc., and the American Film Company have renewed their contracts with Pathe Exchange, Inc., for the distribution of their pictures during the forthcoming year. Contracts were signed by W. W. Hodkinson, for the organization bearing his name; by Samuel Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, and by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Following Mr. Brunet's departure for France, Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges of Pathe, held conferences with representatives of American and Hodkinson and settled upon arrangements for their distribution during the coming year.

In renewing their distribution agreement with Pathe, the Hodkinson and American organizations pledged themselves to continue releasing pictures of even higher calibre than they issued during the last year.

To Continue Hodkinson and American Film Distribution

The efficiency of the Pathe Exchange system is attested by the fact that complaints about the shipment of films and other details in the physical distribution of reels were virtually eliminated so far as American and Hodkinson were concerned. Elmer R. Pearson, director of exchanges of Pathe, in discussing the renewal of the contracts, expressed the opinion that the same cordial relations between these organizations and Pathe will continue to mutual advantage.

"Greater distributing facilities will be accorded the American and Hodkinson companies, during the 1920-1921 season," said Mr. Pearson, for Pathe will continue to broaden its exchange system as it did during the last year. We now have thirty-two exchanges and two sub-exchanges, which come pretty near faultlessly covering the entire United States. But we contemplate additions to this chain of exchanges as the demand upon our facilities increases. We aim to obtain the greatest efficiency in distribution, and will leave nothing undone to maintain our present status with the increasing demands we know will be made upon us this Fall."

Universal Has New Sales Plan

A FAR-REACHING method of combined film selling and picture exploitation was arrived at by Universal officials in a pow-wow recently held in Chicago, and which was attended by a score or more of sales managers, exploitation specialists and salesmen, headed by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for the Universal sales organization.

A new departure in the presentation of photoplays to Exhibitors was inaugurated and will be instigated with "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" the Universal feature filmed in the wilds of New Guinea. Henceforth, projection-room presentation will be accompanied by elaborate exploitation, including lobby displays. In this way, the exhibitor will be able to see various ways of exploiting the picture, at the time he books it.

Arrangements have been completed to make the initial exchange showings of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" a model of exploitation suggestion. Among the added displays available for the use of the exhibitor on this feature are six oil paintings 20 by 68 inches, of the most unusual type of Kia Kia cannibals, and four attractive signs, also 20 by 68. There also are display cards bearing excerpts from the diary of William F. Alder and Edward Laemmle, the two cameramen—who were shipwrecked among the Kia Kias.

It is planned to put in the hands of each exhibitor who will use it, a lobby display exactly similar to those used during the initial showing of the picture, in the Astor theatre, New York City, and duplicated at the La Salle theatre, Chicago. These lobby displays attracted great attention and resulted in greatly enhanced box office receipts.

The assembled Universal sales managers saw a pre-view of the Cannibal picture while in Chicago. All were enthusiastic over it and united in saying that the country is ripe for a screen novelty such as the two Universal camera-men brought back from the South Seas. Among those present at the conference were Art Schmidt, and Louis Baum, district managers for Universal exchanges in the middle west, Cleve Adams, manager of the Cincinnati exchange, Ralph Abbott of Indianapolis, W. D. Ward of Detroit, M. A. Chace, of Buffalo, J. H. Calvert of Kansas City, H. F. Lefholtz of Omaha, I. Gittleman of Minneapolis, Edgar B. Haines of Des Moines, George Levine of Milwaukee, I. L. Leserman of Chicago, Barney Rosenthal of St. Louis, as well as the exploitation men of the various exchanges.

Upon returning from Chicago, Mr. Berman spoke with great enthusiasm of the success of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" at the La Salle theatre in that city.

"I now am convinced," he said, "that the New Guinea picture will be one of the film sensations of the year. It promises, in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Boston and elsewhere, to duplicate its successes in New York and Chicago. I expect the picture to rival our phenomenal success with 'The Heart of Humanity'."

Bessie Love's Picture in Great Demand

Announcement in the trade journals of the series of pictures to be shown by Bessie Love is said to have brought upon Andrew J. Cullaghan Productions, Inc., a great number of demands for distribution and exhibition rights. These have come not only from every section of the United States, it is stated, but also from many points abroad.

Miss Love and her mother have just returned to their home near Hollywood, after passing four weeks in New York. Having completed the production of "The Midlanders", Charles Temney Jackson's novel, just before coming East, she will be working on Charles Dickson's "The Old Curiosity Shop" soon.

Eva Novak to Star in a Universal Feature

Eva Novak has been signed by Universal to star in a series of comedy dramas. Miss Novak is a younger sister of Jane Novak.

For two years she played ingenues and leads in popular comedies; then she was engaged by Vitaphone. Tom Mix next engaged her as leading lady for three features. She next appeared with House Peters in "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives". Then followed her appearance in "Up In Mary's Attic", after which William Hart engaged her as his leading woman. Her first feature for Universal will be "Kate Plus Ten." Stuart Paton will be the director.

"Pirate Gold" Bookings Include Big Theatres

With the release of each succeeding Pathe serial, the episode pictures have continued to widen their field; but, not since the "Daredevil Jack" picture, in which Jack Dempsey is starred, has any one offering collected so many bookings in houses, where previously the continued-next-week pictures were not included on the programs, as has "Pirate Gold." Pathe's new serial, starring George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot.

This ten episode thriller is to be released August 15th. One month before its date of issue Pathe announced that the attraction had contracts in excess of 50% of the total on "Bound and Gagged" when that production commenced its run.

Goldwyn Product Sold in West Indies

The entire third-year product of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has been sold for Cuba, Porto Rico and San Domingo by Arthur Ziehm, foreign sales manager for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. Capital Comedies released through the Goldwyn organization during its third year were also included.

Another deal closed by Mr. Ziehm last week, places Edgar Rice Burroughs' "The Revenge of Tarzan" in Italy.

Ruth Roland Serial Ready

Pathe to Release "Ruth of the Rockies" and "Pirate Gold" Soon

Ruth Roland, appearing in the new Pathe serial, "Ruth of the Rockies"

PATHE will release two serials during the month of August, it was announced this week. August 25 has been set for the date of issue of "Ruth of the Rockies," the fifteen episode production starring Ruth Roland; and "Pirate Gold," in ten episodes and starring George B. Seitz with Marguerite Courtot is to be released on the fifteenth of the month.

"Ruth of the Rockies" will be Miss Roland's seventh serial play for Pathe. It is a mystery melodrama with a Western setting and was adapted from Johnston McCulley's novel "Broadway Bab." The Ruth Roland serials have always been one of Pathe's greatest attractions. Due to the following she has built among the regular patrons of the films, this star has commanded special interest on the part of exhibitors.

In the new play Miss Roland will be supported by a company of players familiar for their work in the episode pictures. Herbert Heyes, whose appearances in leading roles are numerous, is Miss Roland's leading man in "Ruth of the Rockies." Heyes played the heroic role in "The Adventures of Ruth."

Thomas Lingham is the leading "heavy." He has had wide experience in the serials. His last part was "The Hound" in "The Adventures of Ruth." Norma Nichols, who began her screen career in Sennett comedies, has played some important parts in big feature productions, notably of the South Sea native girl. Jack Rollens, Fred Burns and others as well known as Western screen characters make up the balance of the supporting company.

Extensive advertising has been mapped out. Pathe announces that this serial will be given a campaign wider in scope than has been employed in the past.

Screen Authors of Prestige

Hodkinson Emphasizes Work Done by Grey and Sullivan for Screen

A STATEMENT issued from the headquarters of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation emphasizes the position of prestige now occupied by two authors whose pens have turned out some of the best stories recently produced for release by the Hodkinson organization. These writers are Zane Grey and C. Gardner Sullivan. Concerning Mr. Grey's work, the Hodkinson statement reads as follows:

"Zane Grey is foremost among the novelists of the day. Millions of his books have been sold since the publication of his first novel in 1913, and now he is finding a still larger public through the films. Two of his stories, 'Desert Gold' and 'The Desert of Wheat' (retitled on the screen 'Riders of the Dawn') have already been produced and released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. A third, 'The U. P. Trail', is being made ready for screen production."

It is safe to assert that no other modern American novelist has found such ready acceptance with photoplay fans as has Mr. Grey. His novels have needed hardly any of the adaptation to screen methods and requirements that has been found necessary in the case of other novelists. And he has a wealth of material to draw from for he comes of a family that has figured prominently and adventurously in the frontier history of our country.

"One of the shining lights among the men and women whose energies have been bent towards the creating of screen material is C. Gardner Sullivan. Mr. Sullivan has been responsible for the starring vehicles used by many of the most popular artists in the eye of the camera and the public."

"J. Parker Read, Jr., is one who thinks most highly of Mr. Sullivan's work, 'for,' as he says, 'Mr. Sullivan seems to get a sympathetic insight into the nature of the particular star for whom he is creating a story and builds that story directly around her.' This is most evident in the last two startling successes of Miss Louise Glaum, 'Sex' and 'Sahara', released by Hodkinson. Both of these were the work of Mr. Sullivan's pen, and it has been said that never before has Miss Glaum had any vehicles which fitted so admirably her exotic personality."

"Miss Glaum is at present at work upon another story of Mr. Sullivan's. 'Love Madness' it is called and it will be released by the Hodkinson organization in the early fall. It is said to exceed in magnificence and in all-around appeal even the two great productions named above."

Walsh Makes Progress on Second Picture

According to an announcement from Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, R. A. Walsh is making rapid progress with the filming of his second independent production to be presented by Mayflower through First National. The title and origin of the Walsh offering to follow "The Deep Purple" are being withheld for the present.

The past week saw the completion of practically all of the important interior scenes, one of which was a reproduction of the famous Old Bailey courthouse, in London. The producer together with a large cast of players and his complete technical staff is now working in upper New York state, filming exterior scenes.

The cast of the new Walsh film consists of a trio of prominent screen players including Miriam Cooper, Anna Q. Nilsson and Conway Tearle.

"The Prince Chap" Gets Run at Rialto

Due to demands from patrons who failed to see William DeMille's "The Prince Chap," with Thomas Meighan during its week run at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, July 11-17, Hugo Reisenfeld, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres has booked the picture for the Rialto the week of July 25. Manager Reisenfeld is sponsor for the statement that the demand for the picture was so great that he was practically forced into showing it at another of his theatres for an additional week.

"Always Audacious" to Star Wallace Reid

"Always Audacious" is the title of the next picture, in which Wallace Reid will star for Paramount, following the completion of "The Charm School" the production on which he is now working. Under the direction of James Cruze the latter vehicle is rapidly nearing completion. A cast of 50 pretty girls headed by Lila Lee, who has scored a success in the leading feminine role of "The Prince Chap," is one of the features of "The Charm School."

Wm. DeMille Starts on Hamilton Story

William DeMille has started work on the Cosmo Hamilton story, "His Friend and His Wife," the scenario for which is the work of Olga Printzlan, who provided the screen versions of "The Prince Chap" and "Conrad in Quest of his Youth" both William DeMille pictures. Conrad Nagel, will be the leading man of "His Friend and His Wife" and Ora Carew leading woman. The remainder of the cast will be virtually of all star calibre.

Two Added to Cast of "Roaring Oaks"

John Hopkins, the player of "leads" and director of several productions, has been added to the cast of "Roaring Oaks," the serial now in production at the Seitz studio under the direction of Bertram Millhauser. Another addition to the cast is Stephen Carr, the fifteen year old boy actor who has been playing in the recent De Mille productions.

"Roaring Oaks" will be Juanita Hansen's second starring vehicle for Pathé.

Adele Kelly in Broadway Musical Show

Adele Kelley with Will Morrissy's Revue, "Buzzin' Around," is another of the young screen actresses to desert the screen for the stage. "Adele" is a dancer now, and general understudy for the dancers in the "Revue."

Miss Kelly will be remembered as Harry Morey's leading woman. In her last picture, Sterling Feature Pictures, Inc., "The Fighting Kerkadians" she played the "heavy."

Mary Miles Minter to Be an Aviatrix

Mary Miles Minter, Reartist, has announced her intention of buying an aeroplane to use to reach locations for her future productions. She also plans to obtain a pilot's license and fly the machine herself.

Goldwyn Managers Appointed

SAMUEL GOLDWYN and his business advisory staff have selected the supervisors and branch office managers for the season of 1920-1921 for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. In a few instances the men are new, but the majority have been retained from the past year because they have proved their value to the organization. The new men have demonstrated in other positions their fitness to supervise the branch offices or to direct the methods of sales and the staff of salesmen at the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges.

They are all men who can take up with the exhibitor the special problems of advertising, booking and exploitation which confront him in his own town and work with him until the problems have been satisfactorily solved. Exhibitors have had business relations with many of these men for years and know that they will receive from them the fair, helpful, courteous treatment which the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation demands from all of its employees. They will find the new managers just as eager to aid them in every possible way—just as keen as the managers retained from former years to see the exhibitor prosper and just as helpful in thinking up ways that will make his Goldwyn film purchases bring in even more money than they have in the past three prosperous seasons.

Three supervisors are named in the Goldwyn announcement. Jean J. Crandall continues in charge of the eastern territory, embracing the exchanges in Washington, where he has his headquarters, Philadelphia and Boston. A. S. Aronson exercises supervisory control of the exchanges in Los Angeles, where he maintains headquarters, San Francisco, Seattle, Salt Lake City and Denver. E. C. Jensen, with headquarters in Chicago, covers the Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis, Minneapolis and Omaha exchanges.

The managers of the twenty-two branch exchanges are: A. S. Dickinson, 111 Walter Street, Atlanta, Ga.; D. J. Horgan, 42 Piedmont Street, Boston, Mass.; George M. Hickey, 200 Pearl Street, Buffalo, N. Y.; Cecil E. Maberry, 207 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.; Jack Stewart, 217 East Fifth Street, Cincinnati, O.; W. J. Kimes, 403 Standard Theatre

Bldg., Cleveland, O.; L. B. Remy, 1922 Main Street, Dallas, Tex.; Ben Fish, 1440 Welton Street, Denver, Colo.; J. E. Flynn, Film Exchange Bldg., Detroit, Mich.; W. E. Truog, Seventeenth and Main Streets, Kansas City, Mo.; M. Wolf, 912 South Olive Street, Los Angeles, Calif.; Robert Cotton, 16 North Fourth Street, Minneapolis, Minn.; S. Eckman, Jr., 509 Fifth Avenue, New York City; Felix Mendelssohn, 1335 Vine Street, Philadelphia, Pa.; Nat Barach, 1201 Liberty Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.; G. C. Parsons, 985 Market Street, San Francisco, Calif.; Jack Weil, 1312 Lindell Boulevard, St. Louis, Mo.; J. A. Koepel, 2018 Third Avenue, Seattle, Wash.; Walter F. Hayner, 714 Eleventh Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.; J. W. Pope, 714 Poydras Street, New Orleans, La.; E. J. MacIvor, 1509 Howard Street, Omaha, Neb.; W. E. Banford, 135 East Second South Street, Salt Lake City, Utah.

These branch managers will be greatly aided in giving the exhibitors the best of service during the new season through the announced plan of placing a far greater number of prints of Goldwyn pictures in the exchanges than has been the case in the past.

Metro Prepares for Special

Alice Terry Signed for Big Part in "Four Horsemen"

gram, and when he began casting for "Hearts Are Trumps" he chose the little blonde actress for the leading feminine role, that of Dora Woodberry.

Because of the fact that "The Four Horsemen" is to be an elaborate production, a large staff of assistants is working with Director Ingram, picking out locations and attending to the multitude of other details incident to the production. Walter Mayo has been selected by Bayard Veiller, the dramatist who is chief of production at the Hollywood studios, to assist Mr. Ingram in the direction of the super-picture.

Amos Myers will be the supervising art director for "The Four Horsemen." Mr. Myers is supervising Metro art director on the west coast and director of stages as well. He has been with Metro for more than a year, having done the art work on "Please Get Married," starring Viola Dana; "Should a Woman Tell?" featuring Alice Lake and "Old Lady 31," starring Emma Dunn. He is now aiding Mr. Ingram in the selection of locations for the many tremendous outdoor scenes of the production.

Just one detail of the preliminary work now being carried on by Director Rex Ingram is the rearing of a French town, complete from its quaint architecture to its equally characteristic war time population, on a big ranch near Hollywood. The town will have a population of more than 5,000 when peopled with extras now being selected by the director. The town hall, a historic old castle, the business houses so familiar to members of the A. E. F. abroad and row on row of the little French homes that were the lodging places of American soldiers, will make up the town. The entire cast for "The Four Horsemen" will, it is said, total nearly 12,000 men and women.

First camera work on the production is scheduled to be started in the very near future.

Metro Pictures Are in Demand in Baltimore

Metro announces that for the third consecutive week, two or more of its productions have been shown at first-run theatres in Baltimore. The latest instance mentioned is the engagements of "The Cheater" at the New theatre and "Old Lady 31" at the Parkway for the week of June 28. Metro points to this as a proof of the growing popularity of its releases among the Baltimore audiences.

"Food for Scandal" is Titled and Cut

Cutting and titling have been completed on "Food for Scandal," the second Wanda Hawley starring vehicle for Realarth which will be released in September under the Realarth Star Franchise. Will M. Ritchey, supervising director of the West Coast studios, is enthusiastic over the offering.

Announcement has just been made that the name and scope of the New Jersey-Rolfe Film Company have been changed. Hereafter the exchange will be known as Jans Film Service and will take in not only the New Jersey territory but New York state as well. The company will be greatly enlarged in many ways.

Jans Film Service is in the market to buy the New York and New Jersey territorial rights to any feature picture of high class; ones that will have a powerful appeal to the general public and which are real and not fancied box office attractions. The company will be glad to look over any feature of merit that may be available for the territory supplied by the New York and New Jersey exchanges of Jans Film Service.

"Snapshots" Have New Value, Says Cohn

Jack Cohn, who with Lewis Lewyn, produces "Screen Snapshots," the bi-monthly single-reeler, has issued a statement in which he claims all the news value of the news weeklies for this "all-star" reel.

"The tremendous popularity achieved by moving pictures," said Mr. Cohn, "has developed a host of armies of movie-curious people. They want to know how this or that star lives; how they spend their spare time; what their directors look like, and what goes on behind the scenes. 'Screen Snapshots' has come as a boon to this army of movie fans."

New Lloyd Comedy Titled Recently Completed Two Reeler Will Be "Get Out and Get Under"

WHILE "High and Dizzy" is further establishing Harold Lloyd as "America's favorite comedian," word comes from California that he has just completed the second of his new series of comedy specials for distribution by Pathe. Under the title of "Get Out and Get Under," this production had a pre-view at the Strand Theatre, Pasadena, Cal., and, according to reports from the West Coast, received a hearty ovation. This pre-view follows a custom, established by Lloyd, with "Bumping Into Broadway," of showing the production before a regular audience, and in the event of necessity, tuning it up in spots that might not meet with approval, before forwarding it to the Pathe Home Office.

Pathe has not as yet set a release date on the new comedy, but it will be an early Fall issue.

Lloyd had virtually completed the production before he made his last trip to New York, filming only a few scenes upon his return to Hollywood. Hal Roach, who has supervised all of the Lloyd two-reelers since "Bumping Into Broadway," acted in a similar capacity for "Get Out and Get Under." Mildred Davis, as usual, has the leading feminine role.

"Get Out and Get Under," as the title indicates, is an automobile satire, and from all accounts will furnish audiences with the same abundance of laughter earned by "High and Dizzy." It is eighth in the line of Lloyd two-reelers. The first series was comprised of "Bumping Into Broadway," "Captain Kidd's Kids," "From Hand to Mouth," "His Royal Snyssness," "Haunted Spooks" and "An Eastern Westerner." "High and Dizzy" was first of the second series.

Carpentier to Return to America Soon

Robertson-Cole announces that Georges Carpentier, Europe's boxing champion and central figure in this company's special production, "The Wonder Man," which is now being widely shown, will return to America within the next three weeks to begin training for his fight with "Battling" Levinsky, which will take place on October 10th in all probability in the city of New York. This contest will be for the light heavyweight championship of the world.

According to the best information obtainable, the contest for the world's heavyweight championship between Jack Dempsey and Carpentier will take place in Madison Square Garden early in 1921.

W. P. Carleton Continues F. P.-Lasky Contract

William P. Carleton has returned to continue his contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and is playing the leading role opposite Dorothy Dalton in her newest film, now in course of production. The company have gone to Portland, Maine, for a cool two weeks, and, incidentally, exteriorists. Mr. Carleton was recently released temporarily by Famous in order to play leading roles in the International production of "The Inside of the Cup" and the Associated Exhibitors' filming of "The Riddle Woman," starring Geraldine Farrar.

Corinne Barker Is Now Mrs. Hobart Henley

A statement from the W. W. Hodkinson offices contains the announcement of the marriage of Corinne Barker to Hobart Henley which took place on Friday evening of last week. Mr. and Mrs. Hobart Henley set sail for Europe on last Saturday, July 24. Miss Barker has become well-known as a feminine "heavy" on the screen. Her most recent work was done in "The Silent Barrier," a Louis Tracy production which is shortly to be released by the Hodkinson organization.

Mermaid Comedies Scoring "Duck Inn," Second Release, Finds Advance Bookings in All Cities

ACCORDING to a statement from Educational Films Corporation, the release of the second Mermaid Comedy, "Duck Inn" starring Lloyd Hamilton of "Ham and Bud" fame finds advance first and second run bookings that will compare favorably with any comedy series, without regard to the period that they have been before the public.

"We believe," says the statement from Educational, "that Mermaid Comedies have made the most remarkable record of any series of comedies ever launched. The reports from our exchanges are unanimous in that the first of the series, 'A Fresh Start' has been booked by every exhibitor to whom it has been shown. When such theatres as the Strand, New York, the Euclid, Cleveland (where it ran two weeks) the Rialto, Washington, and theatres of equal standing in other cities put in an immediate demand for the second of the series, it is a mighty good sign that the quality is there.

"'Duck Inn' sets a high mark for advance bookings, but we are not asking any one to play this picture until they have seen it. We want everyone to see this picture and then to see the third of the series, 'Nonsense,' and the fourth, 'Dynamite,' to prove to them that we were correct when we promised them the fastest moving comedies of action and pretty girls that they have ever known. In three months the name 'Mermaid' will be firmly in the minds of motion picture fans everywhere as representing the funniest in two reel comedies."

Franklin a "Keystone Cop"

Bebe Daniels' Director Started in Slapstick Comedy at $15 Per

CHESTER FRANKLIN, who is at present engaged in directing Bebe Daniels in "You Never Can Tell," her first production as a Real-art star, broke into motion pictures as a "Keystone Cop" at $15 a week, after having given up the position as cartoonist on a San Francisco newspaper at $100 a week.

Ten years ago Mr. Franklin had established himself as one of the ablest young cartoonists in the country. But he saw in motion pictures a good gamble for the future and appealed to Mack Sennett, the comedy king, then in the early days of his success, to aid him in breaking into the new field of work.

"At the start," Mr. Franklin stated, "my confidence was shaken several times. I was getting $100 organization.

a week as a cartoonist, and it seemed an awful blow to come down to $15 per. But after several lean years my belief in the great future of motion pictures was justified."

"There was something about the tall, good-looking young fellow that seemed to make instantaneous hit with children and it was not long before he graduated from the Keystone police to direct "kid" pictures. With $500 and a camera he and his brother "shoe-stringed" their way through a one-reeler that won them both a job with D. W. Griffith.

After making a series of children stories for Griffith he was promoted to the production of five-reelers. His first picture was "Let Katy Do It," featuring Tully Marshall

A PATHÉ SERIAL
GEORGE B. SEITZ
in the feature serial PIRATE GOLD with
MARGUERITE COURTOT

George Seitz has introduced a new (and better) kind of serial.

"Bound and Gagged" proved that it is possible to write and produce a motion picture serial of the same high grade as the best features, and thereby not only hold the typical serial audience but attract and hold the highest type of feature audience.

"Pirate Gold" is a better serial than "Bound and Gagged," good though the other was. It is a serial for any theatre, because it was made for the best.

High-power drama; delicious comedy; sensational incident, all compounded by an expert who is an artist, Mr. Seitz himself. And through all the engaging personality of a star who has come up with a meteoric rush,—the same Mr. Seitz.

RUTH OF THE ROCKIES

From the novel "Broadway Bab"
by Johnston McCulley

Teeming with adventure, thrills, and the spirit of the West "Ruth Of The Rockies" is another great contribution to the serial successes so well known to American exhibitors and so thoroughly identified with the personality of Ruth Roland.

This dynamic favorite of the masses has been seen in "Who Pays?" "The Red Circle," "Hands Up," "The Tiger's Trail," and "The Adventures of Ruth." They have all been tremendous money makers.

Her latest production is aflame with the ardor and dash of the romantic land of the Rockies and beyond. Her remarkable aeroplane stunts, great fights in the open country, and her dominant girlhood through it all set a new mark in serial acting and production.

Lucy Cotton, who will appear with Bert Lytell in Metro's forthcoming production of the famous stage farce, "The Misleading Lady."

Two Popular Players Signed by Metro

George Spink, widely known actor as well as a writer of popular songs, has been added to the cast of "The Misleading Lady," starring Bert Lytell, which Metro is now picturizing at its New York studios in West Sixty-first street, from the stage play by Charles Godard and Paul Dickey. Mr. Spink will enact the role of Parker, the bookworm, in the Bert Lytell Special production.

Fontaine La Rue is another addition to the Metro forces. She has been signed to enact an important role in the production of "Body and Soul," the successful stage play by William Hurlburt, which is now being screened at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, under the direction of Charles Swickard. In this production Alice Lake will be featured.

Gowns a Big Asset to "Heart of a Fool"

Gorgeous clothes and beautiful women—acknowledged by showmen as an unrivaled money-getting combination—are features of Allan Dwan's "In the Heart Of a Fool" that are expected to contribute substantially to the picture's box-office success. The new Dwan offering, which is his fifth to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, is described as a veritable fashion pageant, with three of the screen's most beautiful leading women—Mary Thurman, Anna Q. Nilsson and Maryland Morne—acting as models.

Mann Comics Sold for Almost Whole Nation

With the closing of contracts for the territory of Minneapolis, North and South Dakota, Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Montana, Iowa and Nebraska within the past week, the Arrow office announces that 98 per cent of the entire territory in the United States has been sold on the Hank Mann two-reel comedies.

Educational Scores New Record

WITH two-reel comedies at three of the four big New York motion picture theaters this week Educational Films Corporation claims to have set another new record.

At the fourth theatre there is one of the company's scenic, and two of the three theatres playing Educational comedies are two other scenic.

In addition to this, one of the houses is playing three different reels from Educational this week, giving the company the whole of the picture bill with the exception of the feature and a portion of the pictorial.

"An Overall Hero," second of the Chester Comedies, is the release at the Rivoli and it is expected that it will follow in the footsteps of "Four Times Foiled," the first of this series which first played at the Rivoli for a week and then went to the Rialto for another week. Mr. Riesenfeld thinks so highly of these Chester Comedies which feature Snooky, the "humanzee," Arthur Nowell, the child actor, and a number of animals, that he has contracted for the entire year's output.

"Duck Inn," featuring Lloyd Hamilton of "Ham and Bud" fame and including in the cast Marvel Rea, Monte Banks and a number of favorites in the Strand offering. This is the second of the Mermaid Comedies. "A Fresh Start," first of this series, scored one of the biggest comedy successes in the history of the Strand and Managing Director Joseph Plunkett has called especial attention to this second one in his advertising.

"A Seaside Siren," second of the new two-reel Christies featuring Fay Tincher, is the comedy offering at the Rialto. It is rather remarkable that this is the second of the new two-reel Christies to be played at the Rialto in as many weeks, "Kiss Me Caroline" having been shown last week. These two pictures are said to be typical of the quality of Christie Comedies that may be expected under the producer's contract with Educational.

"Some More Samoa," a Chester-Outing, is given such a prominent place on the bill at the Capitol this week that the New York Times gives this picture first attention in its review and comments on its genuineness by saying that "it demonstrates that scenes of semi-savage life can be entertaining without the embellishments of home-made thrills."

"One Drop Was Enough," another Chester-Outing, is at the Strand, in addition to the comedy, and the Sun-Herald calls it "exceptional."

It is at the Rivoli that there are three Educational subjects given prominent places. Besides "An Overall Hero," "The Castaway," a Bruce Scenic Beautiful which tells the story of a man shipwrecked on a desert isle who finds life there so wonderful that he refuses to leave, is given a special musical setting.

"Holland's Rustic Life and Waterways," an Educational de luxe picture, is used at the end of the Pictorial and as an introductory for the "Dutch Dance," one of the most attractive elements of Dr. Riesenfeld's bill.

A number of the Marcus Lor houses are this week featuring "Modern Centaurs," one of the Educational Specials, while four Bruce scenic and two Outing-Chesters are also contributing to the enjoyment of Loew patrons in the Greater City.

Ince Studio Launches Drive

Arranges Big Tie-up for Three-reel Studio Film

CAPITALIZING on the irresistible appeal of motion pictures to the people of the world, and anticipating newspaper enterprise and interest in a news-feature service of extraordinary merit, the Exploitation Department of the Thomas H. Ince Studios has successfully launched a three-cornered co-operative drive that will likely eclipse all previous publicity achievements, according to news received this week from the West Coast.

By special arrangement with one newspaper in each city and town of the United States and Canada, Thomas H. Ince has produced a three-reel photoplay which depicts for the first time, every phase of on and off stage activity in the Thomas H. Ince Studios, of Culver City, California.

The novel production, released under the title of "A Trip Through the World's Greatest Motion Picture Studios," will be distributed to exhibitors by, and under the exclusive jurisdiction of, the newspapers for which it was especially filmed under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince, and the direction of Hunt Stromberg, Director of Publicity and Advertising for the Ince Studios, who conceived the idea and negotiated its acceptance by scores of powerful metropolitan dailies throughout the country.

Contrary to all precepts, "A Trip Through the World's Greatest Motion Picture Studios," sidesteps the casual star and player "snapshot" glimpses found in some magazine and special supplements devoted to "behind the screen" moments. The Thomas H. Ince production is distinct and original in that it presents, in conventional story and continuity form, the full day's work in a representative American cinema institution, from sunrise to sunset.

Under the existing arrangements between the Thomas H. Ince three-cornered tie-up, the advance and current publicity pledged for the promotion of "A Trip Through the World's Greatest Motion Picture Studios," will, it is believed, result in the greatest, most far-reaching volume of collective newspaper space ever accorded to a single exploitation project.

When the Thomas H. Ince Studios first approached the press with the nucleus of the plan, letters and telegrams of enthusiastic acceptance and co-operation were returned by the photoplay and managing editors who promptly recognized the circulation and news-gathering possibilities attached to an enterprise which brings the ever-alluring Shadow-land to the very doors of the fans, and provided the newspapers with a feature service that appeals directly to all classes of people. Communications with large and small theatre owners in every locality also disclosed the exhibitor-approval and demand.

At the suggestion of the majority of the newspapers, the coming of the picture will be announced on successive days at least two weeks prior to the release of the film and its first-run exhibition in the local theatre. Boxed bulletins, news announcements, and feature "spreads," will herald the newspaper's arrangements with Thomas H. Ince. During the exhibition of the picture in the first-run theatres, and the subsequent-run houses, columns of news and feature publicity will be accorded its presentation.

In all publicity, advertising, and exploitation, the photoplay will be billed as "The... (name of newspaper).... Thomas H. Ince Production," thereby negotiating a mutually profitable advertising partnership between the newspapers and the Ince Studios with the various exhibitors, also companionable partners in the enterprise, receiving the three-reel photoplay without rental cost, and reaping the full benefit accruing from the tremendous extra newspaper support and publicity and the hundreds of extra admissions made inevitable through the presentation of a decidedly unusual attraction which strikes at the hearts of all.

Gertrude Atherton Is Busy Learning the Ropes

Gertrude Atherton, one of the Goldwin Eminent Authors, arrived at the Culver City studios this week from the East and at once got busy studying screen technique. While she has already contributed to Goldwyn's screen literature, she has not hitherto written directly for the screen. Now, however, she is engaged upon writing a scenario and will remain here several weeks until it is finished.

Pioneer Preparing for Big Fall Campaign

All the departments of the Pioneer main office in New York are running overtime getting all the details of the fall campaign in order. It has always been the practice of the Pioneer to lay its work out far in advance, so that last minute rushes and delays will be eliminated and deliveries made long before release dates.

Pioneer's fall season will begin with "What Women Want," with Louise Huff as the star, while "Where Is My Husband?" with Jose Collins and Godfrey Tearle, will follow. "The Place of Honey-moons" in which the leading roles are played by Emily Stevens and Montagu Love will be released as a special early in September.

Later fall releases will be Alma Rubens in "Thoughtless Women," and the first of the new Pioneer productions starring Violet Mercereau and Edmund Cobb.

Copperhead Series Has "Robin Hood" Theme

Much curiosity in the trade has been aroused as to the nature of the story running through the Copperhead series of dramas, made by the Breed-Howell Corporation and released by the Photo Products Export Company, 220 West 42nd street, New York city. Jim Freeman, the "Copperhead," is a character not unlike that of the outlaw Robin Hood famed in the history and romance of the twelfth century.

Jim Freeman is the Robin Hood of the Blue Ridge section of North Carolina and so he often "gets in Dutch." A price is on his head; he is captured; but escapes to confound his pursuers. Of course he has many love adventures.

W. H. Wright Writing Titles for Chester

William H. Wright, a New York newspaper man and magazine writer has succeeded Katherine Hilliker as title writer for Chester Outings and Chester Screenies. Mr. Wright came to C. L. Chester from the New York World. He has had considerable experience in newspaper work in New York, being a member of the New York Tribune staff for five years before he entered the magazine field as associate editor of Outing Magazine.

Blackton Finishes Another

Pathe Says "Passers By" Sets Hot Pace for "Man and His Woman"

COMMODORE J. STUART BLACKTON, who has given Pathe two big releases since June, in "Passers By" and "Man and His Woman," each of which had a Broadway premiere, has just completed another production titled "The House of the Tolling Bell." In this production he will introduce a new male star in Pathe pictures, Bruce Gordon, English actor who was engaged because of his special fitness for the leading part in "The House of the Tolling Bell." May McAvoy, whose appeal was a big factor in the popularity of "My Husband's Other Wife" and "Man and His Woman," is cast opposite Gordon.

While preparing his next release for Pathe, Commodore Blackton has been kept informed of the success being gained by "Passers By" and "Man and His Woman." The former, a screen version of C. Hadson Chambers' great stage play, is setting the pace for "Man and His Woman," having been released some weeks before. The pace is a rapid one, too, says Pathe, for "Passers By" is the most successful of the entire Blackton series released thus far by Pathe.

Among the prominent first-run houses that have booked the all-star production, since its premier at the Capitol, in New York, are: Signal Amusement Co., Chattanooga; Isis, Houston; Rialto, El Paso; Orpheum, Rockford; Auditorium, South Bend; Avoy, Moline; Fisher, Danville, Ill.; Family, Davenport, Ia.; Bijou, Pawtucket; Broadway, Springfield, Mass.; Capitol, Springfield, Mass.; Park, Boston; Strand, Hartford, Victory, Providence; St. James, Boston; Loew's Garrick, St. Louis; Pantages, San Francisco; American, Troy; Strand, Amsterdam; Albany, Albany; Strand, Syracuse; Palace, Schenectady; and Avon, Utica.

National Distribution on Guaranteed Plan

"Guaranteed Circulation" is to be one of the big assets of the Harry Levey Service Corporation releases, according to plans made public by Harry Levey, president of the company. Industrial and educational motion pictures produced by the company are to be given nation-wide distribution on a guaranteed plan.

Having had wide experience in the distribution of this type of picture, Chester C. Kleber, secretary of the company, has been placed in charge of this end of the work and has already perfected plans along this line.

"By careful study of exhibitors' needs, Mr. Kleber knows how to fit into their program such educational pictures as will round out to best advantage an evening's entertainment," says a statement from the Levey Service headquarters.

Notes Here and There

Eileen Percy is beginning work in the film version of the Edgar Franklin story "Beware of the Bride" under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell and the Lieut. Looker Company is at San Francisco shooting aerial scenes over the city for "The Skywayman" leading woman. Upon completion of this subject Miss Lovely is to be starred by the Fox organization, stories for the Lovely productions having been selected.

Hampton del Ruth, supervising director of the Fox comedy section since his return from New York, where he went with his big special comedy which has been titled "Skirts," has been making the necessary preparations for the filming of another super-comedy.

Sylvia Breamer Starts Franklin Directing

Sylvia Breamer has started work on the second production under her contract with Sidney A. Franklin, the director-producer. Miss Breamer will be featured in "Parrott and Company," a screen version of the novel by Harold MacGrath. The production will be filmed at the Hollywood Studios.

Goldwyn on Capitol Screen Company Has Had Five Weeks in Big Playhouse and More Coming

FIVE solid weeks of Goldwyn productions on the screen of the Capitol theatre is the record which Samuel L. Rothapel, manager of the Capitol theatre has handed to Samuel Goldwyn. Two more Goldwyn features have been booked for later showing and another, Mabel Normand, in the screen version of George Ade's "The Slim Princess," was shown there the last of June and the first of July.

The five solid weeks of Goldwyn pictures was started on Sunday, July 18, with "Going Some," based on Rex Beach's novel. It was a laughing success, the high standard of which was maintained by Will Rogers in "Cupid, The Cow-puncher," founded on Eleanor Gates' comedy of cowboy life. For the week of August 1 the Capitol silversheet will reflect the new Goldwyn stellar vehicle for Tom More, "Stop Thief!" made from Cohan & Harris' production of the Carlyle Moore spoken farce of the same title. The week of August 8 will be devoted to the new Mary Roberts Rinehart comedy of "prep" school days, "It's a Great Life," based on her own story of "The Empire Builders."

On August 15 a picture that the Goldwyn staff confidently expects to score a sensational knockout will begin a week's showing. It is "The Penalty," based upon Gouverneur Morris' novel of San Francisco's underworld.

After a week's interval the Capitol's screen will again show a Goldwyn feature with Madge Kennedy in a dual role in "The Girl With the Jazz Heart." Sometime in the early fall Pauline Frederick will be seen in the picturization of Alexandre Bisson's famous play, "Madame X." The Goldwyn staff expect it to be one of the dramatic sensations of the coming film season.

Equity Film Wins Praise State Right Men Enthusiastic After Seeing "Keep to the Right"

THE officers of Equity are gratified at the reception being accorded its "Keep to the Right" production—a five-reel Edith Taliaferro picture, the second of Equity's state-rights releases. From the verdict of the many buyers who have seen the picture, it appears that the name of Edith Taliaferro, associated with many Broadway successes whose fame has traveled the breadth of the country, is one of the chief features of interest. While it was known that the connection of a Broadway star with a production immediately carried weight with exhibitors and fans, the popularity of Edith Taliaferro was never estimated as optimistically as the judgment of state-rights buyers indicates.

The gist of the opinion expressed on "Keep to the Right" is that the picture is "different"—in the sense that it deals with a subject that is far above cheap sentimentality. Although its theme is romantic, the story is an appealing tale of love—it teems with action and dramatic intensity. The side-lights introduced occasionally stand out in excellent relief, while the main plot is so handled by the director, John G. Adolph, that it carries the spectator's interest with full force up to the very last.

Charles Urban Acquires Rare Russian Views

Cutting and titling of the Admiral Kolchak pictures, brought back from Russia by Lieutenant Carl von Hoffman two weeks ago, is practically completed by Charles Urban who bought them for his Urban Popular Classics.

The unusual value of the pictures rests in the fact that they are the only ones in existence. Lieutenant von Hoffman says that no other cinematographer except himself ever had an opportunity to take any pictures while the Kolchak expedition was in action, so the ones he brought back to America constitute the only pictorial record there is. Von Hoffman says he was able to bring home only 2,500 feet out of 18,000 exposed. The rest fell into the hands of the Bolsheviks and was destroyed, he states.

National Film Officer Gets Many Contracts

After several weeks' stay in New York, arranging for the release of several recent National Film Corporation of America productions, C. A. Willat, vice-president and general manager of National, has returned to the Hollywood, Cal., studios of that concern with a large number of contracts for the release of a series of special feature photoplays, production on which will be started as soon as the National's board of directors has ratified the agreements.

According to "Doc" Willat's information bureau, the National is planning the production of a series of eight features, adapted from the literary works of one of the best known and popular American authors.

Art-O-Graft Completes Scenic Drama

The scenic wonders of the West in all its unsurpassed beauty will be displayed to the East in the Art-o-graf's latest production "Out of the Depth." Otis B. Thayer, with his staff is busy finishing this picture, which will shortly be sent East for trade showing.

Paramount November Schedule

FOLLOWING the announcement of a big release schedule for September and October, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation have just announced for the Paramount November release schedule eight productions said to be superlative even to the features of the two preceding months. Of special interest on the November program are "Behold My Wife," George Melford's picturization for Paramount of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel "The Translation of a Savage"; and "Idols of Clay," the third of the George Fitzmaurice productions, featuring Mae Murray and David Powell.

"Behold My Wife" takes first place chronologically as it will be released early in the month. "It was adapted to the screen from its literary form by Frank Condon and shows the masterly direction of George Melford in the acting of a capable cast headed by Milton Sills, Mabel Julienne Scott and Elliott Dexter. The plot deals with the struggle of an Indian girl, married to a "remittance man," to acclimatize herself to the ways of the old country after she has been sent to the ancestral estate, unaccompanied and friendless, by her husband.

Fifty pounds of beads, closely identified with the story and used for comely ornaments of dress, feature a part of the plot of "The Sins of Rozanne" which stars Ethel Clayton. The story, dealing with South Africa, was adapted by Mary O'Connor from Cynthia Stockley's novel "Rozanne Ozanne." Tom Forman directed.

For the second week's releases Paramount offers Enid Bennett in the Paramount Ince production "Her Husband's Friends" adapted from the Marjorie Benton Cooke story, and Wallace Reid in "The Charm School." "Her Husband's Friends" offers a new angle of the eternal triangle, not without considerable humor in this surprising vehicle for Enid Bennett, which was directed by Fred Nible.

"The Charm School," it was stated, was a picture which was so adaptable to Wallace Reid's well known humor that it was pronounced to be his next picture the minute the story was read by the scenario department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The plot follows closely the original story by Alice Duer Miller, showing the tribulations of the young man who suddenly inherits a young ladies' seminary. Tom Geraghty prepared the scenario and James Cruze directed.

Perhaps the most spectacular production of its year is promised in the third George Fitzmaurice production "Idols of Clay," the lavish exposition of South Sea Island life depicting also the charm of Bohemian Soho and the artists' colony. The cast will be featured in the main by the same players who popularized the other two Fitzmaurice productions. Ouida Bergere wrote the scenario. The picture will be released during the third week of the month. The same week will see the release of "A Romantic Adventure," Dorothy Dalton's third picture under her new Paramount contract.

"Burglar Proof," in which Bryant Washburn appears, and "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson" starring Billie Burke, are the releases for the fourth week. Major Maurice Campbell shows his hand again at directing Washburn while Tom Geraghty was responsible for the adaptation of "Burglar Proof" by William S. MacNutt.

Billie Burke takes up a new and more serious vein of acting in the adaptation of Clyde Fitch's play "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson." Edward Dillon directed the production.

Realart Release Wins Favor

IN a statement just issued by the Realart Pictures Corporation, exhibitors and reviewers of the South and West are reported to have passed favorable comment on the latest Mary Miles Minter starring vehicle being released by Realart, "A Cumberland Romance." This comment followed a number of pre-release showings in those sections of the country. The Realart statement, which follows, embodies some of the verdicts rendered by staff reviewers of the various big dailies.

"The best Mary Miles Minter picture yet is the general opinion among the exhibitors while the reviewers wax much more enthusiastic," reads the statement. "Mary Miles Minter demonstrated in this picture what we have long suspected—that she is really a fine little actress as well as a beauty," says the Chicago Post in a review of "A Cumberland Romance." In a full column about the picture, Mae Tinee of the Chicago Tribune says:

"A Cumberland Romance" Is Well Received in West and South

Miss Minter continues to round out and perfect herself in her art. She has always been appealing but she is so much better an actress than she was. This new picture of Mary Miles Minter's is an exquisitely set little tale of simple mountain folk.

"Among the many praiseworthy reviews Miss Minter and 'A Cumberland Romance' received in the South, bits of the one in the Tampa Tribune are quoted because they best express the general opinion. Those who saw the fine work of little Miss Mary Miles Minter in the opening performance of 'A Cumberland Romance' at the Alcazar theatre last night, remarked two things: the steady advance in acting ability that she has made since she first began to work for the screen and the total absence, in this entire picture, of the fine feathers and royal raiment upon which so many actresses depend to make an appealing picture. All in all 'A Cumberland Romance' is a picture worth seeing and pretty little Miss Minter is a star worth watching, for her work, while finished and satisfying, shows promise of even bigger things when she really grows up."

Billy Ruge Comedies Are Not Revivals

The Photoplay Products Export Company of 220 West 42nd street, New York City, writes: "In a recent news item mention is made that we are about to market a series of Billy Ruge revivals. These are not revivals; they are absolutely new and original comedies that have never before been released. There are six of them."

And Bebe Daniels, now a Realart star, inquires "How Come?" when her leading man, Jack Muhlail, in "You Never Can Tell," evidences so much solicitude for her comfort.

Will Tell Releasing Arrangements Soon

IT is expected that an announcement of great interest will soon be forthcoming from Jans Pictures, Inc. It will concern the method of release of that organization's much talked about super-feature, "Madonnas and Men," offers for which have been considered for the past several weeks.

"Madonnas and Men" is the photodrama from the original story by Carey Wilson and Edmond Goulding concerning ancient and modern times. It scored a distinct success when recently given its premier showing, and numbers among its all-star cast Evan Burrows Fontaine, Edmond Lowe, Gustav Von Seyffrittz, Anders Randolph and Raye Dean.

"Love's Flame" Now on Independent Market

"Offers have been received from every territory covering United States for the purchase of state rights on "Love's Flame", a six-part feature, starring Thomas J. Carrigan, supported by Vivienne Osborne." This announcement comes from the offices of the Fidelity Pictures Co., which is releasing the production through the independent market.

After a screening for Bernard Mills, general manager of Elk Photoplays, Inc., of New York, Mr. Mills immediately purchased the rights for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey. The territory of Eastern Pennsylvania was sold to 20th Century Film Co., of Philadelphia, Pa.

"The Mystery of Washington Square" will soon be ready for distribution over the state right market. The picture, which is in six parts, is a detective drama. The theme of the story is based upon life in the Greenwich Village section of New York. The picture, according to Fidelity Pictures, announcement, is in the cutting rooms, and within ten days will be ready for showing.

STATE RIGHTS—EXPORT

Flora Finch to be Starred

Film Frolics Pictures Corp. to Start on Series of Two Reelers

THE dean of motion picture comedy stars, Flora Finch, returns in a stellar role, under the banner of the new "Film Frolics Pictures Corporation," a New York State incorporation of the past week.

The new company was especially organized to provide suitable vehicles for and produce pictures featuring the only remaining star of the "sure fire" comedy days of filmdom when Flora Finch and John Bunny played opposite to each other and reigned supreme in the hearts of the movie fans all the way around the world.

A series of six two reel comedies are in preparation. It is announced that "shooting" will begin on the first of the series with the coming of August.

The new corporation has no definite plan to outline at the present time, as bearing on their future activities, excepting to say that Miss Finch is under a three year contract, to star in no less than six two-reel comedies yearly.

A great many stories for scenario purposes have been under consideration for some length of time and it was only after innumerable conferences between Miss Finch and the executives of the corporation, which stretched along into "the wee small hours of the morning" before the company and the star decided that the time was ripe to make the advance announcements of the new enterprises.

Hallmark Output is Sold

Gorham Photoplays Buy Specials, Serials and Triangle Re-Issues

ARRANGEMENTS have just been completed whereby the Gorham Photoplays, Inc., a new independent distributing corporation of which P. E. Meyer is president and general manager, has taken over the Hallmark New York Exchange.

In talking over the exchange, the Gorham Photoplays, get all the Hallmark Specials and Serials now booking and also the Triangle features including forty-seven Fairbanks, Hart, Keenan and Norma Talmadge re-issues, twenty-six new recreated Triangle special subjects starring Charles Ray, Lillian Gish, Billy Burke, Louise Glaum, and Olive Thomas, twenty-six re-issues with H. B. Warner, Constance Talmadge, Gloria Swanson and Dorothy Gish, and also twenty-six recreated Keystone comedies. All the above material will be distributed in the New York and Northern New Jersey territory.

In placing the Triangle re-issues, Triangle special subjects, Keystone comedies on the market, the Gorham Photoplays, Inc., will serve the exhibitor with new prints and a new line of advertising accessories.

Masterpiece Film Has Heavy Bookings

The rise in cost of picture production which increases the rental of features, has given a stimulus to the re-editing, re-titling and re-issuing of such features as were regarded by exhibitors as big money getters. This condition of affairs is being taken advantage of by the Masterpiece Film Distributing Corporation. Although this company has been in business only a few months, the results obtained with the new issues of eight Clara Kimball Young pictures which include "Hearts in Exile," "The Feast of Life," "Savage Instinct," "Without a Soul," "The Dark Silence," "The Yellow Passport," "Marrying Money," and "The Rise of Susan" are said to have been little short of wonderful.

The Stanley Circuit of Philadelphia, the William Fox houses in New York, the Isis theatre in Indianapolis have booked the eight features. Lubliner and Trinz of Chicago have booked "Hearts in Exile" for all their theatres.

Seiter Contracts Again With National Film

William A. Seiter has renewed his connections with the National Film Corporation of America. Under the new contract with National which puts an option written into the previous contract in force, that concern has first call on Mr. Seiter's services for three years, with a further option for two additional years. A heavy increase in salary, according to the National's information bureau, is included in the new agreement, which also provides Mr. Seiter with his choice of productions.

Victor Nulty Works on "The Son of Tarzan"

Victor A. Nulty, production manager at the West Coast studios of the National Film Corporation of America, is devoting himself wholly to the task of looking after the producing detail of "The Son of Tarzan," now being filmed by that concern for David P. Howells, who will distribute this feature serial.

E. R. Champion Joins Arrow Sales Staff

Further evidence of the large plans which Arrow is making for the coming year is furnished in the announcement this week from W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, of the appointment of E. R. Champion as special sales representative.

Mr. Champion was formerly with Pathe as branch manager in Washington, D. C., and assistant branch manager in New York City for the same company. Prior to his association with Pathe he toured the Orient with the picture, "Civilization."

Gale Henry Closes Big Deal

To Produce 12 Two-Reel Comedies
a Year for Special Pictures Co.

GALE HENRY, the well-known eccentric comedienne of the screen, this week signed a contract with the Special Pictures Corporation whereby she will make twelve two-reel comedies a year for the Los Angeles organization, which specializes in the production and distribution of short subjects. Details concerning the contract were given out on the West Coast this last week.

Miss Henry will maintain her own producing company and will deliver the negative and one sample print of each of her dozen comedies to Special Pictures Corporation.

The deal was closed between legal representatives of the comedienne and President Louis W. Thompson of Special Pictures Corporation. According to the terms of the contract, Miss Henry will receive for her comedies a sum which will make her the highest paid comedienne in the films, says Special Pictures.

Several years ago Miss Henry deserted the musical comedy and burlesque stage to enter films, and she was given her start by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal. She developed a new type of feminine character portrayal and soon became a leading comedy star. Later she formed her own company, and now she has made arrangements to release her output through Special Pictures.

This makes eight releases a week which will be distributed from Los Angeles by the new organization, including "Comedyart," "Comi-classic," "Sunset-Burnd scenes," Clayplay comedies in Animated Mud, and three comedies weekly from Premier productions, Inc. The company started in the short-subject field about four months ago with Comedyart release, made up of a 1,400 foot comedy, 400 foot scenic, and a 200 foot novelty film, and have been maintaining a policy of rapid expansion ever since.

Story and Cast Sells Film

Titles Cannot Draw Crowds, Says

PHOTO Products Export Company, 220 West 42nd street, New York City, are issuing a number of pictures which are as yet neither cut, titled, nor named, but experienced and expert buyers have praised the quality of the productions—the photography, the acting, the story presented, and have contracted for the output on that appraisal. This has led an official of the Photo Products Export Company, a man who has been identified with pictures for many years, to make some remarks with regard to the mania for names of "best sellers" and "Broadway successes" that has recently characterized the industry.

"In very many cases," he said, "the names of best sellers and Broadway successes, when applied to pictures, have meant nothing except disappointment. You cannot make pictures to titles of books or plays. I can recall the name of one book which is said to have sold several million copies. A film was made to this book; it was a good film as far as it went, but it is on the shelves today. People do not pay money to see a title. As to the number of plays that have been presented between 42nd street and 50th street in recent years, and of which movies have been made, their names are legion but the number of successes is not so big."

Well Ahead of Production

Adaptation of Animal Serial is Six Episodes Ahead of Filming

THE work of adapting Edgar Rice Burroughs's book to the screen under the title of "The Son of Tarzan" is being kept considerably ahead of the actual filming so as to insure the company against all delays in the matter of releasing the big animal serial. Roy Somerville, who is carrying on the adaptation, has completed the tenth episode. This puts him six episodes in advance of the production work as Director Harry Revier is now engaged in the cutting and the editing of the fourth episode. The picture is being produced under the auspices of the National Film Corporation and will be distributed by the David P. Howells Company. The following statement has been issued by the Howells' organization in connection with this chapter-picture:

"Several innovations have been adopted in the production of this serial. Among these is the close and intimate cooperation in which Director Revier and Roy Somerville are working. When Somerville went west to start work on this picture he and Revier engaged a bungalow together, so that they would be able to work together without unnecessary delays. This arrangement has worked out with great effect as the two spend their days on location and their nights working out the script for the future episodes. By director and scenario writer working with such intimacy and in perfect harmony some very unusual results have been achieved that will be apparent on the screen.

"One of the most important of these will be the method by which the synopsis preceding each episode has been worked out. In place of the usual sub-title synopsis which was so long that no one ever took the trouble to read it, Revier and Somerville have worked out a pictorial synopsis that will lead off each episode and in a few feet of film give the salient features of the action which has gone before."

Aywon Announces Release

Features, a Farce and Joy Brand of Comedies on List Published

AN announcement has just been issued by Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation. It concerns the releasing of the names of the features and comedies now ready to be put on the market or to be released by Aywon in the near future.

The first feature, in which Florence Chase will star has been completed. It is "The Woman Above Reproach" and is in seven parts. It presents the star in an emotional role.

Another feature is "The Evolution of Man," said by Aywon to be a most unusual story played by a strong cast. Mr. Hirsh will also present and distribute through Aywon, "The Woman of Mystery," a five-reel production with Grace Cunard and Francis Ford in the leading roles; and "The Charming Deceiver," the story of a young girl who marries a man twice her age.

At present the Aywon Film Corporation is distributing Gerald Bacon's photodrama "Blind Love" with Lucy Cotton. The company also is releasing the travesty reel, "When Quackel Did Hide," a burlesque on the great drama, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." In the travesty Charlie Joy plays the dual role, and he is also the chief comedian in the Joy Comedies, which are being released by Aywon.

In addition to the fifteen two-reel Joy Comedies, Mr. Hirsh announces that he will shortly release a series of fifteen two-reel Western features, in which Harry Carey is starred, supported by an all-star cast.

Brandt and Cohn Join Forces

JOE BRANDT, former director general of the National Film Corporation, and Jack Cohn, producer of Screen Snapshots and the Hallroom Boys Comedies, have become associated in the formation of the C. B. C. Sales Company. The organization will serve as a distributing medium and will deal exclusively in independent productions. Mr. Brandt left for the Coast last Tuesday, following the announcement of the establishing of the new company. Mr. Cohn, who is well-known in the state-rights circles and who has had a wide experience in the production and marketing of short-length subjects, will be in charge of the New York office, which will be maintained at 1600 Broadway. A statement just issued from the New York headquarters of the C. B. C. Sales Company follows:

"The C. B. C. Film Sales Com-

C. B. C. Sales Company to Handle Independent Products

pany will deal directly with the independent producer with a view to the efficient and equitable marketing of his product. Contracts have already been closed for a number of feature productions and a series of short subjects and novelty reels. Others will be contracted for as time goes on.

"The new company claims to have perfected an arrangement whereby their contracted pictures will have good distribution in all territories. The company will handle the publicity, advertising and exploitation on every film contracted for. Brandt will be in direct charge of the selection of productions which the C. B. C.

Company will undertake to market. Jack Cohn states that he will shortly announce the list of pictures which the firm has already contracted for.

"Brandt's present trip to the Coast will keep him away for at least three months, it is said. He will supervise the production of 'Thunderbolt Jack,' a serial for Arrow on which he will start work immediately.

"Brandt also announced that he had already signed six other contracts, among which are one for the production of six five-reel westerns for Invincible Photoplays; a contract with the Marion H. Kohn Productions for the making of a series of two-reel slap-stick comedies; the making of arrangements for the production of next year's series of Hallroom Boys Comedies; and the buying of a few pictures for C. B. C. Film Sales Co."

Moving Day for Warner Brothers on Coast

The Warner Brothers have leased the studio at Culver City and this week moved their producing equipment and organization to that place from the Horsley studio where they have been operating for the past eight months. In resuming the producing activities at the new location the Warner Brothers have inaugurated a new policy respecting the making of Monte Banks comedies for Federated Exchanges.

The new system provides that two directors shall be maintained for the one comedy organization, the advantage to this being that one director is editing the film just completed and preparing his next story while the other director is working with the producing unit. The two directors are Gilbert Pratt and Herman Raymaker, both of whom have had wide experience. Pratt has for the past six months been directing Lloyd Hamilton in comedies for Educational and Raymaker was formerly with the Hank Mann comedies as director.

Aywon Buys Rights on Fine Arts Picture

Nathan L. Hirsch, president of the Aywon Film Corporation has purchased territorial rights for New York and Northern New Jersey for "Up in Mary's Attic," the comedy drama being distributed through state right exchanges by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc.

Territory previously sold includes: Florida, Georgia, Alabama, North and South Carolina, Tennessee, Washington, Idaho, Oregon, Montana, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Wyoming, Louisiana, Mississippi, Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin.

Preacher's Grandchild Makes Screen Debut

Margaret Beecher, nineteen years of age, granddaughter of Henry Ward Beecher, has entered the movies as a member of the cast of Hemmer Superior Productions, Inc., of which Edward Hemmer is president. The initial production has been completed and will be read for release at an early date.

THE verdict of States-rights buyers on the announcement of the second release of the Joan Film Sales Co., "The Invisible Ray"—a serial starring Ruth Clifford and Jack Sherill, is a favorable one. While it was originally the intention of the Joan Co. to specialize on long subjects, like "She Played and Paid," a Fanny Ward production now being sold by Joan on a States-rights basis—this policy was broadened in the case of the 15-episode serial now released on the States-rights market.

In the first announcement last week, much was made of this serial as a new sensation in this field. The result was that States-rights buyers made inquiry, some rather skeptical of the achievements described as part of this 15-episode picture. Those that entertained any doubts about the quality of "The Invisible Ray" are now its staunchest enthusiasts, for the serial is said to have lived up to the expectations of the most hardened critics.

One reason for the unusual interest displayed in this serial is in the extreme need of serials at the present time. It was conceded that no stronger argument can be advanced to an exhibitor to induce him to book a production than that which guarantees him steady business for fifteen weeks—which is the chief attraction of a serial. Nothing better for summer booking could be desired than a series of thrills that a serial provides. In season and out was the view expressed by States-rights buyers that the serial is the one "old reliable" to count upon for a regular patronage—especially a serial that bristles with thrills and mystery such as "The Invisible Ray," which has Ruth Clifford and Jack Sherill as its main poration for the United Kingdom. The London organization accedes to the agreement, also proposes to acquire Continental films as well as many British productions which will be disposed of in the United States through its American representatives. Inter-Ocean Photopense of mystery and the supernatural—were exhibited and found to meet the test of approval. The sensations of science that are played up with startling effect in "The Invisible Ray" serial, also came in for their share of praise from States-rights men.

It was a curious fact that all interested parties, without exception, asked to see more episodes of the serial than they originally intended to view. Instead of reviewing two or three episodes, there was not a spectator among the States-rights buyers who was not desirous of seeing at least six of the fifteen chapters. And the surprise of the session came when they realized that the serial, unlike many others, gains interest, instead of losing it, with each additional episode. The spectators found new thrills with each reel—many of them never attempted on the screen before.

Inter-Ocean Acts as Agent

To Represent British Firm Here; Contract Is Mutually Operative

INTER-OCEAN FILM CORPORATION, exporters, with offices at 218 West 42nd Street, New York City, specializing in the distribution of American films and motion-picture accessory products in foreign film markets, have been officially designated as American representatives for the newly-established Inter-Ocean Photoplays, Limited, of London, according to a statement issued this week by Paul H. Cromelin, president and general manager of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

Under the terms of an agreement made by Mr. Cromelin with Horace G. Harper, Managing Director of Inter-Ocean Photoplays, Ltd., while the former was in Great Britain, the London organization will distribute the American productions acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

All the sensations and novelties set forth in the first announcement were found to be there in full measure. The aeroplane leaps, automobile feats, high-rope walking, high diving, fist-fights, explosions, underground crime—all the suspects, Ltd., will also act as the sales agents in the United Kingdom for a number of motion picture accessory products controlled by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution.

Inter-Ocean Photoplays, Ltd., according to cable advices just received has already taken over the three commodious floors in the Thomas A. Edison Building at 162-164 Wardour Street, London, where it will maintain its headquarters in the United Kingdom. Plans it is reported, are well under way for the establishment of branch offices in the various motion picture distributing centers throughout Great Britain.

Horace G. Harper, managing director of Inter-Ocean Photoplays, Ltd., is a film man of a wide and varied experience. He has travelled extensively throughout the world in the interests of the film industry, and by virtue of his many motion picture connections both here and abroad he is said to be well-equipped to guide the destinies of the New British organization.

Ruth Clifford Signed by Frohman Corp.

Ruth Clifford who has heretofore been starred in feature productions, and whose last appearance was in the 15-episode serial, "The Invisible Ray," has signed a contract for two years, to be starred in feature productions to be produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation. These productions are not to exceed five in number a year and are to be produced and marketed as special attractions. Productions will start September 1st.

Miss Clifford's preliminary education was acquired at St. Mary's Seminary and afterwards at the Ursuline Academy, New York City. Her first work in motion pictures was with the Edison Company. She thereafter starred in twenty Blue Bird features under the direction of Rupert Julian and thereafter by Republic and Vitagraph.

The method of distribution of the Ruth Clifford productions has not yet been determined upon.

Directors of Capital Film Co. Meet

The Board of Directors of the Capital Film Company of Chicago met at Frankfort, Ind., on July 21, and elected C. N. Comedale as president, in place of Hugh Woody; E. A. Crull as vice-president; Markwood Slipper, treasurer, and re-elected E. D. Bergen as secretary.

The directors also confirmed contracts made through Russell, Greiver and Russell, exclusive agents for Doubleday Production Company, Los Angeles, Cal., for the latter company's entire product for the ensuing year, which will consist of a single-reel comedy weekly, featuring Bobby Ray, and two-reel bi-monthly Westerns, featuring Fritz Ridgeway.

Renorts made at the meeting showed the finances of Capital are in excellent shape, and it is the intention of the company to materially increase the scope of operations in the near future, both by the acquisition of numerous other pictures and the addition of strong exchanges throughout the country.

"Voices" Is Kremer Feature

Photoplay Deals With Spiritism But is Free of All Propaganda

"VOICES" is the title given to the first big feature attraction about to be released by Victor Kremer, Inc. The title is in keeping with the thought, feeling and sentiment which sparkles from every scene. While the photoplay deals with Spiritualism in a certain phase, the producer desires all to bear in mind that it is not propaganda but instead the "strangest love story ever told."

Of course, as an officer of the company said, "If making one think, if comforting the heart of the bereaved, if thrilling one to the nth degree of thrilldom is propaganda, well then 'Voices' is propaganda, and," continued the speaker, "I should like to see the screen filled with such propaganda pictures."

In presenting "Voices" as the first of the big pictures, Mr. Kremer feels that it will tend greatly towards the establishment of confidence among exchanges and exhibitors as regards the quality of future product. It is worthy of great emphasis that in the universal story which is told in "Voices" the spectator will be impressed with the rare artistry of certain scenes necessary for the development of the plot.

Chester De Vonde, playwright and producer of not a few big Broadway successes, is author as well as director of the picture. In the production of "Voices" Mr. De Vonde attempted to make it an artistic, perfect production and quoting him, "never losing sight of the title and therefore, the spirit that pervades throughout the story, I feel that I have succeeded in presenting the 'Great Love Passion,' its joys, its hopes, its pathos, its disappointments, its all controlling power."

Charles Giles, male lead in "Voices," the new Victor Kremer six-reel production

Independent Films Has Unusual Press Book

In fulfillment of its promise to back up all its productions with exploitation campaigns, Independent Films Association of Chicago is issuing the first of a series of campaign books, which is declared by all who have seen it to be one of the most elaborate books ever offered as an aid to exhibitors. It is also described as "full of valuable ideas."

This first example of what Independent Films Association plans to do is a press book on "Hell's Oasis," the first of a series of eight Pinnacle Productions starring Neal Hart. It is a sixteen-page book in three colors, with an extra heavy overlapping cover of real beauty, and is illustrated with sixty-eight striking drawings. The advertising cuts and special exploitation layouts are of marked originality and many exploitation and startling publicity stunts are outlined.

The entire book is the creation of the Master Advertisers, Chicago, with particular credit for its distinctiveness going to Messrs. Joe Fischer, Al Dezenels and Sam Gold, all members of Master Advertisers' staff.

Pinero Play Is Completed

Equity's "Mid-Channel," Starring Clara Kimball Young, Finished

FROM the Garson studios in Los Angeles comes word of the completion of Equity's fourth Clara K. Young production, "Mid-channel." A drama from the pen of the English playwright Sir Arthur Pinero, which scored a hit on Broadway with Ethel Barrymore in the leading role and which has been adapted to the screen with the author's supervision.

The news of the release of "Mid-channel" is of special interest to exhibitors for various reasons. In the first place, the theme of the play is one that leaves no doubt about its popularity with patrons of every class, it deals with the crucial period of married life, and is considered by many as Pinero's most powerful play on modern life. Its fame during its Broadway run at the Empire theatre, and the opinion of the multitudes of Pinero's readers, assures the popular interest in the picturization of the play.

Of special interest is the success of full-voiced speech used in the filming of "Mid-channel." Last month, when the announcement was first made in this paper that the cast of "Mid-channel," at the suggestion of Miss Young, was to memorize the lines of the play, and speak them with full voice before the camera, much conjecture was expressed in the industry and the press in general at the result of this innovation. The first private showing of "Mid-channel" which took place a few days ago proves that this step was a decided success. The sincerity and power of dramatic portrayal resulting from the use of full speech throughout the play, and particularly the inspiring lines of the author which were learned by heart by the cast, more than made up for the extra effort involved.

Plan "Tarzan" Exploitation

To Time Publication of Animal Serial Story With Its Release

WHAT is said to be an entirely new method of exploitation for the states rights buyer has been worked out in conjunction with "The Son of Tarzan," jungle serial love story that is being produced by the National Film Corporation for distribution throughout the world by David P. Howells.

In the past the exploitation of a states rights picture by the distributor has been confined and limited to the selling of territorial rights. Little or nothing has been done to aid the states rights buyer in putting the picture over with the exhibitors of his territory.

The D. P. Howells organization has decided to devote its exploitation facilities as a direct aid to the states rights buyer when he starts booking the picture in his territory. This, it is believed, is a distinct innovation. Arrangements have been completed with Edgar Rice Burroughs whereby his consent has been obtained to the syndication of the story of "The Son of Tarzan," as told in the picture, in the newspapers throughout the world. In putting out "The Son of Tarzan," a complete layout of the syndication will be provided. The state right buyer will have the option of arranging for the syndication of the story in his territory or all arrangements will be made by the D. P. Howells organization, the plan of campaign so timed that it will start at the same time at which the picture is released in that territory.

"Movie Chats" Go Big in South, Is Report

Carl H. Pierce, vice-president of the Kinetograph Company of America, submits a letter received from A. Harrison, head of the Harcol Film Co., which distributes the Kinetograph product in the Southern States. Mr. Harrison writes:

"We thought you should know of the success we are having in our territory with the distribution of Charles Urban's 'Movie Chats.' 'When one of the 'Chats' was shown to Mr. Julius Saenger, president of the Saenger Amusement Co., which controls the bookings or owns outright sixty per cent of all the theatres in a portion of our territory, Mr. Saenger remarked that it was the best short reel subjects he had ever seen. The result was the booking of the 'Chats' over the entire Saenger circuit and these bookings will start July 31 at the Strand theatre in New Orleans."

Reelcraft Completes Six

Alice Howell, Billy Franey and Billy Van Featured; Heavy Sales

THE general office of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation announces the completion of six more productions for distribution on its exclusive short-subject program.

Alice Howell has arrived at the Hollywood studio of Reelcraft, after working for the past six months at the Chicago studio, and under the direction of Dick Smith completed another two-reel comedy for the Alice Howell series, to be titled "Good Night Nurse."

Four more single-reel comedies, featuring Billy Franey and directed by George Jeske, are titled "Dry Cleaned" (which was given a pre-release showing at Cline's Broadway in Los Angeles), "The Kidnapper," "The Snitch" and "The Moonshiner," all of which have been shipped at the New York office.

The first two-reel comedy, featuring Billy B. Van, has been edited by Tom Bret and will be distributed under the title of "Snakes." This picture is the second release of the Royal Comedy series new being distributed by Reelcraft, Leon Errol was the star of the first release in a two-reel comedy titled "Buggins." All of these are scheduled for release through the Reelcraft and allied independent exchanges.

The sales department of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation reports a heavy sale of the new Royal Comedy series now being prepared for its exclusive short-subject program.

Numerous state rights territories of the United States have already been sold, and negotiations are now pending for the remaining open territories. All foreign rights will be sold to one corporation. Reelcraft officials expect to be able to announce the Royal Comedy series as sold one hundred per cent for the entire world before August 1st.

Japan Wants R. C. Vignola

Tokio Company Makes Offer to Director of Cosmopolitan Films

ROBERT G. VIGNOLA, whose first special Robert G. Vignola Production for Cosmopolitan-Paramount, "The World and His Wife," has just been released, is in receipt of a letter from Tokio, Japan, offering him the director-generalship of the Kinkikan Cinematograph Company. The letter is signed by K. Takahashi as president and gives as references any bank in the empire of Japan.

"The gentlemen comprising the syndicate," reads the letter, "have been contemplating this step for a long time. They have watched several American directors—you among them—very carefully for the past two years and have decided that you are the one man wholly fitted to undertake the important post of director-general with this organization. They offer you a splendid opportunity, financially and otherwise, to place motion picture Japan on the map.

"Japanese literature is rich in folk-lore that would make interesting material for the screen, and it is these gentlemen's plans to produce these stories with Japanese casts in Japanese atmosphere, amid Japan's unexcelled natural scenery.

"They, therefore, offer you this post which will require you to take complete charge of all productions, coach Japanese artists and directors in the most approved American production methods, and otherwise exercise supervisory powers over the studio department of this organization."

Director Vignola has no comment to make on the Japanese offer.

Arrow Closes Large Sale

Features, Comedies and Westerns Are Sold in Middle West States

WHAT is said to be one of the biggest sales ever made in the independent field was closed last week by Arrow and the National Film Company of Minneapolis. This sale, which includes eight feature productions, two series of comedies and one series of Westerns, takes in the territory of Minnesota and North and South Dakota.

Arrow closed the deal with E. A. Kellert, manager of the National Film Company, which is a new organization in Minneapolis. Mr. Kellert is one of the best known film executives in the Northwest and he has plans under way which will make his independent exchange one of the largest in that section of the country. The eight features contracted for are in the majority of cases of five reels in length. Arrow has announced the names of the productions named in the contract, as follows: "Love's Protege," "The Chamber Mystery," starring Claire Whitney; "Daughter of the Don," "Wolves of the Streets," "The Law of Nature," starring Vincent Coleman; "The Hushed Hour," starring Blanche Sweet; and the revised six-reel edition of "The Million-Dollar Mystery."

The Ardath series, sometimes called the "Xint" comedies, which comedian, was included in the sale as was the series of twelve "Arrow" comedies.

Price Handles Perry Series

Mack Swain is Star of Two-Reel Comedies; First Release Aug. 15

THE new two-reel Mack Swain Comedies which are being made by Jean Perry will be distributed by C. B. Price Co., Inc., on the territorial plan. The first release will be made on August 15th. The title of the initial picture is "Full o' Spirits."

Mack Swain, or "Ambrose" as he is sometimes known, is one of the well-known screen comedians. For a number of years he appeared in Chaplin Comedies. He was with the Keystone Players and later with Sennett. His three hundred pounds and six feet three has been seen on the screen throughout America. Jean Perry is producing these Mack Swain comedy pictures.

Mr. Price, president of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., who will handle these subjects on the territorial basis, has issued the following statement:

"I believe that the Perry Comedies, starring Mack Swain, will be regarded not only by the state-right purchasers throughout the country but also by first-run exhibitors as comparing favorably with any comedies on the market today. There is absolutely no questioning their quality, and we would have no trouble whatever in placing them with some program if we desired. We, however, have made our mark in the state-right field, and feel that when something so good as these Mack Swain Comedies come along we should give our purchasers the benefit.

"Already we have had requests from a number of the bigger first-run exhibitors throughout the country for a screening of these comedies. We know that they are of a calibre that will play the very finest houses.

"The Mack Swain Comedies will be released as a series one month commencing August 15th with 'Full o' Spirits'."

Trophies Put on Exhibition

Weapons and Implements Gathered by Film Men in Far East on View

AN entire room in the Southwest Museum in Los Angeles has been set aside for an exhibition of the native weapons, implements and utensils of all kinds gathered by William Alder, F.S.C.A.S., and Edward Laemmle during a thirteen months' trip, including sojourns with the headhunters of Borneo and the cannibals of New Guinea. One of the fruits of their trip was the six-reel feature "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," just released.

Alder and Laemmle made the trip in the interests of the Southern California Academy of Sciences and of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Alder, who is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, has also been elected a Fellow of the Local Academy.

During the thirteen months of their trip Alder and Laemmle visited Japan, China, Indo-China, Siam, the Federated Malay States, the Straits Settlements, Java and Borneo. They traversed the longest diameter of the latter island—480 miles—traveling over a months in the interior with the Dyak headhunters, from which they procured a number of human skulls as souvenirs. They also

The final work of the trip was at New Guinea, where they landed at Merauke, a town of 100 natives and five whites. The whites are hunters and traders in Paradise plumage. The Dutch government here loaned them a schooner, which was wrecked on a coral reef after voyaging 280 miles. They abandoned the ship and after living for several months among the Kia Kia cannibals a Dutch patrol conveyed them to Merauke.

Advertising Quickens Interest in Reel

During the past week the Kineto Company of America has received inquiries from distributors in California, Washington, D. C., and New England in regard to Charles Urban's "Movie Chats." For each territory two inquiries were made by Independent Exchanges which went to handle this release. Carl H. Pierce, vice president of the Kineto Company of America, said that he considered the quickening of interest to the advertising campaign in the trade papers.

Al Santell Leaves the Artclass Staff

Al Santell, prominent West Coast director, who came East under contract with the Weiss Brothers of the Artclass Pictures Corporation, has resigned from that organization. Santell supervised and personally directed a comedy feature for the Artclass people which will shortly be released. Before coming East Santell was with the Universal as directing manager of comedy productions and will probably return to the Coast to undertake the supervision of three producing units.

"Back on the Farm" is Hallroom Comedy

Following the trend of the season, Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of the Hallroom Boys Comedies, in which Percy and Ferdie are featured, have announced that the next release of this series will be a very timely offering entitled, "Back on the Farm."

Capitol Film Exchange Has Keeney Pictures

Mr. John S. Clark of the William L. Sherry Service has disposed of the Frank A. Keeney productions, handled by the Sherry Service, to the Capitol Film Exchange, Inc. of 729 7th Ave., New York City, for Greater New York.

Marjorie Hume is playing the lead in the first Famous Players' Lasky picture made in the new London studio and which has been titled "The Great Day"

Stanton Makes Feature for Government

Richard Stanton has completed his latest Fox special feature, a special Americanization film made in conjunction with U. S. Government propaganda against the spread of Bolshevism. Mr. Stanton was selected by the Government to make this special American epic picture. The authorities at Washington turned over Fort Meyer, Va., to Mr. Stanton to be used as the locale for certain parts of the story.

Mr. Stanton is now supervising the cutting of the feature to seven reels, which, when finished will be released as a special feature under Government auspices. The completion of this feature marks the end of Mr. Stanton's four years affiliation with William Fox. In that time Stanton has been engaged exclusively in the production of special features.

Billy Franey Will Not Leave Reelcraft

In a statement just issued from the headquarters of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, a formal denial is contained of a statement declaring that Billy Franey, the star of a series of one-reel comedies for Reelcraft, was to appear in a series for another producing company. The following telegram from Franey, received by the New York office of the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, was included in the Reelcraft statement:

"Please retract statement crediting me with Comedy Art. They have made me several offers which I have refused. I have no intention of joining them and never have had. Am satisfied with my present arrangement with Reelcraft."

Berwilla Film Ready for Fall Schedule

With a $100,000 plant at its disposal, completely equipped to accommodate seven units, the Berwilla Film Corporation, of which Ben Wilson is president, is putting the finishing touches to its fall production schedule, which will commence about August 5th, according to word received from William La Plante, who is general manager of that concern.

By that time, states Mr. La Plante, Jack Hoxie will have finished his current serial, "Thunderbolt Jack," for the Arrow Film Corporation, while the rest of the featured players on the Berwilla payroll, including Ben Wilson himself, will have the continuity and other production details in shape to resume work on serials and features already contracted for by several of the largest distributing organizations.

"Nobody's Girl" First Issue of Federated

Announcement is made from the headquarters of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., at the Candler Building, New York, that the first release of the new national organization is "Nobody's Girl," starring Billie Rhodes. The release date has not been set, but it is announced that the feature will be available in the near future. In view of its splendid production and the popularity of its stellar principal, confidence is expressed on the part of the Federated officials that this will serve as a fitting premier release for the new organization.

"Nobody's Girl" was produced by the National Film Corporation, was directed by Francis Grandon, and includes in its supporting cast the names of Mary Alden, Melbourne MacDowell and Lloyd Bacon.

Lewis of Dallas Buys Arrow Releases

Arrow announces that it has closed contracts for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas on "The Law of Nature," "Before the White Man Came" and "The Profitier" with the R. D. Lewis Film Co. of Dallas, Texas.

Singapore Conditions Are Described

In a letter just received from J. F. Pestana of Singapore there are some interesting details given concerning the picture conditions existing in the Straits Settlements. Mr. Pestana has been engaged in the exhibition of pictures in Singapore for more than nine years. American pictures are away ahead of the others in popularity, he said, their "punch and pep" satisfying the demands of the average Singapore "fan." Serials and western drama are especially in demand. The society drama, problem play and heavy melodrama come next. In comedies, preference is shown for the slapstick brand.

A large number of serials have come under the censorial ban, hold-ups, murders and like scenes being particularly eschewed. Though no statistics have been offered in support of the theory, movies have been held largely responsible for the commission of violence. American films are handled generally by local exchanges which act merely as agents of large film-renting concerns having their headquarters elsewhere. Much "junk stuff" is being used, but the demand is so great that no difficulty is experienced in running it.

Pioneer to Have Five New Exchanges

General Manager Hoffman announces that Pioneer will soon have exchanges in Washington, D. C., Baltimore, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha. The first of the two Pioneer exchanges to begin operations will be the office at Washington which is situated at 525 Thirtieth street, N. W., and the exchange in Baltimore at 412 E. Lexington street.

Ed Price will be in charge in Baltimore. Both of these exchanges were taken over by the Pioneer from the Screen Art Pictures and in addition to handling the Pioneer output in these territories, it will also exploit the Screen Art Productions.

The office at St. Louis will be situated at 3134 Olive street, Kansas City at 1712 Main street. The location of the Omaha office has not as yet been determined.

Statement by William Fox, President of the Fox Film Corporation

"FOX FILM CORPORATION extends greetings to the trade at the beginning of its seventh year. To exhibitors everywhere it wishes to say that never before has it been so well equipped to serve both the trade and the public.

"Fox Film Corporation has laid its plans fully conscious of the fact that never in the past has the exhibitor been in the assured position of influence which he now occupies. It recognizes that the exhibitor of today is his own boss, whether he be a "big" or a "little" exhibitor. And right here let me say that no exhibitor is big except the one who progresses, and that no exhibitor who progresses long remains a little exhibitor.

"This independent position of the exhibitor is due in great measure to the wide range of material from which he is at liberty to choose in making up the program which he will offer to the patrons of his theatres. Furthermore, it places upon him an obligation to examine fully before selecting: he is in duty bound to do so.

"The wise men of the commercial world are very frank in stating their belief that this country is on the eve of a period of great prosperity. A period which, according to all signs will be of long duration. The ensuing profit-making will extend to all — men and women in every walk of life and in every trade.

"The prosperity will reflect upon the box office of the exhibitor who shows worth while pictures to his patrons. Bearing this in mind, the exhibitor should examine the screen products at hand, and should arrange his plans for a year ahead.

"In other pages in this magazine we have tried, in a small way, to portray the great variety, the magnitude, and the importance of Fox Attractions for the coming season. These pages show, in light manner, less than ten per cent of our product for the year 1920-1921.

William Fox, president of the Fox Film Corporation

Winfield R. Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of Fox Film Corporation

Winfield R. Sheehan's Statement on Future Fox Film Releases

"NEVER in the history of Fox Film Corporation have we entered the year so splendidly equipped to furnish exhibitors sure-fire productions of the biggest calibre as we are today," says Winfield R. Sheehan, general-manager of the Fox Film Corporation, in a statement just issued from his office.

"Massiveness is the keynote of the great group of Fox specials which already have been prepared for the new season just before us. In the past, the Fox product has embraced a few specials each season. For the year 1920-1921 we have ready a group of special attractions such as never before offered the industry by any producing concern. These are twelve in number and are dealt with in detail elsewhere in these pages.

"The phrase 'no expense has been spared' is frequently on the lips of producers, but it happens to fit the case this time. Fox showmanship, trained and tested in past seasons, made accurate through many past successes, has been applied to the production of the great list of attractions which will be distributed under the Fox banner this year. 'Showmen's pictures' is the term which aptly describes the Fox output for the new season. I have every confidence that throughout the world exhibitors showing Fox pictures will find that we have prepared for their artistic success and financial profit a group of screen productions unequalled by any past record.

"Both as regards its splendid special pictures and the superb list of star attractions released in series, the Fox output for the year at hand must impress one with its unusual opportunities for successful exhibition purposes. Theatres, no matter where located, no matter what the class of their patronage, will find their needs catered to in this long list. In accordance with its well established policy, Fox Film Corporation has produced screen attractions which every type of house can play. All along the line, however, these pictures are stronger and more massively produced than ever before.

"With William Farnum, Pearl White and Tom Mix at the head of our series of star pictures; with William Russell, Shirley Mason and George Walsh; with the splendid popular entertainment afforded by our new series of 20th Century brand productions, presenting Eileen Percy, Buck Jones, Louise Lovely and others; with the first Fox serial, 'Bride 13,' ready for release; with Fox News firmly established and Fox Sunshine Comedies and Mutt & Jeff cartoons more popular than ever; and especially with our great group of specials, we feel that Fox is undeniably and pre-eminently fitted to supply the needs of the motion picture exhibitor throughout the world for the season 1920-1921."

Fox Expands Exchange System : : : : :

EXCLUSIVE of the progress shown by expansion in the European markets, Fox Film Corporation, with its new headquarters in the big studio and administration building in New York, has enlarged and improved its Sales and Distribution facilities in this country with great strides.

For the past six years William Fox, president of the corporation which bears his name, has extended each year the chain of Fox exchanges throughout the country in order to handle the steady increase in demand for Fox films, until with the advent of 1920 this firm now occupies a leading position as regards this branch of the industry as well as for production output.

Many of the older Fox exchanges in the United States and Canada have been enlarged during 1920. This has been an absolute necessity, because the former quarters had become too small to accommodate the rapidly growing business.

But even with the additional space thus gained, it has been found necessary to open brand new exchanges, which for the time being was classed as auxiliary branches. These, however, are now full-fledged exchanges and at this writing are four in number.

The first of these to open is the Albany, New York office, which takes the overflow from the Buffalo exchange and the enormous new business which is steadily flowing into the Fox company from that territory. U. Spandau, formerly with the Buffalo exchange, has been placed in charge of the new exchange in Albany—which news doubtless will please greatly those exhibitors in the territory who have known him and his willingness to give the exhibitor co-operation at every turn.

In New Haven, William Fox has opened another Exchange, which will supply the territory through Connecticut, which has been receiving service from both New York City and Boston. Everything is being put in readiness to take care of the theatres in that district for the Fall season from the New Haven exchange, but the announcement of the identity of the manager is not yet forthcoming.

Oklahoma City will have a Fox exchange of its own, under the management of B. E. Edwards, who has been identified with the Fox entertainments from the Kansas City exchange. This office will be fitted up in accordance with the standard layout of Fox exchanges, and will be equipped with every facility for the exhibition and distribution of films to the section assigned to it.

At 125 West Broadway in the city of Butte, Montana, Fox has opened the fourth of his new Exchanges this year. At this point the Sales Department of the Fox firm, under the general management of Herman Robbins, has placed L. McGinley as manager. Mr. McGinley is known to all the theatre men throughout the central western territory through the good work he formerly did as assistant manager of the Fox office in Cincinnati.

The purpose of establishing these new branches of the Fox sales force is explained by Herman Robbins as an essential part of the general expansion policy of Fox, which aims at concentration of the sales forces at each of the points in order to cover more thoroughly the territory allotted to each. An even greater extension of exchanges is planned, by sub-dividing some of the larger territories now covered by one central point.

Announcement of the additional new offices will be made public within the next two months, during which time negotiations now open for new sites will be closed and erection of the new buildings started.

Among some of the Fox exchanges enlarged this year to cope with the increased activities of the sales department are those at Chicago, under the management of Clyde W. Eckhardt; the Omaha branch, Sidney Mayer, manager; the Philadelphia office, George F. Dembow, manager; and the Cincinnati branch under the management of Rudolph Knoepfle. At each of these points Fox has more than doubled the original space occupied by the branch, equipping each with facilities for handling and shipping of film with the least possible delay and effort.

Extensive alterations, improving and enlarging many of the other exchange branches, have been and are being made at this writing, and report has been received at the home office that the reconstruction of the present Kansas City office will be completed in a few days.

Fox Film Corporation, in its progress, has now established exchanges and district sales offices in practically every film center in this country and in Canada. Under the district management of such veterans as Harry F. Campbell, Howard F. Sheehan, Clayton P. Sheehan, E. H. Wachter, George Allison and Louis Rosenbluth those six districts into which the Fox firm has divided the United States for sales purposes are now registering an enormous demand for Fox entertainments which keeps the exchanges running at capacity day and night.

The exchanges which are now operating on the Fox specials, the Farnum series, the Mix series, and the forthcoming Pearl White films, as well as the films featuring Shirley Mason, Buck Jones, William Russell, George Walsh, Louise Lovely and Eileen Percy are located in the following cities: Albany, Atlanta, Boston, Buffalo, Butte, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Detroit, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New Haven, (new) New Orleans, Oklahoma City (new), Omaha, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Seattle, St. Louis, Washington, D. C., and New York City.

In Canada, Fox still is operating six exchange branches, one of which has been recently removed to entirely new quarters to give the staff additional space for increase of output. This branch is now located at 162 Union Street, St. John, N. B. The other offices are situated in Montreal, Toronto, Calgary, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

With the new season approaching, heralded by the announcement of the big special films, the new series for the Fox stars, and the newly made stars, these exchanges will be called upon, it is predicted, to meet the biggest year's business in the history of Fox Films Corporation—as is evidenced by the reception already accorded the first two of the new Fox specials shown to the Trade Press in New York at the Palace theatre—"If I Were King", and "The White Moll".

Louise Lovely a Fox Star

Official Confirmation of Rumor Received; First Picture Named

OFFICIAL confirmation was received this week from Fox Film Corporation of the widely circulated rumor that Louise Lovely had been elevated to the ranks of Fox stars. In a statement issued regarding the promotion of Miss Lovely, the producer outlines his plans for the introduction and exploitation of her first vehicle.

The selection of Miss Lovely's first starring vehicle has already been made by Fox, and is announced under the title of "The Little Grey Mouse"—which, if titles count for anything, suggests appeal and immediate interest.

It is understood, through reports from the Hollywood studios, where the picture has already been started, that James Hogan has been retained by Fox to direct Miss Lovely's initial starring production. Mr. Hogan, according to general film news from the colony in Hollywood, has just finished the direction of a special feature for Fox in which an international film hero is the star. The name of neither star nor picture has been made known as yet, and considerable interest is felt throughout the industry as to when this film will be shown.

Already Louise Lovely is receiving the congratulations of thousands of admirers from all parts of the country who have heard rumors of her good fortune and she is setting forth with a determination to justify the opinion of Mr. Fox and her host of well-wishers.

Herman Robbins on Fox Exchange Facilities

"IN keeping with the magnitude of the Fox product to be released during the season 1920-1921, Fox Film Corporation has encompassed an extension of its distribution facilities in the United States which will permit of an even greater measure of service to Fox exhibitors than in the past," says Herman Robbins, general sales-manager of Fox Film

Corporation, in a statement just issued from his office.

"The unprecedentedly wide distribution which Fox attractions attained during the past season have pointed to the necessity for a very considerable addition to the chain of our exchanges in this country. In order to maintain the high standard of service which we have hitherto given exhibitors, and to even better facilitate the handling of the Fox product, new Fox Exchanges will be in operation in Albany, New Haven, Oklahoma and Butte. The majority of these new branches have already been inaugurated; all will be in operation within a few weeks.

"From a sales standpoint, the Fox organization faces the new season happy in the supreme confidence that it has the handling of a group of productions, the magnitude and attractiveness of which have never been equalled by the Fox output of any best year."

William Fox in Serial Field ::

ON the heels of six years of marked success in the realm of feature productions, William Fox's announcement of the release on September 5 of his first serial picture comes with striking appropriateness. To those who have followed the course of Mr. Fox in the industry to the front rank, the news that he has gone into serial production is rife with promise of newer and better things in that line of screen endeavor.

"Bride 13," the first serial, is only the first of serials that will bear the imprint of Fox Film Corporation, Mr. Fox advises. Its release will mark the launching of a definite and continuous serial policy. A second story has already been written and production has begun, the plan being to release the first episode of the second serial one week after the release of the concluding episode of "Bride 13."

In explaining why he embarked on serial production, Mr. Fox says that the impulse originated with the exhibitors themselves. For a year or more theatre owners have addressed themselves to the president of Fox Film Corporation along these lines:

"You are supplying me and other exhibitors with an excellent array of feature pictures. You likewise furnish first-class two-reel comedies in your Sunshine brand, a very popular split reel subject—'Mutt and Jeff' and since last October a high-class news reel—'Fox News.' I also run serial pictures in my theatre, finding that my patronage demands that type of entertainment."

"To furnish my audiences with the latter class of pictures I have been forced to go into the market and get what was available—and the releases I obtained left much to be desired."

"Why doesn't the Fox Film Corporation furnish serials? I am certain that the exhibitors would welcome them, knowing the high standard set by your present productions."

Messages in this tenor naturally had their effect upon Mr. Fox and the other executives of the corporation. The matter was carefully weighed, and the serial field was thoroughly explored before any decision was reached.

As a result of painstaking study and assiduous effort "Bride 13" was evolved. The corporation is convinced that the quality of its achievements in feature production is abundantly evident in the first picture and will be equally reflected in all of the subsequent serials.

People in every walk of life are interested in adventure serial stories. Fiction of this nature is published in the best American and foreign magazines and is intently followed by the most intellectual folk. With the ground thus prepared, Mr. Fox is of the opinion that "Bride 13" will create an insistent call from moving picture patrons for high-class serials.

"Bride 13" is said to be unique in many ways, but its one outstanding advantage," says Fox, "lies in the fact that the serial was made with the fullest co-operation of the United States Navy. An entire fleet of warships was ordered to work with Director Richard Stanton, the aim of the Navy Department being to bring home to the American people the importance of the operations of their warships and the activities of the men afloat and ashore," says William Fox in a statement just issued. "Never before was there such a privilege granted to a motion picture concern and 'Bride 13' amply fulfills all of the opportunity the co-operation of the Navy afforded."

"It should be understood," continues the Fox statement, "that the serial is in no sense a war play; nor is it a propaganda picture. It concerns itself with the depredations of a band of pirates operating from a submarine on the American coast and the Navy plays the part of the rescuing force."

"The requirements of the serial demand the finest type of adventurous heroism—the ruling spirit of the youth of this country—interwoven with distinguished and engrossing realities of our national life. For the latter the performances of the ships and men of the Navy were considered essential. The preparation of a scenario calculated to win the co-operation so valuable while sustaining the peculiar interest belonging to masterly fiction, was a task requiring months to perform. The results await the verdict of motion picture patrons and Mr. Fox looks forward to their verdict with confidence, certain that he is presenting a serial that will thrill and entertain millions."

In the production of "Bride 13" two names stand out prominently. They are Richard Stanton, director, and Commander A. L. Bristol of the U. S. destroyer Breckinridge, who commanded the ships and men of the motion picture fleet and who was himself the leading actor in several vital scenes.

Mr. Stanton's most recent pronounced success was "Checkers," in which he notably demonstrated his passion for convincing, intense realism which has so quickly brought him to the forefront in direction. "Bride 13" is the eighteenth important Fox release directed by Mr. Stanton.

It was by a most fortunate chance that these two men were brought together in staging the naval scenes of "Bride 13." In personality and in his professional activities Commander Bristol represents the spirit of the U. S. Navy at its best. Also he has imagination. He saw at once how this scenario practically united the sternest, most inspiring realities of life with the world of adventure and romance. That a crew of pirates, directed by a master mind veritably uncanny for the resourcefulness of its villainy, manned a submarine and made a descent upon the homes and wealth of America, was romance. But the stolen submarine was a reality and was to be operated against real warships and sailors exactly as in the case of actual piracy in American waters.

The story of "Bride 13" was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon. The scenario was written by Edward Sedgwick. There is mystery of an inexplicable weirdness and horror—to set the perilous adventures going and to call for the assistance of the U. S. Department of Justice and the U. S. Navy. The mystery deepens with the disappearance of thirteen beautiful, young and wealthy brides. Only a bunch of orange blossoms and a note demanding millions in ransom are found to indicate the brides are still alive—but in whose fearful hands?

The scenes in the early and middle episodes of the serial were set and photographed aboard the destroyer Breckinridge and on the submarine R-1, commanded by Lieut. Commander George W. D. Dashiell. Commander G. W. Steele of the Shawmut, mother ship of the seaplane squadron, superintended the essential contribution of the seaplanes, the flying squadron itself being under direct command of Lieut. Commander B. G. Leighton, senior pilot.

Submarine Chaser 177, under command of Chief Boatswain's Mate Wortham, exercised its energetic functions as in real warfare. It was designated as the "flagship" of Director Stanton. Other vessels of the fleet went here and there as required by the continuity.

Out at sea from the harbors of Newport and Gloucester the air was rent day after day with the crash of naval gunfire. Depth bombs were dropped from destroyers and huge charges of explosives from seaplanes and "blimps." The destroyers, the chasers and the submarines participated time and again in bombardments.

Officers of the Navy expressed the highest admiration of the qualities of courage and resourcefulness displayed by Mr. Stanton's company. Men and women alike "played the game" and never flinched.

Picture Marguerite Clayton, the charming, gentle, amiable, blue-eyed blonde heroine, furiously pulling the hair and scratching the face of the pirate pilot of a seaplane a thousand feet up in the air—her life depending upon the coolness and skill of her victim. Imagine her undergoing repeatedly the very painful experience of being dangled by her pirate captors over the side of a jagged precipice pounded by tremendous waves.

As the heroine escapes along a rocky ledge fifty feet above the boiling surf a shell from the deck gun of the pirate submarine bursts against the submerged rocks beneath her and deluges her with sea water. These are only samples of the strenuous work Miss Clayton performed and she did them all with a winning smile.

That accomplished actress, Greta Hartman, well-known in several picture successes, dancer vampire of "Bride 13," shared the dangers of her outlaw companions unperturbed. Before her daring feats and after she would be found in a quiet spot among the rocks or on deck singing sentimental ballads to her own ukulele accompaniment.

Day after day for weeks the hero—big boyish, smiling John O'Brien, his clothes worn and torn down to a ragged shirt and tattered trousers, was in hand-to-hand fights with pirates among the rocks, on submarine decks, aboard seaplanes and struggling in the sea.

Standing out sharply is William Lawrence, dapper in his uniform of a lieutenant of naval aviation, iron in every smooth muscle, with nerves of steel and a fine contempt of danger. He is the hero's comrade, tried in stress and true to the core.

The sinister, swarthy countenance of the Mahdi, the villain of the picture, illuminates the art of the accomplished heavy man of a score of dramatic productions, Edward F. Roseman. In his long black coat and red fez, he stands out with the clearness of a cameo. In spite of his Oriental dignity he shirked no moment of personal danger.

Fox Exchanges Girdle the Globe: : : :

PROVIDING film entertainment in every nook and corner of the globe—this is the enviable fruit of five years of persistent painstaking effort by Fox Film Corporation.

Six years ago—in 1914, to be exact—the name Fox still occupied a very modest place in the then youthful motion-picture industry. But William Fox, with keen judgment, a fine artistic sense and a laudable ambition, had also a well-developed bump of "stick-to-itiveness."

Despite all discouragement he had "stuck" after embarking in the business of motion-picture distribution. His business had prospered until, with shrewd foresight, he had decided to enter the producing field as well.

He established branches in a number of important cities of this country, and ere long he concluded to extend his activity to foreign lands, which he regarded as fertile fields for American-made photoplays. He sent special representatives to Europe to study and report on conditions, preparatory to establishing Fox exchanges abroad.

The war proved a big stumbling block, and for nearly a year this work in the belligerent countries was held up. The result of the investigations made, however, bore out the contention by Mr. Fox that foreign countries were prepared to welcome American films. After several months of arduous work, the first Fox foreign exchange was established at Montreal, Canada, in October, 1915.

Since then the success which Fox films have achieved in the Dominion have resulted in five other exchanges being opened in various sections of that vast territory.

Other American film organizations followed Fox into the foreign field, but for a long time they simply sold their products to foreign companies for distribution.

Although Fox photoplays were shown throughout Great Britain during the latter part of 1914, when the war was but a few months old, it wasn't until April, 1916, that the Fox Film Company, Ltd., was formally established there. Fox pictures were successful in England from the start, due to the general excellence of the productions offered and to the fact that they appealed to all classes of patronage. Mr. Fox and Mr. Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, were quick to discern, after an intensive study of cinema conditions in Great Britain, the likes and dislikes of a vast majority of the motion picture public. Consequently they were able to arrange the types of stories containing the strongest appeal to the British people.

During the past five years the motion picture "fever" has spread rapidly through South America, Europe and Asia. The success of Fox productions in the British Isles had reached the ears of alert business men in other countries. Fox branches were opened in December, 1915, in Argentine and Brazil, which now are the leading film centers in South America.

The popularity of Fox pictures in South America was attested recently at the Fox annual convention in New York, through Alberto Rosenvald, branch manager in Brazil. "The success of Fox stars throughout South America has been such as to make it almost impossible for us to meet the demand of the exhibitors," said Mr. Rosenvald. "Tom Mix, William Farnum and Shirley Mason are acclaimed everywhere while Pearl White's popularity speaks for itself—she has the largest following of any motion picture star in Latin-America." Seven branch offices are now required to take care of the corporation's business in South America.

With the signing of the armistice in 1918, Mr. Fox and Mr. Sheehan went abroad and, following observations of conditions then existing, established a branch in Paris. This is called the Fox Film Societe Anonyme. Since 1918, however, the success of Fox productions in the French republic has been such as to compel additional exchanges, which now includes Marseilles, Strasbourg, Lyons, Lille, Bordeaux; still others to be established in the near future.

On this same trip Mr. Sheehan and Mr. Fox visited Belgium and established an exchange at Brussels. Offices also were opened in Algiers, in Holland, Spain, Switzerland, Portugal and Italy.

Even in beleaguered and suffering Russia, one will find Fox entertainments. The Russians—at least many of them—were quick to realize the educational value of Fox film and sought them despite the continued internal trouble and warfare which has practically paralyzed business in general.

Further evidence of the girdling of the globe with Fox exchanges will be found even in the far reaches of the South African Veldt where the natives are said to have gone "wild" over the strong and rugged roles enacted on the screen by that famous star, William Farnum. It was only a few months ago that Fox was able to take care of the big demand for pictures which came from this territory.

At the close of the war three special Fox representatives were sent to make a complete investigation of film conditions in Germany, Austria and Hungary.

The result of the report of these representatives, together with facts gathered by General Manager Sheehan during a personal investigation by him, was the formation by Fox of a company to care for the business in those countries. In Berlin will be the principal branch office for Germany, while Vienna will have the Fox distribution headquarters in Austria. The investigators found that, despite the fact that German motion picture producers had achieved notable success in both Germany and Austria-Hungary, there was a big field for the American product.

The success of Fox entertainments in India is remarkable. This fact was brought home strongly a few weeks ago by E. Lloyd Sheldon, author and scenario writer of numerous stories for Fox pictures. Mr. Sheldon who recently returned from a tour which embraced Europe, Asia and India, said he was amazed at the interest which the natives of India have taken in the motion picture. He reported that a majority of the larger theatres in the principal cities, including Bombay and Calcutta, are running Fox productions almost exclusively. Seeking to learn from the proprietors of important screen theatres the reason for this, he was told that the Fox productions not only were clean and educational, but that the stars were in high favor with the patrons.

During the past year the demand for Fox products by Japanese exhibitors has grown so rapidly that a branch office will be established in Tokio in the very near future. Similar conditions exist in China. Innumerable letters received by the home office—and by Fox stars from their Oriental admirers—attest the success of Fox features in China. Result, a plan for a Chinese exchange.

And the American navy is doing its part in carrying Fox films around the world. They are shown on every warship, wherever the ship may be stationed. The rise of Fox pictures to their present high level of popularity in this country is due largely, aside from their inherent merit, to the remarkable system and policy which William Fox has maintained in his organization from the outset. After all, the producer must satisfy the exhibitor, and Mr. Fox has done this. Whether the exhibitor be in a big city or in a so-called "towntown," Mr. Fox's consideration has always been the same.

An exhibitor and showman himself, as well as a producer, Mr. Fox has been able to learn the needs of the theatre owner. The rapid and continuous growth of Fox film Corporation in the United States and its insular possessions is the result of a policy to give the exhibitor and his patrons what they want. In every city, town, village and hamlet Fox entertainments may be found—in the million-dollar city theatre and in the weather-beaten village hall.

Twenty-five branch offices now are taking care of the enormous business built up in the United States during six years of Fox Film Corporation's existence. This number will be increased to twenty-eight before October 1.

"Skirts"—Sunshine Super-Comedy : : :

"WITHIN a few weeks," says a statement from the William Fox headquarters, "there will be released a motion-picture comedy which, in its way, will stand as a milestone in the progress of industry. It is a Fox Sunshine Comedy special in six reels—a Sunshine de luxe affair."

"To William Fox," continues the statement, "goes the credit for conceiving the idea and converting it into a reality. To Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of the Fox Sunshine Comedy organization, belongs the honor of writing the story and controlling its production."

"Skirts" is the feature in question, and when it is released exhibitors throughout the country will have the opportunity of observing for themselves the enormous amount of toil and effort which it demanded of every one of the people who had a hand in its making."

"It was last November that the idea of 'Skirts' was born. A report of the steadily increasing popularity of the two-reel Sunshine Comedies was placed before Mr. Fox by his general sales-manager, and so impressed was the head of the organization with the demand for this type of entertainment that he promptly decided upon a multiple real production of a nature which not only would surpass the existing type, but would set a new standard."

"A list of the directors engaged to assist Hampton Del Ruth, who was given a free hand and a staggering amount of money to spend, will perhaps give an adequate idea of the calibre of ability which was soon busily engaged in making 'Skirts!' They were Roy Del Ruth, Eddie Cline, Jack Blystone, Delmar Lord and K. G. MacLean."

"The sixteen principals engaged were Chester Conklin, Alta Allen, Polly Moran, Jack Cooper, Billy Armstrong, Ethel Teare, Slim Summerville, Glen Cavender, Harry McCoy, Bobby Dunn, Tom Kennedy, Ed Kennedy, William Franey, Harry Booker, Laura La Varrie and Alice Davenport."

"Determined to make 'Skirts' an offering that would go down in motion picture history as unique and the most lavish of its kind, Mr. Fox conceived the idea of a ballet of hippodromic proportions. Orders were issued to the casting director at the Hollywood studios to provide a chorus of not less one thousand of the most beautiful women obtainable. Although the mecca of all aspirants for movie honors, it was realized that Los Angeles alone could not begin to provide the combined beauty of face and form demanded. As girls after girl was rejected, it was feared that the necessary number of perfect types could not be secured."

"As a last resort, 'Perfect Form Contests' were instituted in cities throughout the United States and Canada where Fox Film Exchanges are to be found. Six weeks of contests presently brought together the group required."

"About this time Mr. Fox chanced to attend a circus performance. One of the most attractive features of this aggregation of noteworthy talent was a group of artists that for years had been a headliner in vaudeville and which, with the opening of the circus season, was in great demand by the big tent troupes in the country."

"The feature in question was the Singer Midgets. Nineteen persons comprise the troupe. The tallest is forty-six inches and weighs sixty-five pounds. The shortest is thirty-five inches. The youngest is eighteen years old, weighs thirty-nine pounds and is thirty-seven inches in height."

"So impressed was Mr. Fox with the manner in which the Singer Midget performance was received, that he immediately arranged to close their season with the circus. The cancelling of their contract with the circus in question required the payment of a substantial bonus, plus the salaries demanded by the midget outfit to appear in 'Skirts.'"

"Incidentally, the Singers brought with them their entire menagerie of midget animals. The latter are as freakish and unusual in the way of stature as are their owners. This menagerie consists of four elephants, sixteen ponies, a monkey, a deer with fawn, seventeen hounds, four Dogenburg goats and a midget lion. These animals are highly trained and in themselves present an act of unusual interest."

"Thrills too are to be found in 'Skirts.' A flood scene, an express train thundering through a blazing forest fire and going headlong to destruction on a fire-ridden bridge, a submarine rescue at sea, a parachute descent and other similar scenes are said to answer a thrilling element of real action to this Sunshine Special."

"While New York Sleeps," Special : : :

ONCE in a while—not too often—comes a motion picture of merit sufficient to arouse the discriminating picture public of the world to genuine enthusiasm. Any lover of the best in motion pictures can probably enumerate on his fingers all the really great photodramas ever produced and still have a finger or two left over."

William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, gives warning to loosen up one of the remaining fingers and be prepared to tally one more count. For mid-September he promises the release of a special production entitled "While New York Sleeps." He promises further that the picture loving world is going to receive a most gratifying shock and surprise in this big cinemadrama of night life in New York."

"In construction this picture is an innovation," says the statement from the box offices. "While New York Sleeps" is really three enthralling photoplays in one—each division of the picture being distinct and presenting in an overwhelmingly dramatic way a different phase of New York's night life. Each division, or episode, is remarkably intense in both theme and action. Each represents a typical incident of the great city's turbulent life. The conclusions of the first and second enable the audience to gain relief from the nervous tension of a particular story."

Charles J. Brabin stages this sensational photodrama, and he collaborated with Thomas F. Fallon in the writing of the stories and scenarios. Five players constitute the entire cast—Estelle Taylor, Marc MacDermott, Harry Southern, Earl Metcalf and William Locke. Mr. Locke appears only in the first episode. No player is featured in the accepted meaning of the term."

The first narrative is entitled "A story of the suburbs, where love builds its dream-dust future without reckoning on the ashes of the past; where birds come to rest and vultures to seek prey." It depicts a crisis in four lives and centers about a decent woman who has married a wealthy man in the mistaken belief that her first husband, a worthless cad, has been killed."

Miss Taylor is seen as the wife, Mr. MacDermott as the blackmailing first husband, Mr. Southern as a burglar and Mr. Locke as the second husband."

Episode two is a pictorial recital of the notorious "badger game" and is entitled "The Gay White Way"—where, according to the introductory subtitle, "The supple bodies of women put seductive messages into their glances, and their red, red lips give silent invitations—where plots and counterplots hide behind paints and tinsel, and the order is always, 'On with the dance!'"

Here the principal players are but three in number, "the vamp, the man and the 'friend,'" played respectively by Miss Taylor, Mr. MacDermott and Mr. Southern. The episode is eloquently typical of the gay life in the frothy stratum of New York's population—a life in which appears the spider's web woven for the unwary possessor of wealth."

In this episode appears one of the big scenes of the picture—a screening of Ziegfeld's gorgeous Frolic show. Mr. Ziegfeld, realizing that the Fox picture was to be a masterpiece, readily gave his consent to incorporate in the play a part of his

How Screen Can Serve Aviation : : : :

WHAT the motion-picture can do to promote the development of aviation in this country is made the subject of a lengthy statement just issued from the headquarters of the William Fox Film Corporation. In the opinion of William Fox, not nearly enough has been done to encourage the wider use of the airplane in the United States, and the statement which follows deals in part with a way to bring knowledge of aerial craft and their possible uses to the public mind. The Fox statement is submitted as follows:

"A big newspaper campaign on 'Wake up, America!' lines could do much to remedy the present state of affairs, but cold print alone can never do all that should be done. It lacks the visual appeal. There is one agency par excellence which can put the facts about aviation before the public in unforgettable form, and that agency is the motion picture.

"Aviation and the motion picture are sisters. They have grown up together in this century. Each combines a new art and a new science. Each has worked great marvels, and each is on the threshold of marvels still greater.

It is fitting that these sister arts should be mutually helpful.

"The engagement of Lieut. Locklear, the most daring of all aviators, to work in pictures for the Fox Film Corporation is in accord with the policy of this corporation to combine the spectacular value of aviation with public education in the progress of mankind's mastery of the air.

"The United States now has the opportunity to lead the world in aviation. One year from now this lead should be established beyond a doubt. If not, other countries may outstrip us.

"There has been a lull in the development of commercial aviation since the end of the war, due largely to the fact that inventors and manufacturers have not had time to adapt war machines to peace uses. During the war it was believed war was giving a great impetus to aviation, but this was only half true. The fact was overlooked that for five years the best brains in the world were engaged in perfecting fighting planes. And the war plane in peace time is of little use in large commercial enterprises, although it is excellent for purposes of sport.

"What is keeping commercial aviation back? First of all, reluctance of business men to believe with actual seeing. A mere recital of facts and figures has failed to convince conservative business men that commercial aviation is a good investment.

"Motion pictures can tell them more than columns of figures ever could.

"They can prove, for example, the safety of flight. Locklear's exploits have proved not only the courage of one man, but the stability of airplanes. Statistics show that flying is safer today than motoring was twenty years ago. During the early years of their use, steamboats were considered so dangerous that they were barred from the Thames and other rivers.

"During this year thousands of airplanes have been bought in the United States for civilian use, and the demand is still enormously greater than the supply. European aircraft manufacturers began as soon as the war ended to establish air transportation lines, and have been in a better position than American manufacturers to meet the demand.

"One group of Americans, including prominent ex-army and navy airmen, after trying for months to get United States planes with which to establish navigation lines, bought 3,000 in England, and in a very short time received orders for 5,000.

"The motion picture can help to remedy this state of affairs. The knowledge of the things that can be done in airplanes is useful to all men. When Paulhan looped the loop for the first time it was called a mere stunt, but when war came looping the loop was as important and as commonplace an evolution to air-fighters as forming fours was to infantry. Even before Locklear came, the utility of such feats as his was proved. During the war, a British pilot, being wounded, his observer saved both their lives by crawling from his seat, out of the fuselage and to the pilot's seat to take control of the machine.

"It is because of what it means to the United States that the Fox Film Corporation has undertaken to encourage aviation by putting before the public in unforgettable, visual form the very latest steps in the mastery of the air."

Some Studio "Side-Lights" : : : : :

JUST as humor and human interest are prime essential features of the successful screen production, so do humor and human interest figure to a marked extent in the making of moving pictures. Contrary to a prevailing opinion, work in a moving picture studio is really hard work and not play. A great deal of patience and thought and hard work lie behind those wonderfully smooth running scenes, destined to hold photoplay audiences because of their strength and beauty. Sometimes those scenes which are flashed before the eyes in a moment, have taken hours, days—perhaps even weeks—of preparation.

A day spent in the new Fox studio in West 55th Street, furnishes a fine demonstration that the working day of the moving picture director and his company is no light one.

The immense stage of the Fox studio—large enough to permit twenty companies to work at the same time—is a tremendous force when in action. It is almost an education in itself to observe the various Fox directors at work—each engrossed in the production he is piloting to success—each using methods peculiar to himself to obtain the desired results. But in the midst of the working atmosphere a sudden change comes, proving that even the busiest of studios has its time for relaxation and fun.

Pearl White appeared on her set, where Charles Giblyn is directing her in a new production, with a dog in tow—not a smart pomeranian or high-bred collie, just a poor little mongrel with a wistful eye and an over-affectionate tongue. After collecting the entire studio force on the floor, she announced that she had brought the dog from her home in Bayside to auction it off.

The announcement did not create any enthusiasm until Miss White explains that the dog was one of the many she had saved from a pound and was caring for on her Long Island estate. She has devoted an acre to the exclusive use of these homeless animals and the proceeds of the auction is to help in the up-keep of the shelter.

"Remember you're buying a pal," said Pearl White—and then the bidding began. After about twenty minutes of frenzied contest the bidding narrowed down to Charles Giblyn and Charles J. Brabin, another Fox director. Giblyn won the dog with a close margin, and proceeded to buy its loyalty away from Pearl White with a steak his assistant brought from a near-by restaurant.

Mr. Brabin returned to his own set, where Marc MacDermott, veteran screen actor, and Estelle Taylor, principals in a famous stage drama he is translating to the screen, were exchanging reminiscences as they awaited him.

Estelle Taylor is a young actress with a great deal of ability and intelligence, which are clearly expressed in all her screen work. In one of the episodes in the story referred to she enacts the role of an artificial flower maker. To insure realism, Mr. Brabin had the furnishings of an artificial flower factory moved to the studio and had engaged a number of the factory girls as extras.

Of her own accord Miss Taylor asked one of the girls to give her a few lessons in the making of flowers, so that she might act as well as look her part when the flower making scenes were to be taken. An extra girl, not to be outdone by the leading woman, suggested that she also would like to take a few lessons—and she did. In the course of the instruction the factory girl told of her work, and when the extra learned of her short hours she devoted herself more energetically than ever to learning how flowers are made.

Dell Henderson has won quite a reputation as a director with an optimistic temperament and no temper. To see him at work is to realize why he has gained the reputation, but also to wonder just how he could do it. The life of a moving picture director is a trying one at best—and this particular occasion would have tried the patience of a saint.

A young actress was being rehearsed in a scene. Every bit of action was explained over and over again, Mr. Henderson even going through the scene for her. Finally, after a prolonged period of rehearsing he decided that at last the scene could be photographed. Lights were called. The girl stood against a table, one hand nervously clutching at the cloth as she had been instructed. All went well until the camera began grinding. Then the girl suddenly gave a nervous cry as she gave a frantic signal for the cameraman to stop.

"What shall I do with my other hand?" she asked.

Dell Henderson retired from the scene of action to give vent to his feelings in private.

noted show, with its coterie of beauty girls. In this scene appears the famous Dolores, said by authorities of feminine pulchritude to be the most beautiful formed woman in the world.

Then the photoplay moves on to a tragedy of New York's lower East Side, "where civilization's veneer is thinnest; where men do not weigh and measure, but give and take; where impulse is stronger than reason and laws are defied; where love and lust and foe and woe play together in the game of life." Feverishly dramatic as are the first and second episodes, the third veritably binds the spectator to his seat with muscles tense.

The players in this tragedy are designated merely as the pawns, moved by the hand of Fate as it wills, while the spectator watches with breathless interest each motion that hurries the figures to their doom. Here Miss Taylor is seen as an orphan, unawakened, sullen, capable of mad tempests. Mr. MacDermott is an aged paralytic, whose eyes represent his only power of speech, whose son is his world—and his heaven. Mr. Southern is the son, a night watchman, frail of body but big of heart. Mr. Metcalf is a gang leader. Mr. MacDermott's work in this episode alone is described by Fox to be most masterful. Mr. Metcalf as the leader of a criminal gang gives a powerfully graphic and virile performance.

Striking Examples of the Poster Aids Prepared for

The Use of Those Who Book Fox's Fall Specials

Posters with varying appeal to all classes have been the aim—as is strikingly shown in the two styles of 24 sheets on "While New York Sleeps."

Unusual Posters for Fox Specials : : :

THE following statement, which has just been issued from the Home-office of the William Fox Film Corporation, describes in detail the character of the posters that have been arranged to advertise the Fox specials that now await release on the William Fox schedule.

"William Fox posters will be famous among exhibitors before the fall campaign is well under way. Exhibitors will realize the box office appeal of these new posters. They will hold the motion-picture patron until he has read everything on them, has judged of their artistry and knows where the picture is being shown.

"Big propositions require big advertising. The Fox pictures for the fall are so big that William Fox has engaged the biggest artists in the business—men with big ideas—to give the Fox exhibitors something extraordinary. He believes there is 100 per cent. more box office appeal in these posters than in any others he ever put out.

"Among the superb posters for the early part of the season are those for the following special productions: Pearl White in 'The White Moll'; the six-reel Sunshine Comedy, 'Skirts'; William Farnum in 'If I Were King'; and 'While New York Sleeps'.

"For Pearl White in 'The White Moll' there will be one 24-sheet stand, two styles six-sheet, 3 styles three-sheet, three styles one-sheet, two styles window cards and one-half-sheet snipes.

"The 24-sheet stand is a striking example of the finest lithographic art work in multiple colors, depicting the head of Miss White as Rhoda, the White Moll, with the sinister face of Gypsy Nan alongside. A brass band wouldn't get any more business than will this 24-sheet if the exhibitor uses it in liberal quantities. The true showman will have it on every available space.

"The six-sheets, the three-sheets and the one-sheets all are built along the same attractive, box-office lines. They will outpull competing posters on the same board with them.

"As regards 'Skirts', this is a big, rip-roaring six-reel comedy. It cost a tremendous sum to make, but it will make tremendous money for exhibitors. 'I went down to the bank theatre to see that Fox comedy 'Skirts' and I couldn't get in. What a crowd!' This will be often heard. Go after that crowd. Put these posters in every available place. They are artistic. They are decorative. They will add tone to a town. People will know the exhibitor is up to date.

"For 'Skirts' there are one style twenty-four-sheet; two styles six-sheet, three styles three-sheet four styles, one-sheet, two styles window card and one style cut-out.

"All precedents and traditions of the lithographers have been thrown to the winds, and in the display for 'Skirts' is to be found a brand-new note in printing to exploit a comedy picture. Famous French and Continental artists had a hand in the creation of the posters, and the results are bizarre, startlingly colorful and Frenchy in conception.

"The twenty-four-sheet, for instance, is a riot of color, the skirts of six girls blowing in the wind. The poster reminds one forcibly of 'gay Paree'. There never has been a poster more attractive and unusual than this one. A blind man would hesitate while passing it.

"One six-sheet shows the famous Singer Midgets, vaudeville's great drawing card, with the 'Old Lady Who Lived in a Shoe'; while the other is a Parisian creation showing a group of girls descending a flight of steps with the wind playing naughtily with their skirts.

"One three-sheet shows a famous Fox Sunshine comedian holding the entire troupe of Singer Midgets on a tray. This for the kiddies as well as for their mothers and fathers.

"Another three-sheet drawn by a famous French artist shows a bathing girl. Stunning. Beautiful. It is done in six colors. There is no use going into wordy detail about this one. When the exhibitor sees it he will have more and better things to say about it than will fill the walls of his lobby. As a matter of fact, if an exhibitor can't possibly use all these posters, he'll have a mighty hard job deciding which he will omit.

"For William Farnum in 'If I Were King', the artists have cleverly captured the romantic atmosphere of Justin Huntly McCarthy's brilliant story of that delightful vagabond poet, Francois Villon, in the time of Louis the Eleventh of France.

"The twenty-four-sheet is a masterly portrait of William Farnum in color, surrounded by four figures, also in color, of Farnum as Villon and in rich silks and velvets as the Grand Constable of France.

"A theatre manager can make no mistake in using all these 'If I Were King' posters. They have pull. They will start the lines from the billboard to the box office. They will inevitably fulfill their sole mission—to crowd the theatre.

"Because 'While New York Sleeps' is an unusual picture, the money-making possibilities of which are unlimited, the Fox company has done an unusual thing. It has put out 24-sheet stands in addition to one style of six-sheet, two styles of three-sheet, three styles of one-sheet, two styles of window cards and one-half sheet snipe.

"One 24-sheet stand is divided into three scenes, just as 'While New York Sleeps' is divided into three phases of New York life after dark. The central figure is that of a showgirl in a gorgeous gown. This showgirl symbolizes the Broadway night life, with its hectic lure and its joy minus foresight. On the right is shown high society, puffing its cigarette, while the bright lights sparkle over the scene. Then comes the life among the poor, where is both wickedness and goodness, where the joy of life is as keen as in the moneyed districts, and where tragedy, gaunt and persistent, is ever stalking.

"The other twenty-four sheet shows artistically a sensational fight on the river between police and river thieves, small lights showing the outline of the big bridge behind which the lights again give an outline of the city.

"One three-sheet has the dance of death. Another shows a worthless husband, thought dead, returning to blackmail his wife who has remarried. These posters give an indication of the picture. Everybody wants to see the sights of New York, and in 'While New York Sleeps' they get these in overflowing abundance.

"In addition to this wonderful big pulling paper, are exploitation campaign and press books, and some especially fine lobby display cards.

"Altogether the Fox company has supplied the exhibitor with material for tremendous campaigns on its early special productions of the year. The pictures are big in entertaining power.

"Similar expert attention has been paid to posters and campaign material on the William Farnum, Pearl White and Tom Mix star series features, as well as on the Shirley Mason, William Russell, George Walsh, Buck Jones, Eileen Percy and Louise Lovely productions.

"No greater line of pictorial printing ever has been made than that for the great Fox serial, 'Bride 13'. Every subject is a knockout. One twenty-four sheet can be used for the entire serial, and with each of the fifteen episodes there will be one one-sheet, one three-sheet, one six-sheet.

"A thirty-six-page exploitation book has been printed. This is unique—the most complete ever issued on a serial."

Fox's August Release Schedule

WILLIAM FOX opens the new season with the announcement of three specials for release during August pictures which the producer predicts will score in spite of hot weather. The first of these is 'The White Moll', written by Frank L. Packard, author of 'The Miracle Man', and it will serve as the initial Fox feature for Pearl White. Miss White has been long heralded in production, it being not only her debut under the Fox banner but her first departure from the serial field.

The following statement has been issued from the Fox Film headquarters in connection with Miss White's stellar vehicle and the other productions now on the Fox release schedule:

"The production is in a prologue and five acts, and the megaphone was in the capable hands of Harry Millarde. E. Lloyd Sheldon made the screen adaptation from Mr. Packard's story. A cast of striking strength supports Miss White, including Richard C. Travers, J. Thornton Baston, Walter Lewis, William Harvey, Eva Gordon, C. J. Slattery, and John P. Wade. 'The White Moll' was acclaimed by a large audience of exhibitors, writers for trade and daily papers, magazine and special writers, stars, directors, and producers at a recent special showing at B. F. Keith's

Palace theatre, New York, as the greatest motion picture achievement up to date for 1920.

"The second special to be released in August is the much discussed Sunshine Comedy de luxe 'Skirts'. This is in six reels—and here William Fox has established a precedent in the manufacture of film comedies which will doubtless be followed. This is the sort of comedy which will please everyone, for it contains every element that goes to create laughs and thrills. Conceived and written by Supervising Director Hampton Del Ruth, 'Skirts' is jammed with funny situations. A great feature of this comedy is the famous Singer Midget troupe, with their menagerie. These clever little folk have toured the country in vaudeville over the Keith circuit, and are known to the patrons everywhere for their mirth-provoking antics.

"The cast of principals in 'Skirts' includes the famous comedian Clyde Cook (late of the New York Hippodrome), 'Slim' Sumner, Ches-Conklin, Tom Kennedy, Harry Gribbon, Harry Booker, Laura Varrie, Alta Allen, Ethel Teare, Glen Cavender, Bobbie Dunn, and other accomplished funmakers. A large ensemble of Sunshine Widows part in this gigantic spectacle, which has all the sensational features of a three-ring circus, all the color of a musical comedy, and the wit and humor of the best vaudeville.

"Last, but far from least, of the specials for August is a magnificent screen version of Justin Huntly McCarthy's famous stage success and novel 'If I Were King', with William Farnum as the star. The scenario was carefully and skillfully handled by E. Lloyd Sheldon, and the direction was in the capable hands of the veteran J. Gordon Edwards. Perhaps the greatest tribute yet paid to 'If I Were King' was that of the author, who viewed it at a private screening in London. 'Wonderful—simply wonderful; I could almost believe that I was hearing Mr. Farnum speak,' said Mr. McCarthy.

Other Fox feature productions to be released during August are 'The Man Who Dared', with William Russell, 'The Little Wanderer' with Shirley Mason, 'Her Honor the Mayor' with Eileen Percy, 'Firebrand Trevison' and 'The Square-Shooter' (both starring Buck Jones), 'The Rose of Nome' with Gladys Brockwell and five Sunshine comedies. The comedy subjects are as follows: 'Slipping Feet', 'Virtuous Husbands', 'Mary's Little Lobster', 'A Waiter's Wasted Life' and 'Kiss Me Quick'.

The Fox Directorial Staff : : : : : : : : :

WILLIAM FOX'S constant objective is the ideal director. In announcing his directorial staff for the opening of the new year he presents a list of names that certainly should command the confidence of exhibitors throughout the country. The list follows:

In the Eastern field: Richard Stanton, Harry Millarde, Charles J. Brabin, Charles Giblyn, George A. Beranger, Dell Henderson.

On the West Coast: J. Gordon Edwards, Howard M. Mitchell, Lynn F. Reynolds, Emmett J. Flynn, Scott Dunlap, Edward J. LeSaint, Paul Cazeneuve, Thomas N. Heffron, James P. Hogan and Hampton Del Ruth, supervising a corps of subordinate directors.

Mr. Edwards is the dean of the Fox directorial staff. He has given to the public up to date forty-three Fox pictures. J. Gordon Edwards was responsible for the following great screen sensations: "Cleopatra," and "Salome"; for "Camille," "Du Barry," "The Soul of Buddha," "The Light," "The Siren's Song," "A Woman There Was," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Wolves of the Night," "The Last of the Duanees," "The Lone Star Ranger," "Heart Strings," "Wings of the Morning," and more recently "The Adventurer," "The Orphan" and "The Joyous Troublemaker."

Richard Stanton is a name known of all men in the film industry, as that of a director powerfully imaginative in conception and bold into recklessness in execution. With Fox he has placed the stamp of his genius upon "The Beast" (which he wrote), "The Scarlet Pimpernel," "The Spy," "Durand of the Bad Lands," "Responsibility," "Rough and Ready," "The She Tiger," "Sink or Swim," "The Land of the Free," "The Jungle Trail," "Why I Would Not Marry," that remarkable photodrama, "The Caillaux Case," the sensational success, "Checkers," and others.

A man of prodigious capacity for work and artistic detail is Edward J. Le Saint, one with a list of successes to his credit of which he is justly proud. Among his Tom Mix triumphs are "The Feud," "The Speed Maniac," "The Wilderness Trail," "Hell Roarin' Reform" and "Fighting for Gold." Also in his list of popular productions are "The Mother of His Children," "White Lies," "The Call of the Soul," "Flames of the Flesh," "The Strange Woman," "The Sneak," the recent work, "A Sister to Salome" and "Kulture"—a picture which captured the country two years ago.

Charles J. Brabin can be author, actor or director, as occasion may require, and can be all three simultaneously in an emergency. His earliest success with Fox was "Buchanan's Wife." "Thou Shalt Not," was a big hit. To "La Belle Russe," the great Belasco stage play, he gave added force as a Fox film production. Mr. Brabin has just completed the special all-star production, entitled, "While New York Sleeps."

No man could be more thoroughly equipped for successful wielding of the megaphone than is Howard M. Mitchell. Since joining the Fox organization he has been responsible for the direction of "Black Shadows," "Snares of Paris," "A Girl in Bohemia," "The Tattlers," "Molly and I" and "Love's Harvest."

Scott Dunlap ("Scotty") is known and his ability highly esteemed, not only throughout the United States, but in every foreign land where pictures are shown. Among his works are "The Hell Ship," "Vagabond Luck," "Love Is Love," "The Lost Princess," "Would You Forgive?" "Forbidden Trails," "Twins of Suffering Creek" and that dainty picture of circus life made by Shirley Mason, "Her Elephant Man."

Dell Henderson was associated with Charles Frohman and has wielded the megaphone for Biograph, Triangle, Famous Players and World. With Fox he has achieved signal success in handling George Walsh in "The Dead Line" and "The Shark."

Emmett J. Flynn's pictures include "Leave It to Me," "Shod with Fire," "Eastward Ho!" and "The Lincoln Highwayman." Harry Millarde's work in directorial field includes "Every Girl's Dream," "Miss U. S. A.," "Sunshine Maid," "Blue-Eyed Mary," "Bonnie Annie Laurie," "Caught in the Act," "Miss Innocence," "Gambling in Souls," "Rose of the West" and "Sacred Silence."

Charles Giblyn is a newcomer with Fox, but he has completed "Tiger's Cub," an Alaskan story starring Pearl White. George A. Beranger has directed for Griffith, Mutual, has been leading man with Blanche Sweet, Bessie Love and Louise Huff, and co-starred with Constance Talmadge. He made a distinct success with his first Fox picture, "A Manhattan Knight," with George Walsh.

Another newcomer is Thomas N. Heffron, who has directed for Fox "Firebrand Trevison," a Western sizzler by Charles Alden Seltzer, and Hampton Del Ruth—the tireless and resourceful builder of Fox Sunshine Comedies, who is probably responsible for more wholesome mirth from the Atlantic to the Pacific than any other man in the motion picture industry.

Fox News, World-Wide in Scope : : : : :

ONE of the most notable events in the past year's motion picture history is the remarkable growth of Fox News. Launched in October, 1919, in the face of the strongest opposition and against the seemingly unanimous prediction that another news-reel could not exist, Fox News has steadily forced its way to the front until it is now unequivocally recognized as a leader if not the dominant factor in the news-reel field.

William Fox from the moment he conceived the idea of a news reel until the present day has shown a progressiveness of spirit in this venture that was bound to show results. Each succeeding week has marked a new step forward and each succeeding issue has reflected the benefit derived from these culminating steps.

Right from the beginning a gigantic task confronted Mr. Fox, and Mr. Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, in organizing the Fox News reel staff. Other news-reels had been in the field four to six years and had pretty well corralled all the news-reel men, but difficulties only added zest to the game. It was necessary to literally comb the world to find the men they wanted but they succeeded in getting together a force of the most highly trained news-reel executives and a domestic camera staff of eighty-two men. Since then this camera staff, in the United States and Canada, has been increased to one hundred and six men, the largest—in fact almost double the number of men—engaged by any other news reel, according to Fox statements.

October 11th was the birthday of the Fox News, and it got off with a flying start. In his conception of a news-reel William Fox had an additional purpose to the obvious one of promoting a great screen newspaper. He outlined this purpose in a personal letter to Woodrow Wilson, in which he told the president that one of the big drawbacks of Fox News was an endeavor to preserve universal peace and bind together in a spirit of harmony all the nations of the world. In his reply, President Wilson heartily endorsed Mr. Fox's idea.

Mr. Fox realized that no better service could be rendered to the cause of peace than by instructing all peoples in the ways of their neighbors—and that there was no more efficient way of doing this than through the medium of a news-reel.

Mr. Fox then started a campaign in his news-reel on behalf of soldiers crippled in the Big War. In a wonderful series of twelve pictures, covering twelve weeks, he pointed out that the people were forgetting and that the Government was allowing the soldiers' needs to go unfulfilled. These pictures had such a tremendous moral effect that congressional investigation was called into the work of the Federal Board of Vocational Education—the government department charged with looking after wounded soldiers—which resulted in materially bettering conditions.

In response to the appeal of Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, to the motion-picture producers to assist the Government in its Americanization Campaign, Fox News started the first of a series of pointed and spirited paragraphs on the benefit of being an American.

In November, 1919, the Canadian edition of Fox News was organized with headquarters at Toronto, Canada, and at about the same time a South American edition, with headquarters at Rio de Janeiro, came into being. Each of these offices was put in charge of a news-reel expert and he, in turn, went after and secured cameramen whose reputations answered for their progressiveness, initiative and the photographic excellence of their work.

In April the British Fox News was inaugurated by Winfield R. Sheehan, on a visit to Europe, and a staff of cameramen, comprising about thirty men, was gathered in Europe and Asia.

Next came a special edition in Australia, with headquarters in Sydney, and a Cuban edition with headquarters in Havana.

Today Fox News has correspondents literally all over the world—some of the remote places being Alaska, the South Sea Islands, Tokio, Shanghai and Algiers.

Every means of locomotion known is used, as the occasion arises, to expedite the delivery of negative to laboratories equipped with every modern developing and printing device known to science.

And the entire organization of the Fox Film Corporation—with branch offices and agencies in every civilized country on the globe—distributes these prints to exhibitors while the news is still red hot.

Edwards to Direct Fox Pictures in East

J. Gordon Edwards, popularly known as the "dean of the Fox directorial staff," has just returned to New York from the West Coast Studios, where he directed William Farnum in a number of Fox successes during the past year. He will continue work with Mr. Farnum in the new Fox studios in West 55th Street.

Mr. Edwards, long an actor and stage manager, was the first director named by William Fox when the latter decided to enter the picture producing field. Since that time he has staged forty-three Fox pictures, among them some of the greatest screen successes both artistically and financially, ever produced—classics like "Cleopatra," "Salome," "Camille," "Du Barry," and William Farnum in "A Tale of Two Cities," "Wolves of the Night," "The Last of the Duanees," "The Lone Star Ranger," and "Wings of the Morning."

Farnum Returns from West Coast Studios

William Farnum, the romantic star of William Fox, has returned to New York from the West Coast Studios, where he recently completed "Drag Harlan," under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. Mr. Farnum will start work in the new Fox Studio building in New York.

Fox Pictures in Canada : : : : : : : :

"THE resources of Canada have only been scratched" is a statement often made about that vast country north of the United States. And it is probably true that the motion picture possibilities have only been scratched. Yet the Fox Film Corporation, broadening each year in Canada, cannot complain of the splendid welcome its motion pictures have received there.

The Fox Company has more than scratched the surface. It has dug down deep and planted its organization on a solid foundation. It found in Canada, as it has in other countries, that if you give the people what they want and give the exhibitor a fair deal and help him make money, your success is assured.

William Fox knew of the big demand for his pictures before he was ready to go into the Canadian field. Finally he decided in 1915 to begin operations there to supply this demand. He opened an office in Montreal. In a few weeks that office found it couldn't handle the business coming in so Mr. Fox established offices in Toronto and St. John.

At that time Western Canada was being supplied with Fox films

through an agency. The Fox officials from experience know that there is nothing that succeeds so well in business as personal contact, so last year three offices were organized to handle the vast country westward to the coast. One branch was opened in Winnipeg, another in Calgary and the third in Vancouver. Experienced men were sent into this territory to start the direct service business for Fox and they selected three Canadians as branch managers. All of these branches are under Vincent J. McCabe, who as district manager, has his headquarters in Toronto.

In addition to these service offices, the Fox Company has cameramen in all parts of Canada. These men photograph the many important events that take place there all year round and send their film to New York where it is incorporated in the Fox News and is sent not only throughout the United States and Canada but throughout the world.

The Fox Company believes in the big future that lies before Canada and believes also that it is helping in that progressive stride—helping to give the best amusement and helping to show the world through its Fox News just what is happening in Canada and show the big steps in its growth.

All of the big Fox pictures are shown in Canada and in many instances Fox films have hung up new attendance records. "Checkers" for one example did a tremendous business for exhibitors all over the Canadian territory. It played Vancouver for a three weeks' run. It was a good clean thrilling race horse picture and the Canadians, like their cousins in the mother country, Great Britain, love racing and will go to any theatre showing such a picture. They crowded too to see "Should a Husband Forgive?" another racing picture with a good modern worthwhile story behind it.

William Farnum, a favorite the world over, has a tremendous following in Canada. Exhibitors have cashed in big on his pictures ever since he began making them for William Fox. In Canada today, just as in Great Britain, William Farnum's name is enough to fill any theatre.

Tom Mix too has taken a big hold on the fancies of these Westerners. He shows them tricks they glory in and his riding down mountain sides and his horsemanship and his work with the rope gives them the very thrill they are looking for.

Another Fox star that is making rapid strides in Canada is Shirley Mason. Of course Miss Mason is new in Fox pictures but from her first picture "Her Elephant Man" she has gained admittance into first run houses.

William Russell, also new to Fox showmen, is winning his way into the hearts of the Canadians according to the reports coming to Mr. McCabe from all over Canada and these reports mean advance bookings.

One feat of which Mr. Fox will always be proud is that he made Longfellow's poem Evangeline and when he showed it to audiences in Evangeline territory it gained their approval. In fact Evangeline was rich pickings for exhibitors in that territory particularly.

The work of managing and serving the Canadian territory is not an easy one. The ground to be covered is vast and transportation to some of the places that demand Fox pictures is not always of the best. Sometimes dog sleds must be used to transport films.

Popular in Great Britain : : : : : : : :

THE demand for Fox films is growing throughout the British Isles. Both exhibitors and critics admit that the Fox pictures that have been and are being shown weekly to the trade are the kind of films the British public demands. And not only do the exhibitors declare that Fox pictures are satisfying their patrons but they are offering increased prices for fear their competitors will get them.

Exhibitors admit freely, it is reported, that they can do bigger business with the Fox brand. The British exhibitor is becoming more of a showman every day and he wants showman's pictures. The fact that the Fox product is in demand is taken as testimony to the worth of Fox pictures. Because at the present time there is really a lack of cinemas in the country due to the war, the motion picture public has increased to such an extent that the limited number of cinemas cannot satisfactorily provide for them. Such a situation naturally would allow exhibitors to pick anything they want and name their price, without regard to whether or not the pictures were showman's pictures. But the British exhibitors are looking ahead to the day when there will be more cinemas and when competition will be keener and they are building now for the future.

The London office, which is now in charge of F. W. Mordaunt Hall, as managing director, is constantly in receipt of letters from exhibitors who claim that since they have used Fox pictures they never have to worry what their competitor is showing, and others declare they had hard rows to hoe until they contracted for the Fox output.

The big increase in bookings recently attests the fact that Fox pictures are getting bigger and better. During last winter and this spring the trade shows have been notable. "Evangeline" received a splendid reception and following that in quick succession came William Russell in "Sacred Silence," Tom Mix in "Speed Maniac," William Farnum in "Last of the Duanees," "Checkers," "Wolves of the Night," "Should a Husband Forgive?" "Rough Riding Romance," "The Feud," "If I Were King," Shirley Mason in "Her Elephant Man," Mix again in "The Cyclone," Buck Jones in "The Last Straw," Shirley Mason in "Molly and I," William Farnum in "The Orphan," and many others.

Big Fox pictures have been released so fast that exhibitors, some of whom are booked up to September and October, 1921, held dates open for Fox releases, and others again shifted their bookings so that they could get Fox films on release dates.

Reports on Shirley Mason's first picture "Her Elephant Man" had seeped through from America and the exhibitors in Great Britain waited expectantly for this picture and when they saw it they put their stamp of approval on it. The presentation of "If I Were King" from the great stage success and novel by Justin Huntly McCarthy, was a notable occasion.

"Checkers" too has made a big hit in Great Britain. It is a racing story and the British public love a good horse race. And in addition to the race horse element it had in it a romance that was thrilling in itself. The same was true of

"Should a Husband Forgive," another racing story that has drawn tremendous bookings.

Tom Mix is a big favorite in Great Britain. The British players like him and his western ways. His horse Tony is the subject of many articles in the fan magazines and Tom's western wisdom is engaging to the Britisher.

William Farnum is of course always an outstanding favorite. He represents men as the British like to see him, big honest, afraid of nothing, a fighter, and a lover of fair play. Buck Jones walked into a fine niche in the hearts of the British public when he was shown in his first picture "The Last Straw." "The Square Shooter" helped him along more and he is accepted as a good exhibitor's bet already.

William Russell too made a big hit in his first production under the

Tom Mix in his latest feature on the Fox program, "The Untamed"

Fox banner. That was "Sacred Silence." And he followed this up with "Eastward Ho" and "The Lincoln Highwayman," which were booked by many before the trade shows.

British exhibitors are anxious about Pearl White. "When will we get her first picture?" is a question often asked of the Fox office in London and in the branch offices. Several exhibitors have offered deposits on the first Pearl White dramatic production. They want it on release date and they don't want their competitors to have anything to say about that picture.

The opening of the new Fox Film Building at 13 Berners Street, London, has added to the strength of the Fox product because it showed the exhibitors that Fox business was expanding so fast that these big imposing quarters were necessary to give the ever-growing number of Fox exhibitors the rapid and careful service they not only demand but for which the Fox Company in Great Britain is noted.

Pearl Doles Bell, Fox Author, on Coast

Among the persons prominent in the industry who left New York for the Pacific Coast last week was Pearl Doles Bell, novelist and short-story writer associated with Fox Film Corporation as staff writer. Mrs. Bell is on her way to Hollywood and its film colony to make the acquaintance of Shirley Mason, the little Fox star who made her debut under Fox in one of this writer's stories, "Her Elephant Man."

William Farnum as Francois Villon : : :

THE appearance of William Farnum in the role of Francois Villon in the screen version of Justin Huntley McCarthy's famous novel, "If I Were King," is made the subject of a statement just issued from the headquarters of the Fox Film Corporation. The Fox statement follows:

"As Francois Villon in 'If I Were King,' a Fox special production, William Farnum adds another to the long list of notable impersonations which have made his name famous not only among regular patrons of motion picture theatres, but among those whose interests are first with literature and the stage.

"It has been Mr. Farnum's privilege, during his long career on the screen under the management of William Fox, to play many of the greatest roles in history and romance. These classic interpretations have been of direct benefit not only to the exhibitors who have reaped their harvest, but to the entire film industry. They have drawn to the screen interest of a sort that without Farnum might never have been attracted. Great literary and dramatic critics, who had hitherto ignored the photoplay as a cultural factor, have admitted that Farnum had caused them to change their minds, and they have hastened to give recognition to the new art. The influence of this is being felt today throughout the industry.

"As one treasures in stage memory the outstanding achievements of Booth and Barrett and others—their Hamlets, their Richards, their Wolseys, their Richelieus—so is cherished also Farnum's Sidney Carton, Farnum's Jason, Farnum's Charles Darnay, Farnum's Jean Valjean, Farnum's Don Caesar de Bezan, Farnum's Francois Villon. Here are the classics of the screen that will not die.

"Each of these historic and romantic figures that Farnum made live on the screen had previously captained the imagination of millions of people—readers and playgoers in all parts of the world. Jean Valjean is enthroned in the heart of everybody who has read Victor Hugo's masterpiece, 'Les Miserables'; the name of Darnay and Carton are on the lips of all Dickens lovers; Don Caesar is the hero of the great multitude of people who have read his dramatic story in books, seen it on the stage in the plays of Hugo, Dumas and Denney, heard it in the operas of Wallace and Massenet.

"As for Francois Villon, he is the type of the Beloved Vagabond. Even those who have read not a single line of his poetry, except perhaps the imperishable line, 'Where are the Snows of Yesterday?' have heard enough of his life story to kindle their imagination and whet their appetite for more.

"Villon has been immortalized by Robert Louis Stevenson in the short-story classic, 'A Lodging for the Night.' Andrew Lang, translator of the poems, has given the world a never-to-be-forgotten picture of the most picturesque rogue of the Middle Ages. It was left to Justin Huntley McCarthy, the great historical novelist, to gather together the fragmentary and legendary lore that surrounds the figure of Villon and to present it in the form of a rounded narrative.

"Mr. McCarthy's success was instantaneous. First as a play, with E. H. Sothern in the role of Villon, and then as a novel, 'If I Were King' won added renown for the author. A print of the Fox film 'If I Were King' was shown to Mr. McCarthy in London recently. He was enthusiastic. In a personal letter to Mr. William Fox he wrote:

"The triumph of the film was William Farnum's interpretation of the part of Francois Villon. Humor, poetry, rascality, gallantry, vigor, passion, tragedy, played in their turn upon William Farnum's face, so eloquent in its worldless action that I could almost believe I was hearing William Farnum's voice."

"Not only in adventure and romance has William Farnum shone. As Stephen Orry and Jason in Hall Caine's masterpiece, 'The Bondman,' he had two roles not only widely different from each other, but different in all respects from anything he had done before, yet he achieved tremendous success, and the Fox Film version of 'The Bondman' has taken its place in the library of screen classics.

"Here, as in many of his productions, Farnum was surrounded by what was virtually an all-star cast, yet he stood head and shoulders above them all. One scene in the 'Bondman' was hailed at the time as the supreme triumph of William Farnum's career, and Hall Caine himself congratulated the actor upon his splendid work, even as Justin Huntley McCarthy has done in the case of 'If I Were King.'"

Pearl White in "The White Moll" : : :

PERHAPS no stratum of society has been surrounded by so much of romantic tradition as the underworld. Tales have been told of inflexible codes of "honor among thieves," of "palships" unto death, of heroic self-sacrifice in the appalling atmosphere of squalor and crime—all tending to give glamor and color to the life of the slums. Sometimes such tales have been correct, but more often they have been wide of the mark.

"The White Moll," in which William Fox presents Pearl White for the first time under his management and in which she makes her first appearance in a special feature production, is a drama of the half-world, which expert judges have declared to be perfect in atmosphere, flawless in characterization. In fact, criminologists of international repute, who have read Frank L. Packard's powerful story in book form and who have witnessed the screen version of it, have agreed that here is a truly remarkable uncolored presentation of life beneath the conventional.

In a statement just issued from its headquarters, the Fox Film Corporation describes its latest production in the following language:

"The White Moll" is considered by Frank L. Packard, its author, and by many critics, to be the most powerful novel he has written—an extraordinary story of underworld existence. And in its translation to the screen, through the scenario by E. Lloyd Sheldon, William Fox has sacrificed nothing of the stupendous force found in the printed word, while adding the vivid effect of faithful visualization.

"The White Moll," in which Pearl White, daring darling of thrills, plays the title role, in the story of a girl who went wrong, saw the light, and fought her way back against tremendous odds. She was a thief, and the daughter of a thief; and she hated with all the fierce intensity of her kind. Her creed was revenge. It was stamped on her heart. Thus evened, she exacted her toll from society by crime.

"This character—that Packard created—a character of unrelieved bitterness and unfettered passion—a character not only unredeemed, but apparently unredeemable. And then one night it came to her—and in a way that will remain a classic of redemption—that she was headed the wrong way. And she began to fight her way back.

"Stage and the screen have recorded many superbly great dramatic moments, but none surpassing this scene in gripping and electrifying force. It must be remembered that the girl was adamant to ordinary opportunities, the motive for halting her headlong rush toward destruction had to be absolutely convincing. That is what Packard achieved. He conceived a scene that is unique in detail and supreme in appeal.

"The White Moll" sets forth with engrossing interest the desperate struggles and trials of this girl after she resolves not only to lead a new life, but to help others climb out of the slough of despond and the mire of crime. She encounters evil and cunning enmity sufficient to daunt all save the bravest heart. But in the end she proves strong enough to win out.

"Unlike many an underworld story, the atmosphere of 'The White Moll' is not incidental. It is all-important, and is delineated with the bold, broad strokes of a master hand. It is true to the life—not only as known to the general public—but as known only to the criminal and the criminologist. The latter will find in this photoplay fertile ground for observation.

"Pearl White, former serial queen, is superb in this her first complete one-performance screen production. She has brought to 'The White Moll' a dramatic quality she never before has had an opportunity to display. Her work in her initial Fox entertainment stamps her indubitably as a dramatic star of the highest order.

"The cast supporting Miss White is an ideal one, furnishing the proper balance for the star. It includes some of the best-known people on the screen, selected not only for their historic ability, but also for types. The photography is perfect, and the direction by Harry Millarde is among his best efforts.

"Considering all the fine points and fine lights of 'The White Moll,' it should become one of the outstanding box office successes of the coming year."

GOLDWYN

PRODUCTION activities at Goldwyn studio this week includes putting in production the sixth Edgar child comedy. This production is laid in a zoo and one of the biggest on teh coast has been leased for use of director E. Mason Hopper. The three children who have appeared in previous Edgar stories are continuing in this number.

After a wait of five weeks the Reginald Barker company filming the "Black Pawl" secured a storm at sea on the Santa Cruz Islands which scenes completed this picture.

Harry Beaumont will have Naomi Childers as leading woman and Sylvia Ashton is one of the principal character players for the next Tom Moore production "The Caravan" which was put in the making this week.

Other pictures now in the making are "Head Over Heels" with Mabel Normand and "Just Out of College" with Jack Pickford under the direction of Al Green.

Howard Dietz, manager of the Goldwyn New York office publicity and advertising department, who has been on the coast for two weeks left for New York this week.

J. A. Jackson, formerly of the New York World staff, has been brought to the coast and will serve as one of the writers for the studio department which continues under the direction of J. Stewart Woodhouse.

FIRST NATIONAL

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week of the title selected for the first Allan Holubar-Dorothy Phillips production which is to be known as "Man, Woman and Marriage." This production has been in the making for more than a month now and it probably will be two months more before all the scenes are photographed.

Definite statement was given out by Richard Willis, general manager of the Charles Ray studio, respecting the Ray releases. The first of these will be "Forty-Five Minutes from Broadway" now completed so far as the making of scenes is concerned, under the direction of Joseph de Grass. The second release will be "Peaceful Valley" from the Sol Smith Russell stage play which has been completed for several months, it being the first subject made by Mr. Ray and his organization for First National. The third release is to be "Smudge" which is an original photoplay especially written for Ray by Rob Wagner. The scenario is being prepared by Isabelle Johnson. Mr. Willis is responsible for the statement that "Smudge" will be the greatest "riot" of Ray's career.

At the Lewis B. Mayer studio final scenes for the Anita Stewart production "Sowing the Wind" are now being made by John M. Stall. This play is from the successful stage one by Sidney Grundy.

Mildred H. Chaplin is completing work in the Tom Barry allegorical drama "Habit" under the direction of Edwin Carew and upon completion of this she will leave the

News Notes from the West Coast

By J. C. JESSEN

studio for a vacation which will continue the remainder of the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter de Haven continue on "Twin Beds" the Margarite Mayo stage success under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham and Marshall Neilan is giving his time to the editing of the picture featuring Westley Barry titled "Dinty."

Sidney Franklyn of Mayflower organization has begun the filming of "Parrot & Co." adapted from the Harold McGrath story of the same title. Sylvia Breamer is to be featured in this and Richard Dix will play the opposite role. Dix is probably better known in Los Angeles than in the east as he was leading man for Morosco here for many months. The Franklyn company is now making scenes for this production aboard ocean liners between Los Angeles and San Francisco.

Other productions for First National now completed are three by Allan Dwan, two by Katherine MacDonald company, "What Women Love" by Sol Lesser starring Annette Kellerman and "The Jackknife Man" from the Ellis Parker Butler story filmed by King Vidor.

A cast composed of Edmund Lowe, Claire Du Brey, Thomas Jefferson, Howard Gaye, Helena

Phillips and Lenore Lynard have been engaged by general manager Sam Rork of the Katherine MacDonald company for the coming production "The Second Latchkey." Edwin Carew is to direct this production instead of David M. Hartford who found it impossible to complete his work at the James Oliver Curwood productions offices at Universal city. "The Second Latchkey" is from the story of that name by C. N. and A. M. Williamson.

BRUNTON

TELEGRAMS received from Otto Bollman, president of the Dial Film Company, at offices of the company at the Brunton studio are to the effect that he has purchased screen rights for two novels and three magazine serials and filming of one of these will be started upon his arrival in Los Angeles under the direction of Roy S. Clements. Margaret De La Motte has been added to the cast for the Bessie Barriscale production of "Broken Gate" which is adapted from the Emerson Hough novel.

Director George Baker and the Marion Davies company left the Brunton studio this week for La Jolla where many of the water scenes for the modern pirate story "Buried Treasure" are to be filmed.

The Robert Brunton organization is to produce a serial starring Ruth Roland for Pathe which is to be titled "Broadway Bab." George Marshall is to direct this serial and work has been started at the Brunton plant.

Final editing of the Allan Dwan Mayflower production "The Sin of Martha Qued" has been completed and the negative and sample print were shipped to the New York office of the Mayflower this week.

FOX

THIS is between picture period for the three Fox stars, William Russell, Shirley Mason and Buck Jones and the William Farum company have just completed their most recent subject, a western titled "Drag Harlan." Mr. Farum is leaving for the East within the next few days and his future productions will be made at the New York Fox studio.

Director Lynn Reynolds is back from Prescott with Tom Mix and company where many of the exteriors for the original story by Jules Furthman titled "The Texan" were filmed. Several weeks will now be spent at the studio making the interiors. Director Reynolds and his star, Mix, motored across the California desert a distance of 800 miles.

Director Howard M. Mitchell has begun the filming of the Edgar Franklin magazine story "Beware of the Bride" which will star Eileen Percy, and the Fox organization has selected an original photoplay by Barbara Deely, titled "The Little Gray Mouse", as the initial starring vehicle for Louise Lovely. Miss Lovely is now working opposite Lieut. Locklear in an aerial picture and upon completion of this will begin work under the direction of James Hogan.

The Sunshine comedy section conducted under the supervision of Hampton Del Ruth now has four units at work. Vin Moore is the most recent director to be added to this Staff and Slim Summerville with Del Lord as co-director is also a member of the directorial staff. Jack Blystone has just completed his second comedy with Clyde Cook, former Hippodrome comedian, and Roy Del Ruth is at work on a two-reel comedy with a number of the Fox comedians.

Sets are now being built for the second Hampton Del Ruth special feature comedy and filming is to start within the next fortnight. The first Del Ruth feature, titled "Skirts", which has been completed for a number of weeks, is ready to be set for release in the very early fall, possibly August.

VITAGRAPH

DETAILS of immediate production plans for Vitagraph were made known this week when it was announced that Director David Smith, whose most recent work was the production of the James Oliver Curwood story, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone", has for the past six weeks been doing the preparatory work necessary for the filming of the famous classic, "Black

Director John Ince and Edmund Lowe inspecting the "New York Christmas tree," appearing in "Someone in the House," a forthcoming Metro production Beauty". Rights on this story have been held by the Vitagraph company for a long time. No cast has been selected by Director Smith, but it is expected that filming will be started within two weeks.

The next William Duncan serial has been titled "The Wizard Spy Glass" and portions of this story and continuity have been received by the star director from President Albert E. Smith. While the technical staff of the studio is at work on the preparation of settings, Producer Duncan is selecting his cast for this serial which will be his sixth for Vitagraph. Edith Johnson is to continue as Duncan's leading woman.

The Jackson Gregory novel, "Lady Fingers", which is spoken of as one of the best sellers of recent years, has been purchased by Vitagraph as a vehicle for Earle Williams who will play in this under the direction of Chester Bennett upon the completion of his present subject, "The Romance Promoters". Helen Ferguson is now playing opposite Williams in his current production.

"The Hidden Danger" serial company directed by William Bertram is at work on its final episode. While making scenes for this, Joe Ryan, one of the co-stars, received minor injuries in doing a dive in a concrete tank which proved too shallow for his efforts. The accident did not cause any loss of time, although Ryan was badly cut.

Comedies made by Director Jesse Robbins, featuring Jimmy Aubrey, are to drop the former trade name of Big V brand shortly and beginning with the production now in the making will be known as Jimmy Aubrey comedies. The first of the new series, although in production, has not been named.

F. P.-LASKY

BY the first of the week all of the Famous Players-Lasky units will be at work, according to definite plans completed and made known at the studio this week. A number of weeks will be required by both Cecil B. and William C. de Mille for finishing the productions on which they are now working. No title has been announced for the Cecil B. production and William is at work on "His Friend and His Wife" adapted from the Cosmo Hamilton story by Olga Pjintzlan. A most unique setting consisting of a five room house of Spanish design is being used this week for scenes of "His Friend and His Wife" by Director de Mille with his cast, which includes Lois Wilson, Conrad Nagel, Jack Hole, Lila Lee and others.

Margaret Loomis has been engaged to play opposite Wallace Reid in his next production which will be "Always Audacious," scenario for which has been written by Tom Geraghty and which will be produced by Director James Cruze. The company is leaving this week for San Francisco where many of the exteriors will be made.

As soon as George H. Melford completes the interior scenes of the Opie Reed story, "The Jacklins", he will begin the filming of the William Vaughn Moody play, "The Faith Healer".

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle is to begin the filming under the direction of Joseph Henaberry of the George Barr McCutcheon story and play, "Brewster's Millions," from scenario by Walter Woods.

INCE

THE Ince plant is almost wholly deserted, the lack of producing activities being explained by the fact that this is vacation season for some of the players and that one of the companies is at Tia Juana to secure race track scenes for the Douglas McLean picture, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home", from the stage play by Charles Belmont Davis. This film which is being directed by Jack Nelson will give the star a part similar to the role he played in "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave", and the uniform which served for that play is being used by McLean in the present production. Agnes Christine Johnson, author of the continuity for "When Johnny Comes Marching Home", who was recently wedded to Frank Dacey, the author, and is now honeymooning in the East, will return to the Ince studio about September first.

Members of the photography staff of the Ince studio are very enthusiastic regarding new lighting and double exposure effects secured by Henry Sharpe, who is photographing the Ince Louis Joseph Vance special for Paramount Artercraft, titled "Beau Revel". The head of this department announces that some entirely new photographic features are to be introduced in this picture.

CARLETON

FINAL scenes are being made this week for the coming Lloyd Carleton production of the Clermont Photoplay Corporation which is to be released by the Selznick organization. This picture is a version of the Bradley King novel, "Beyond the Cross Roads", and features Ora Carew with an especially strong cast composed of W. Lawson Butt, Stewart Monroe, Frank Whitson, Melborne MacDowell and others. With the completion of this subject Miss Carew leaves the Carleton organization, having made a contract to appear in C. B. de Mille productions for Famous Players Lasky.

Director Carleton's next production will be "Hard Boiled Mabel", which is to be an adaptation from the George Weston story recently appearing in the Saturday Evening Post. Continuity for this story is now being prepared and the work of filming is to be started within two weeks.

GARSON

WHAT is described as a society drama laid in New York city and titled "Hush", has been completed at the Harry Garson studio and will be the next Clara Kimball Young offering. This photoplay is an original one written by Sada Cowan, author of "Why Change Your Wife", who is now a permanent member of the Garson studio scenario organization. Supporting Miss Young in this production are J. Frank Glendon, Bertram Grasby, Katherine Williams and Gerard Alexander. One of the big scenes of the photoplay is that of a tableau at a society function. In this tableau Miss Young will be seen as "Salome".

METRO

AFTER completing the work on "Billions" the Nazimova organization headed by Roy Smallwood, the director, has taken up the filming of "Madam Peacock" which is from a short story by Rita Weiman. George Probert, who played with Nazimova in a series of Ibsen productions in New York, has been selected as leading man for this production. Probert has a number of important leading men engagements in both stage and screen to his credit, his most recent releases being "The Slander," "Nedra" and "The King's Game."

Additional players have been engaged for Metro's special production "The Four Horsemen" to be filmed by Rex Ingram and a glance at the array of talent gives the impression that an effort is being made by this producing unit to get a corner on all star talent. Rudolph Valentino will appear as Julio Desnoyers, Alice Terry as Margarite, Allan Hale as Carl Von Hartrott and Pomeroy Cannon as the old Spanish ranchman and other leading roles are to be taken by Stuart Holmes, Joseph Swickard, Brinsley Shaw, Bridgetta Clark, Mabel Van Buren, Smoke Turner, Nigel De Brulier, John Sain Polis, Derrick Ghent, Edward Connelly and Jean Hersholt.

The three Keatons known in vaudeville for many years for their unusual speedy acrobatic act will all be seen in the forthcoming Buster Keaton Metro comedy. Buster is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Keaton and recently he had his parents come to the coast from Muskegon, Michigan, to make their home with him. One or two visits at the studio and the smell of grease paint was sufficient. The three former vaudeville favorites will be seen together in the next Keaton release "Convict 13" now in the making under the direction of Edward Cline.

In selecting cast for the initial Doraldina production "The Passion Fruit" Metro officers have chosen Edward Earle to be the famous dancer's leading man in her first Hawaiian subject. Earle has had a world of experience before the camera and some very big parts as leading man in Broadway productions. He has arrived on the coast ready for work. Another player selected for the Doraldina picture is Florence Turner who has been playing in "Blackmail" the Viola Dana feature now being made.

HERE AND THERE

Hoot Gibson and Leo Maloney are producing a short western drama titled "Hunkie" and Jacques Jaccard is doing the final editing on "The Forest Runners" which was filmed in Bear Lake valley and has the northern woods atmosphere. Horace Davies is directing the domestic comedy titled "Too Many Crooks."

Believing that new life can be added to photoplays by the introduction of new faces Thomas H. Ince has sent John H. Blackwood to New York to visit show shops and secure new talent to be brought to the coast for work in Ince Associated Producers releases. Blackwood is editor of the Ince scenario department and also has served as special business representative for Mr. Ince on a number of occasions. On this mission he is empowered to place under contract the most promising actresses now playing in New York or amateurs who give promise of having ability suitable for screen work.

Another duty of Blackwood's while in the East is to negotiate for screen rights on the most successful plays of the past and coming season. Blackwood will be in the East more than a month.

A series of six feature productions are to be made by the National Film Corporation of America, according to statement made by C. A. Willat, vice president and general manager, who this week returned from New York where he has been for the past month looking after important matters for the National.

The initial offering of the Ormsby Film Corporation was given its premier at the Philharmonic Auditorium (formerly Clunes) in Los Angeles, Monday, July 19, when "Neptune's Bride," written and directed by Capt. Lesley T. Peacock, was shown to the public for the first time.

The subject consists of about six reels and was presented with an elaborate prologue introducing some attractive classic dancers. The photoplay is adapted from the magazine story written by Peacock and published in England several years ago. The play introduces Roxy Armstrong as Pluvia, Neptune's new bride, supported by a big cast. The picture has an under-sea as well as summer resort atmosphere.

The corporation plan to give the production a New York presentation in the fall.

UNIVERSAL

THREE productions were put in the making at Universal City this week when the first scenes for "Kate Plus Ten" were filmed under the direction of Stuart Paton. "The Gilded Dream" directed by Rolin Sturgeon and "White Youth" by Norman Dawn.

Frederick Thompson has been engaged by Universal as director and he has begun the filming of "Black Friday" adapted for the screen by Wallace Clifton from the Frederick S. Isham story. Frank Mayo is to be starred in this subject and Ray Ripley will play the heavy. Dagmar Gadowsky has been cast for the role of an Oriental dancer. Lillian Tucker, former leading woman for the Oliver Morosco company in Los Angeles, has been engaged to play the leading role opposite Mayo. This is Mr. Thompson's first work on the coast with the exception of making a Prizma subject for a number of years, his previous affiliations being with Famous Players-Lasky.

Eva Novak is to be featured in "Kate Plus Ten" and Leonard C. Shumway who has been seen in a number of Universal subjects as leading man will play the opposite role.

The company producing "Foolish Wives" under the direction of Eric Von Stroheim spent the week at San Diego where exposition grounds and buildings were used for a number of foreign scenes. The Universal technical staff has built a French street set 800 ft. in length which will next be used by this company. From the Universal publicity office comes the rumor that the production will cost at least $300,000. Von Stroheim is to appear as the Russian prince, Rudolph Christians as leading man and Margaret Armstrong will be the featured leading woman. Others in this cast are Maude George, Mae Busch, Cesare Gravina, Mme. Koptelzy, Nigel de Brulier, Albert Edmundson, Edward Reinach, Dale Fuller and Malvena Polach.

The many trophies collected by William F. Adler during his tour through the Orient to secure scenics for Universal were used this week in a number of scenes laid in an African jungle which will appear in "Queen of Diamonds" serial which features Eileen Sedgwick.

Edna Ferber, short story writer, has been engaged by Universal to write special plays for Priscilla Dean and Carmel Myers and she is now working in collaboration with Lucien Hubbard and Douglas Doty.

Director Harry Franklyn is now editing "The Watchmaker" and Reeves Eason is directing the last scenes for "Out of the Sky" the circus feature which will star Gladys Walton.

Harry Carey is still on the desert securing scenes for "Sundown Slim" and director Tod Browning continues at work on the Priscilla Dean feature "Outside the Law" while Lyons and Moran are doing their final work for their third release "Once a Plumber—" from the Edgar Franklyn story of the same name.

"The King of the Circus" is the name selected for the Eddie Polo serial.

Fred J. Butler, director of the D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., has had twenty-five years' experience in the theatrical game. He was stage director for the Morosco Grand Opera House and the Alcazar theatre, San Francisco, and for the Morosco theatre in Los Angeles.

Mr. Butler has also directed under D. W. Griffith with whom he served for several years. He has just completed his work on the Schwab production, "Fickle Women," and is now engaged with the direction of the second Schwab picture, "Smilin' All the Way".

Sargent Sees Return of Original Script

George L. Sargent, the director of Alice Joyce's latest special feature, "The Prey," is a strong believer in the worth of original scenarios. Speaking of this, Mr. Sargent declares "The day of the original scenario written by a practical screen craftsman is coming back. The popular fallacy that a published book or play makes the best screen material is not founded upon fact. For instance, the two best stories that I have had in my experience as a director are both original scenarios. I refer to "The Prey" featuring Alice Joyce and "The Whisper Market" in which Corinne Griffith is the star."

Film Difficulties in England

(Editor's Note—Mr. Leslie Goodwins, who is now in America, studying production methods here, gives his opinions on "The Difficulties of Film-Making in England." Another article will follow at a later date, reciting some of the advantages to be experienced in film manufacturing on English soil. Thus both sides of the question will be presented to the News readers.)

TO those directors who have contemplated making the trip across the pond it is only fair to give some idea of what difficulties and hindrances they would encounter in an endeavor to make scenes in England.

First, the climatic conditions in England are notorious, and, from a film point of view, that is everything. It is possible (and many a time have I done it) to start out one beautiful summer's morning to a location but an hour's run away, and to find, when one gets there, that it is pouring with rain and no promise of lifting for the rest of the day. And that rain may keep on for two or three days on end, but, on the other hand, if one turns back to the studio, it may prove to be only a shower, and the sun is then shining as if it would never stop. That is the great fault of the English climate, it is so unreliable, due, I suppose to the fact that England is an island, and therefore subject to bad weather from any and every side. Many directors to whom I have spoken on this difficulty have suggested the obvious method of building the location in the studio. Obvious, yes, to an American director who has never seen an English studio! But that, however, brings us to the matter of studios, to which I will refer later.

Let us assume that the day is fine, and a suitable location is found. There remains but to get permission and all is clear. There in that word "permission" lies another difficulty. The English people have not been educated to realize that the film industry is the third greatest in the world, and, under the old precept that an "Englishman's home is his castle," they are very chary about permitting a crowd of actors to invade the sanctuary of their grounds and it is possible to ask at a dozen houses before the necessary permit is granted. They are not all that way, of course. Generally, it is a case of the higher the person who owns the house, the easier the permission. Lord Aldenham, for instance, who owns some of the most beautiful grounds in England, has always assisted us in every possible way, whilst we have often traversed the entire length of a street to find the owner of a very ordinary sort of house who would let us occupy his front steps for half-an-hour or so!

Another difficulty with which we have to contend is the crowd of people who invariably swarm from nowhere in particular all around the camera. They are not content to merely stay behind and watch, they literally swarm around the lens, and it keeps your whole staff busy keeping them back. They are good-humored it is true, but, no matter whether you appeal to them in an indignant way or in a "good fellow" spirit, they still swarm: And the police, if the crowd become too large so as to obstruct the traffic, threaten to arrest you for causing an obstruction! Not the crowd for hindering you in your legitimate business, but you!

Go to the Parks Committee, and ask for a permit to take scenes in a public park or open space of any sort! Now, they are good to you! In five minutes you have a written permit in your hand authorizing you to take scenes in any park, etc. Look again, and underneath you will find a small proviso that says "NO ACTORS MAY BE USED!" Scenes of still life, I suppose!

Go to any public building in London, and ask permission to take a shot of an actor walking into the same building. After much hesitation on the official's part, he will ask you to send in a copy of the scenario with a list of the scenes you wish to take, and the date you wish to take them (remember the climate), and he will put it before the next Committee meeting, and let you know in due course!

All this is neither romancing nor exaggeration, for I have only quoted instances of what has happened to our company at various times. We overcame all these hindrances, however, and

THE SCIENTIFIC FILM CORPORATION

13 DUTCH STREET, NEW YORK CITY

Chas. F. Herm, Director of Production

Lillian Gale with Jacobs

THE personnel of the Arthur H. Jacobs' managerial office has been augmented, Mr. Jacobs having placed Lillian Gale, well known free lance publicity writer, in charge of an additional service at the disposal of his clientele.

The new department will offer a service of exploitation and special features for the larger producing companies, as well as regular advertising and publicity for the independent producer, and personal publicity for artists and directors under Mr. Jacobs' management, among whom are George Archambaud, Gaston Glass, Herbert Rawlinson, Sylvia Breamer, Martha Mansfield, Fern Elvidge and others.

In casting "The Foreigner," the first of a series of twelve screen plays to be produced by the Dominion Films, Inc., of which Ernest Shipman, is President, and Henry MacRae, director, Mr. Jacobs was awarded a unique distinction, that of having so carefully selected his proposed players that not one was rejected.

The company, including Gaston Glass, Robert T. Haines, Anne Sutherland, Bradley Barker and ten others left, July 25th for Winnipeg and expect to be gone about two months in Canadian locale described in Mr. Connor's story, which promises, with the material provided, to produce a worth while feature.

The most beautiful girl from Illinois is coming to our town. Her name is Gertrude Olmstead.

Nathleen Kirkham is seeing Balboa Beach. She took along a bag full of books.

Bill Rogers had a lazy party in "Honest Hutch" and he gained ten pounds. Now he is punching the bag daily.

A. P. A. story reached this station this week which said that Earle Williams will play in "Lady Fingers." Okay.

Howard Dietz has kicked the Los Angeles dust off and as we write he is riding the cushions eastward.

We learn of a publicity writer in the person of Si Snyder who last week had enough money ahead to take a vacation. It's a great life!

Mabel Normand does an acrobatic number in the production she is now working in. Its title is "Head Over Heels."

Frank Elliott went back to New York last week to beg, borrow or steal some more Sun-Light Air lamps for his customers out here.

Buster Keaton broke forth in song and penned his biography in verse, all of which is being carefully treasured for the 1921 studio treasury.

And now we learn that highly priced extras struggle to work with Nazimova without pay and we write he is riding the cushions eastward.

Extra! George Beban is always ready to say quits on editing or re-editing or re-re-editing "One Man in a Million." Understand this is just a request.

Alice Lake put over a hypnotizing act so well the other day that the professional hypnotist claims she was hypnotized and up until now they are letting him think so.

House Peters is authority for the statement that a day in filming South African scenes begins at 3 A. M. and ends at 9 P. M. which some might think is wonderful.

Bill Wing has told his launch and drove of automobiles and purchased a flock of aeroplanes which he will use to fly to his oil fields and back to his typewriter at the Selig studio.

Some men are born lucky. Others elect themself into it which reminds us that Tom Ince sent John Blackwood to New York to spend four weeks there the pretty show girls the once over.

The world is full of contradictions. Last week we were told Dave Lindorff would direct for Sam Rork's organization and now Sam tells us it ain't so and that Edwin Carew is going to do the directing. So there you are!

Jacques Jaccard has shot all the scenery about Big Bear Lake and so thought it about time to go back to Universal City and edit some of the film. Gets pretty hot in the mountains the latter part of July.

Soi Lesser and Mike Gore are petitioning the City council to change the name of Main Street, Los Angeles, to Gore Street as the Gore theatriques require every other lot, more or less.

May Allison is now a political student under her sister, Neill Wright, of Huntington, Tennessee, who was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention. May knows how to make an X.

Since Jack Gilbert became a director and scenarist he has permitted his hair to grow long and curly and Jack has lost his juvenile appearance which made him a heart-breaker of the screen.

Lee Moran was seen in his disguise for "Once a Plumber" by the head of the Universal technical staff this week and was told where he would find some important work to do without any further delay.

Lee dropped the fire pot right away. Bill Farnum is putting in sixteen hours a day trying to land a big sword fish at Catalina Island which causes us to remark: "Bill will put in sixteen hours a day for a fish but would he do it for Fox?"—which we think is more or less an pertinent question.

If papa and mama of a certain Williamson had thought of the tax on the press agents' memoranda as well as the dear public, they would have given their son a name with initials of P. M. instead of C. N. Williamson and A. M. Williamson would have been much easier to remember.

Right now we want to serve notice on the Prevention Of Cruelty to Animals Society that "Black Beauty" is to be filmed by Vitagraph under the direction of Dave Smith which means that kind hearted Dave will always have the cause for which they stand in mind.

The Greenwich village is now located at Metro studio and the bohemian life is lived there every day. Little Old New York never had anything so wild as this and our statements can be proven when you see May Allison's "Are All Men Alike" which Phil Rosen is now directing.

Who's Who Of America is the very best to our set for the 1920 year names nine of the west coast film industry's favored few are Charles Spencer Chaplin, Carter De Haven, William S. Hart, Clifford Howard, Fred Koller, Charles R. Macaulay, Byron Morgan, Clara Kimball Young and James Young all of which makes us believe a lot of press agents have been overlooking a bet, and furthermore that the publishers of this blue book with a red cover should be furnished with a copy of that wonderful volume to everyone in the film industry as "Motion Picture Studio Directory and Trade Annual."

Coast Authors Have League

Screen Writers Guild Has Membership of 100 Film Authors

IN the hope of bringing about a closer co-operation between the authors themselves and the authors and producers, an association known as the Screen Writers Guild and affiliated with the Authors League has been formed with a membership of more than one hundred of the most prominent film writers of the west coast film colony. The Guild is the result of two meetings held by authors, at each of which Frank E. Woods presided.

At the first a council of thirty members were selected to draft by-laws and pave the way for organization and at the meeting of the committee of thirty on Thursday evening, July 15th constitution and by-laws were adopted and officers were elected as follows: Thompson Buchanan, president, Mary O'Connor, vice-president; Jack Cunningham, secretary; Waldemar Young, treasurer. The Council of the Guild consists of thirty members as follows: John Blackwood, Thompson Buchanan, W. H. Clifford, Kate Corbaley, Marion Fairfax, Thomas Geraghty, J. G. Hawks, Monte Katterjohn, Eugene B. Lewis, James Mathis, George Pyper, Doris Schroeder, Bayard Veiller, A. S. Le Vino, Frank E. Woods, Bernard McConville, Ruth Ann Baldwin, Eugene Presbrey, William Pigott, Mrs. Edna Schley, Rex Taylor, Clayton Hamilton, Mrs. Julia Crawford Ivers, Elmer Rice, C. Gardner Sullivan and Luther Reed.

The members of the Executive Board of the Guild are Thompson Buchanan, Mary O'Connor, Jack Cunningham, Waldemar Young, Frank E. Woods, Bayard Veiller, James Mathis, Thomas Geraghty, Doris Schroeder, Eugene Presbrey and Marion Fairfax.

This worthy department has come back now that there has been a little easing up in white paper at our factories. There has been a great many things happened since Hukum ceased publication but as that is now in the distant past no reference will be made to those medieval occurrences. Yes, this is a fast industry, turns over every week and why should a live publication like this waste any valuable white space in telling what happened the other week. Hukum makes such good reading that our many readers just forced us to renew publication again and in the warm weather too when earthquakes are numerous even though our contemporaries of Los Angeles call them tremblers. Notice is given now if there is another trembler, publication will cease forever as Hollywood is going to lose a very good citizen.

And now we learn that highly priced extras struggle to work with Nazimova without pay and we write he is riding the cushions eastward.

Extra! George Beban is always ready to say quits on editing or re-editing or re-re-editing "One Man in a Million." Understand this is just a request.

Alice Lake put over a hypnotizing act so well the other day that the professional hypnotist claims she was hypnotized and up until now they are letting him think so.

House Peters is authority for the statement that a day in filming South African scenes begins at 3 A. M. and ends at 9 P. M. which some might think is wonderful.

Bill Wing has told his launch and drove of automobiles and purchased a flock of aeroplanes which he will use to fly to his oil fields and back to his typewriter at the Selig studio.

Some men are born lucky. Others elect themself into it which reminds us that Tom Ince sent John Blackwood to New York to spend four weeks there the pretty show girls the once over.

The world is full of contradictions. Last week we were told Dave Lindorff would direct for Sam Rork's organization and now Sam tells us it ain't so and that Edwin Carew is going to do the directing. So there you are!

Jacques Jaccard has shot all the scenery about Big Bear Lake and so thought it about time to go back to Universal City and edit some of the film. Gets pretty hot in the mountains the latter part of July.

Soi Lesser and Mike Gore are petitioning the City council to change the name of Main Street, Los Angeles, to Gore Street as the Gore theatriques require every other lot, more or less.

May Allison is now a political student under her sister, Neill Wright, of Huntington, Tennessee, who was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention. May knows how to make an X.

Since Jack Gilbert became a director and scenarist he has permitted his hair to grow long and curly and Jack has lost his juvenile appearance which made him a heart-breaker of the screen.

Lee Moran was seen in his disguise for "Once a Plumber" by the head of the Universal technical staff this week and was told where he would find some important work to do without any further delay.

Lee dropped the fire pot right away. Bill Farnum is putting in sixteen hours a day trying to land a big sword fish at Catalina Island which causes us to remark: "Bill will put in sixteen hours a day for a fish but would he do it for Fox?"—which we think is more or less an pertinent question.

If papa and mama of a certain Williamson had thought of the tax on the press agents' memoranda as well as the dear public, they would have given their son a name with initials of P. M. instead of C. N. Williamson and A. M. Williamson would have been much easier to remember.

Right now we want to serve notice on the Prevention Of Cruelty to Animals Society that "Black Beauty" is to be filmed by Vitagraph under the direction of Dave Smith which means that kind hearted Dave will always have the cause for which they stand in mind.

The Greenwich village is now located at Metro studio and the bohemian life is lived there every day. Little Old New York never had anything so wild as this and our statements can be proven when you see May Allison's "Are All Men Alike" which Phil Rosen is now directing.

Who's Who Of America is the very best to our set for the 1920 year names nine of the west coast film industry's favored few are Charles Spencer Chaplin, Carter De Haven, William S. Hart, Clifford Howard, Fred Koller, Charles R. Macaulay, Byron Morgan, Clara Kimball Young and James Young all of which makes us believe a lot of press agents have been overlooking a bet, and furthermore that the publishers of this blue book with a red cover should be furnished with a copy of that wonderful volume to everyone in the film industry as "Motion Picture Studio Directory and Trade Annual."

first of all have to take a portable lighting set over with him, for there is, I believe, only one company in England who possess such a thing, and they use it for making publicity films for commercial purposes. Once there with his lights, he has to find a householder who is willing for him to upset his home to the extent that would be entailed, and I don't believe he would find one in the thousand who are willing to lend their exteriors. So this only resource is the Studio set, and an American director who thinks of working in an English studio, has only to go inside there once and he will be down at the Cunard office in 20 minutes. In the matter of lights, the English studios are sadly behind times. Until recently, the only lights used in them that was used here in 1912-3, and also a few Cooper-Hewitt old models. One company I know of has two Westminsters, no mercury-vapor, and four spots, to supply lights for two stages, while the engines would not take the load of more than 27 lights at once. The engines are never used. They have practically no acetic ray in them, while the side-lights (galleons, we call them) are constructed of wood 2 in. x 2 in. very cumbersome, and generally requiring two men to push them around. There are no portable switchboards such as are common here, I notice.

The majority of studios are dark, the climate not permitting of open-air ones. (I don't believe there is a single open-air stage in England.) There are one or two glass studios, and one in particular has a very fine glass roof and walls of a special material which gave us fine results on a good day.

Don't say we are slow, because we are in this state every day, rather say that we are unfortunate, for when we declared war in 1914, we were pretty much on a level with you, that is, we were in our infancy, and the whole industry stopped dead still until the Armistice, while you had two and a half years in which to improve, and you did it so wonderfully that when you came to our help in the war, the industry had made such ground as to be unaffected by it over here.

Famous People Making Famous Players Pictures

William P. Carleton

CAN you imagine being dissatisfied because you had no work to do, even though you were drawing a salary for doing it? Nevertheless, there are a few persons living, who are ambitious for more than mere financial remuneration, and William P. Carleton is one of them.

While holding a year's contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, there came a time when, several of their stars being about to depart for Japan and other foreign regions, there was nothing suitable for one of their most popular leading men to do. Mr. Carleton endured the imposed idleness for several days, that seemed like weeks, until, his patience at an end, he approached Mr. Naulty and admitted that his job wasn't at all to his liking.

"Go out and get another," the production manager retorted, and upon being assured that the permission was granted seriously, Mr. Carleton did as he was bid. After five minutes on the telephone, he had accepted an offer to play the leading role in the International Film Corporation production of "The Inside of the Cup," directed by Albert Capellani.

Mr. Carleton feels much better now about the Famous Players' inactivity than he did at first, for the new role proved to be one of those acceptable ones that occasionally delight the soul of the true actor. It was that of the minister in the Churchill novel.

During dinner at his charming country home recently, some reference was made to a certain churchman, and Mr. Carleton exclaimed laughingly: "Oh, I have tremendous respect for the clergy now. There's nothing too good for me to believe about them." Later, upon pain of excommunication if we disclosed the fact, he showed us some of his stills. We dare not say more about them than that we shall watch for the picture with unusual eagerness. It should be one of those truly worthwhile films, that encourage the movie lover, and bring in fresh recruits from the scornful legitimate devotees.

Mr. Carleton has been a light opera singer—he had the part of the "Shade of the Sheltering Palms" man in the original "Florodora"—a musical comedy hero, matinee idol (when the films in which he plays are shown in that city, his name is featured rather than that of the star)—he was leading man with the Castle Square Stock Company in Boston for five years, and movie actor, also a human being. He boasts about his garden, and is as pleased when that garden produces the first peas of the season as any life long farmer. Also he grows wroth, very wroth, when he taxis to New Rochelle from Bayside, his mind and heart attuned to the new part he is scheduled to begin, arrives on time, and finds no director, no fellow player, no cameraman, no one that he has ever seen before, in short, no one but an indifferent youth of indeterminate capacity, there to meet him. And when, having already lost, almost irrevocably, that pleasant state of mind in which he had expected to start work that would bring such favorable results, he is shown to an inside dressing-room—well, we are glad that we were not that youth of uncertain status. Mr. Carleton is 6 feet 2, and broad in proportion.

And what do you think cleared the atmosphere and reinstated a happy situation? Nothing more nor less than the removal of Mr. Carleton's bags and suitcases and other encumbrances to Room No. 13. It's his lucky number.

"You never can tell what'll please some people," thought the office boy. "He'd never 'a' got that room if I'd noticed it—I'd 'a' thought it 'ud bin the last straw."

Whether the number will live up to Mr. Carleton's expectations of it, remains to be seen. The Associated Exhibitors' production of "The Riddle: Woman," starring Geraldine Farrar, for which Mr. Carleton was engaged immediately following the International feature, and during which the dressing-room will be used, is still in course of production.

Mr. Carleton's screen experience has been comparatively recent—ten pictures to be exact—completes the list to date. But they are a good ten. "World to Live In" and "Sinners," with Alice Brady; "The Spark Divine," with Alice Joyce; "The Avalanche" and "A Society Exile," with Elsie Ferguson; "The Copperhead," with Lionel Barrymore; "The Amateur Wife," with Irene Castle; "The Flapper," with Olive Thomas; "The Inside of the Cup" and "The Riddle: Woman."—MARGUERITE JONES.

Clara Beranger

THE first requisite of a good screen production is a good story. The motion picture industry is realizing that fact more keenly each day. Gradually the old continuity writers who turned out a story a week, in much the same fashion that an overworked reporter turns out copy, but without the legitimate excuse of fact that a newspaper has, are being overlooked in the running, and the real writer, with training and talent and originality, is receiving just recognition.

Among the foremost writers of the screen today, one of the talented few who have helped to bring about this change—which it is safe to say will do more for the future of the motion picture than any other factor—is a girl who has attained, solely through perseverance and ability, the enviable position she now holds, Clara Beranger. Mrs. Beranger knew what she wanted to do when she left college. She has worked straight toward an end, and though of course she has by no means reached that end, she has gone much farther toward it than most girls of her age could have done. She is a woman whom the most ardent feminists may well be proud of, though it is incongruous to mention Clara Beranger and feminists in the same sentence. Then she has a small daughter, of whom she is intensely proud, and her home, her wardrobe and everything about her are absolutely feminine. She wastes no time talking about the rights and importance of the modern woman. She goes quietly ahead and shows what women—or a woman—can do, and leaves the telling of it to those with more time on their hands.

Mrs. Beranger is a power to be reckoned with in the film world. Four years ago she was a staff writer for the Fox Film Corporation, and among her continuities for this firm was that of "A Tale of Two Cities," which has recently been reissued. Later she wrote exclusively for Baby Marie Osborne with Pathe, and then followed a period with the World Film Corporation.

We remember the first time we met her. We decided then that she was a girl who accomplished what she set out to do. She told us that she wanted a contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and shortly after that we heard that the contract had been signed. Among her stories for this firm are "Come Out of the Kitchen" and "Girls" for Marguerite Clark; "Judy of Rogues' Harbor" for Mary Miles Minter; "Sadie Love" for Billie Burke; "The Fear Market" for Alice Brady; "The Slave Market" for Pauline Frederick; and "The Cost," from David Graham Phillips' novel, for Violet Heming; and one of the sensations of the past season, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" for John Barrymore. Productions soon to be released are "Half an Hour," a Barrie play, for Dorothy Dalton, and "Civilian Clothes" for Thomas Meighan. We'd like to see a better list than that for a little over a year's work! And to this list must be added her stage play, "His Chinese Wife," done in collaboration with Forrest Halsey.

And now comes the most interesting part of this story—the result of the talent displayed in the above listed productions—an interview with Mr. Lasky regarding the renewal of her contract.

Mrs. Beranger ventured to explain some of the things she thought wrong in the present-day methods of productions, the most vital one being talk of cooperation between the writing and the production of a story. Mr. Lasky frankly admitted that he had discovered that the persons who volunteered constructive criticism in his organization were generally successful in whatever they undertook, and Mrs. Beranger went away with her suggestions agreed to. They all tended to bring about a closer and more sympathetic co-operation between the director and writer. And in this, Mrs. Beranger thinks, lies the success or failure of a production.

As arranged now, before she begins work on a story, there will be a conference between the director, editor and scenario writer—a triangle for helpful suggestions. After these three have decided on the outline of the story, the director is not to make any structural changes during the "shooting" of the scenes, without a consultation with his aforementioned co-workers. This represents a real step forward in the scenarioist's standing. Formerly a director was usually at liberty to "shoot" a story as he pleased, and he often did so to the story's detriment and the writer's despair.

A second important privilege granted Mrs. Beranger is that she will assist in the cutting and titling of her own stories. Another tremendous increase in the amount of the writer's own work that will reach the public. No longer will a film cutter or a title writer or even the director be able to change the meaning or motive of a carefully developed plot by wrong interpretation and irrelevant subtitles.

"The writer must be permitted to work with the director," Mrs. Beranger declares, "and just as the writer depends on the director to give a dramatic portrayal of the story she has written, so must the director depend on the writer to give him all the material help she can. Famous Players-Lasky believe in this plan, and they have found out that whenever the director and writer do work together harmoniously, the results have been splendid."

Mrs. Beranger is going abroad on a trip combining business and pleasure and will return early in the fall to go on with the work in which she has shown such marked ability.

MARGARITE JONES.

Aileen Savage

BLACK hair and violet eyes—Irish? Not a bit of it—her maternal inheritance is French and her father an Englishman. Beneath a surface of Anglo-Saxon reserve and aloofness she has all the fire and vivacity that writers have consistently attributed to the Celts since the race began. Her name is Aileen Savage, and she is one of the most attractive persons we have met in a long time.

They say in the movies that mentality does count, frequently. If that is true, Miss Savage, though a comparative newcomer in the film world, ought to go far. For, in professional matters, her Anglo-Saxon judgment outweighs her Latin impulsiveness, and the character portrayals she gives are not manikin-like reflections of her own personality, but the results of carefully reasoned study.

We should like to write even as much as we know concerning the true story of her life and the why and wherefore of her picture venture. It would make interesting reading. But, for reasons not given, it is tabooed for the present, and we are obliged to confine ourselves to the practical story of what she has done so far.

Her first part was in a Buffalo Film Corporation picture entitled "The Sport of Kings," not yet released. Then Famous Players were attracted by her vivid personality and evident promise of ability, and she played with Alice Brady in "Red Head" and in the all-star production of "The Cost."

She has a fondness for the present vogue of Chinese accessories. Her apartment is filled with them, and there are many photographs of herself in Chinese costume. One is struck instantly by her strong resemblance to Geraldine Farrar as "Madame Butterfly," and there is a certain buoyancy in her manner that also recalls distinctly the prima donna's intense enthusiasm. She has too strong a personality to play second parts for long. In our opinion she will be either a leading woman or out of the game entirely in a very short time, and we have an idea that she won't be out unless she chooses.—

Kathryne Stuart

A QUOTATION from a Paramount-Artcraft Press Book reads as follows: "Kathryne Stuart is a name quite new to the Paramount-Artcraft picture fans, but her adaptation of 'Away Goes Prudence' for the screen is likely to make her work highly popular. She wrote the scenarios of 'The Stolen Kiss,' 'His Bridal Night,' 'The Savage Woman,' and 'Cheating Cheaters,' all of which scored heavily. Miss Stuart is under contract to supply scenarios for Famous Players-Lasky, so that worthwhile productions from her pen may be looked for."

We won't go so far as to concede that because she is writing for Famous Players her productions will necessarily be worthwhile, which is what the ardent press writer would lead one to suppose. But we are looking for worthwhile productions just the same, and of course, we presume that those same productions will very probably be well executed upon their transference to the screen in the hands of the Famous Players producers. And we will add to the list given above, as further indication of Miss Stuart's ability, "Erstwhile Susan," the first starring vehicle for Constance Binney.

Having cited briefly what Miss Stuart has already accomplished in the motion picture field, we hesitate before attempting to predict just how much farther she will go. For the lady has ambition.

In this moment of dark horses we are careful about predictions; and if Miss Stuart progresses during the coming year as she has progressed in the past one, we certainly will set no limit to her activities. For, at this time last year, she was practically unknown. She had finished school and put on some amateur theatricals, which undoubtedly was excellent practice for her. She insists that she was in the habit of visualizing things anyhow, but we are sure that seeing her plays and stories staged must have broadened this habit, at least. Then, with nothing but assurance and seriousness of purpose to back her, she persuaded the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation to take her on their scenario staff.

Having gained a little experience with them, she turned next to Famous Players-Lasky. Their scenario department was full, but they were interested in some cartoons for the U. S. Food Administration that they were making, and they needed someone in that department. Miss Stuart took the job, and used it to good advantage, becoming thoroughly familiar with the studio and the way in which pictures were made, and, as she says, Famous Players got used to seeing her about.

So when they needed someone to go to the Coast with Clara Kimball Young, to do the continuity for her next production, and Miss Stuart begged for the chance, they let her have it. She did not only "The Savage Woman," but "Cheating Cheaters" as well. It happened that when she was ready to return East, Norma Talmadge was also coming back, and the energetic young writer accompanied her, doing the script for "The Probation Wife" on the way.

She continued writing for Famous. "The Career of Katherine Bush" is another product of her pen. It is a pen, or at any rate a pencil, she tells us, for she hasn't learned to type professionally and trying to keep up with a machine distracts her thoughts from every other idea. We didn't know that any 1920 writers, particularly those as long "before 30," to change Julian Street's title somewhat, as Miss Stewart is, ever made use of so simple an instrument as a thing of wood and lead, but they, or rather, one does, it seems.

Just now Miss Stuart is at work on a script for Dorothy Dalton's next picture. After lurching with her in the quiet, delightful little place to which she introduced us, we left her in her charming lavender and blue toned apartment—another proof of her artistic temperament—ready to commence the adaptation that, she declared, she hadn't the least idea how even to begin. And it had to be finished within a week.

We don't know how she's going to do it either, but we'll trust it to her, and feel certain that it will be done on time, and wholly satisfactory.—MARGUERITE JONES.

David Powell

DAVID POWELL is among the oldest of the present Famous Players, in point of affiliation, that is. His stage career began with Sir Herbert Tree in London, where he also played with Ellen Terry and Forbes-Robertson. Then he came to this country, and after a period with the World Film Corporation, he joined Famous Players-Lasky, and has been with them ever since. He has been leading man for all the Famous stars, and his productions include "The Lie," "Under the Greenwood Tree," "His Parisian Wife," with Elsie Ferguson; "The Firing Line," with Irene Castle; "The Make Believe Wife," with Billie Burke; "The Teeth of the Tiger," "On With the Dance," "Idols of Clay" and "The Right to Love," in all of which latter he was co-starred.

Mr. Powell's contract with Famous recently gave him an option of being starred. He chose to ignore this, however, preferring to play in big feature productions rather than in more hastily made program attractions. For this decision we consider him unique in the film world. He proved beyond question that his artistic tendencies were stronger than personal ambition, and when a player is as deeply in love with his work as that, he will certainly reach stardom—"proper stardom," as Mr. Powell expresses it—whether he seeks it or not.

Dorothy Cumming

AMERICAN girls with admiring friends and families encouraging them at every step find it more or less—mostly more—difficult to succeed in a motion picture career, and against those of other nationalities the odds are even greater. Few of them meet with anything but disappointment, and those to whom success does come achieve it through talent and ability in the nth degree, plus more than an average amount of pluck and perseverance. Among the Australians who have made good one recalls readily but two names, Enid Bennett and Sylvia Breamer, and to these must now be added that of Dorothy Cumming.

Miss Cumming recently completed an excellent part in one of the Fitzmaurice specials, "Idols of Clay." She played in George Loane Tucker's "Ladies Must Live," with Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman and the Puppet," and with Bessie Barriscale in "The Woman Who Understood." These pictures, with the exception of her very first film, "Snow White," in which she played the lead for Famous Players, complete her list of screen achievements to date. An enviable one, with no "atmosphere" or "extra" parts at all, for Miss Cumming had made her name on the legitimate stage before she gave serious thought to pictures.

She was Cyril Maude's leading woman for eighteen months, after having been thoroughly trained in the strenuous school of stock under the Williamsons in her own country. Upon leaving Mr. Maude's company she was at a loss as to just what was going to happen next. Someone suggested that she try to see David Belasco, and with the feeling that she might just as well try to interview the stars in the heavens, she went to his office. She was refused admittance.

"But," she pleaded with the obdurate official, "how can Mr. Belasco ever find any new stars if he never sees any new people?"

At that moment the door of the private office opened and the great producer appeared. Miss Cumming seized her opportunity, with the result that she was engaged as lead for "Tiger, Tiger," and a Broadway run of nine months.

After that things were easier. She doesn't have to take her interviews on chance any more, and just at present she is trying to choose between another legitimate production and more screen features. "And whichever it is, it will be alright," she says, and we know that it will.

Frank Losee

WE were about to say that Frank Losee is the most charming character actor we know. We won't withdraw the charming, but character actor is misleading. Of course the pictures on another page in this book bear incontrovertible testimony to the fact that Mr. Losee can play characters, but the word used as an adjective implies a person who never plays so-called straight parts, and this particular leading man is quite as famous for his "wealthy bankers, stern fathers, lenient uncles, and unscrupulous oil magnates, as he is for his downtrodden peasants, easy going farmers and Colonial gentlemen."

After all, all parts are characters, or should be, as Mr. Losee would say at once. People shouldn't talk about "straight parts." But the farther his roles are removed from any similarity to his own personality, the better Mr. Losee likes them. Being a real actor, he revels in every opportunity to prove his versatility. And we doubt if even Mr. Losee himself knows how many roles he has portrayed. For he

John S. Robertson, Director

ALREADY famous as a director, John S. Robertson became internationally conspicuous by his direction of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," starring John Barrymore, which has been hailed by American reviewers as one of the finest motion pictures ever screened. After finishing that celebrated achievement, Mr. Robertson began work on "Away Goes Prudence" and he has hit the bull's eye again with a picture that will stand forth as one of the few comedy dramas of the current season. Mr. Robertson directed Miss Burke in "Sadie Love," "The Make-Believe Wife" and "The Misleading Widow." He also directed John Barrymore in "Here Comes the Bride" and "The Test of Honor," and Marguerite Clark in "Let's Elope" and "Come Out of the Kitchen."

began his dramatic career more than twenty-five years ago, and has played under the management of Belasco, Frohman, Klaw & Erlanger, the Shuberts and John Cort, before pictures were even thought of.

Naturally, with their advent so well-known an actor was bound to try them sooner or later, and Mr. Losee tried sooner. He has played with every star—we think we are safe in saying every—that the Famous Players have ever had. For five years at least he has been under contract with them, one of their very few stock players. That fact speaks as well for his ability as anything we could say about him. It's frequently true that the more famous a player is, the less there is to write about. Everybody knows as much about him as the writer does. We will only add that even as we know of no better actor than Mr. Losee is, neither do we know of a more popular one, with stars, directors, property men, extras and—the public.

His recent pictures include: "Here Comes the Bride," "His Parisian Wife," "The Firing Line," "Good Gracious Annabelle," "Marie, Ltd.," "The Fear Market," "The Stolen Kiss" and "Sinners." At the present moment, Mr. Losee, growing restive under the temporary inactivity of the Famous Players, is working under another banner. He has an important role in Geraldine Farrar's first Associated Exhibitors production, "The Riddle: Woman."

Robt. MacAlarney Will Head London Studio

A FURTHER indication of the constantly increasing activities of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in England is the announcement, made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the corporation, just before his departure for Hollywood, Cal., Saturday, that Robert E. MacAlarney, for the past four years head of the scenario department, has been chosen production manager for the London Studio of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., and will sail for England about September 1, to assume his new duties.

Mr. MacAlarney will have general charge of the production forces abroad and will be in close personal touch with the many British authors and playwrights with whom Mr. Lasky, on his recent visit to England, arranged for original scenarios for Paramount Pictures. Miss Eve Unsell, who has been in charge of the scenario department in London, will return to this country on Mr. MacAlarney's arrival in London to become a member of the scenario staff of the New York office.

Harry Durant will succeed Mr. MacAlarney as head of the scenario department for productions made in this country.

The Eight Year History of the Famous Players Company

The Story of Its Beginning and Achievements Since That Time

FROM the humble beginnings of a tiny makeshift studio to production properties valued at $10,000,000 in eight years is the kaleidoscopic studio history of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. From comparative hovels to production palaces inside of a decade! From experimentation to perfect artistry! From remote camera "shooting" in one secluded part of America to studios in every quarter of the world! The rapid growth and intensive development of the studio property of this organization is an expansion that is synonymous with the enlargement and progress of the motion picture industry itself.

The inception of what is the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation today, extending its sphere of activity to every part of the globe, occurred on June 1, 1912, with the formation of the Famous Players Film Co. The head was Adolph Zukor, who has remained at the helm of the organization through its successive stages of development and is today president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This infant company, later destined to produce the most stupendous motion pictures ever known, made its first picture on the top floor of a 100 by 200 feet building at 213 West 26th street. On a lower floor was the carpenter shop and laboratory, while half of another floor was rented for properties.

The company immediately set its mark by offering, for its first production "Queen Elizabeth," starring Sarah Bernhardt, which created a sensation as the first five-reel picture ever made. This picture, however, was made in France, so that the first picture of the new company actually made at the 26th street studio was "The Prisoner of Zenda," starring James K. Hackett. There followed three years of prosperity which only the clear-visioned Adolph Zukor had foreseen, during which the company set an admittedly new and superior standard for motion pictures. Then on September 11, 1915, the cradle of the organization, the 26th street studio, was destroyed by fire.

Valuable films and properties were destroyed in the conflagration, although the prompt vigor of the studio staff saved "The Prince and the Pauper," a picture starring Marguerite Clark, which had just been completed.

Characteristic of the organization of the new company was the manner in which the seeming catastrophe was met. A studio at Yonkers was rented immediately and production work continued within two days after the disaster. Within five weeks the new Famous Players studio at 130 West 56th street was opened.

This studio has been the eastern production centre of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation from that day on and will pass out of existence only with the opening of the new Long Island studio. Here some of the filmdom's best known pictures, such as "The Copperhead," "On With the Dance" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," were made, as well as productions starring Elsie Ferguson, Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick and other famous players. It was converted into a production place from a riding academy and with its high ceiling and glass roof it was found to be admirably suited to motion picture purposes.

At the time that Famous Players-Film Company was making its mark in the industry the seeds of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were also being sown elsewhere. On November 23, 1913, the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Film Co. was incorporated. The organization was the spontaneous outcome of a chance luncheon at the Claridge Hotel, at which Jesse L. Lasky, Cecil B. De Mille and Samuel Goldfish were the leading figures. Mr. De Mille assumed charge of production and left immediately for Los Angeles, where, with the rights of "The Squaw Man" in his pocket, he began his first production in a commodious carriage house, hastily readjusted to provide a small stage, make-shift scenery, laboratories and a business office.

Mutual admiration of the growing artistry of these two companies for each other could lead to only one result. The inevitable amalgamation was consummated on July 19, 1916, when the combined organizations began to do business as the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The work was continued along the same lines, with a development of the ideals that has been common to both organizations. The Lasky studio was used for productions at Hollywood, while in the East the corporation utilized the Fifty-sixth street studio, and from time to time rented others to meet the demands made by its increased output. On September 1, 1916, the corporation absorbed the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and this meant the inclusion of the Morosco studio on the West Coast. Since that time this studio has been an integral part of the Famous Players-Lasky production organization.

The beginning of 1920 saw the company at the highest point of its production capacity—a mark to be exceeded only in the plans for ensuing years and with the opening of foreign studios.

Today the Lasky studio at Hollywood covers two full city blocks. Twelve hundred acres of land in the San Fernando Valley form the Lasky ranch and the stage space alone is twenty times as great as the entire area covered by the primitive studio which marked the start. Only recently the modest structure which housed the first production of this company was discarded as being too small for a property room.

Eastern production facilities have been developed in a way to fully keep pace with the stupendous progress of the West Coast studios. In 1917 Famous Players-Lasky Corporation entered into a long-term occupancy of the Paragon studio at Fort Lee. Subsequently the Universal studio at Fort Lee was taken over. Within the past year production has centered around the Fifty-sixth street studio as headquarters with occasional digressions as the needs of the company exceeded this limited capacity. For example a large acreage at Elmhurst, L. I., was occupied for the production of "The Copperhead," where an entire city was constructed and reconstructed to give the realism to a plot that involved three different periods since 1846. Short-term leases have also provided space as required at the Triangle studio in Yonkers and the Estees studio.

At the present time there are three different studios being used by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for eastern production work. At the Fifty-sixth street studio George Fitzmaurice is completing his third Paramount production, "Idols of Clay," and Director Harley Knoles is finishing "A Romantic Adventures," starring Dorothy Dalton. Owing to the strain of Eastern production the Forty-fourth street studio, the old Amsterdam Opera House, is being utilized to make "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," Billie Burke's first Paramount picture under her new contract, Edward Dillon directing. The old Biograph studio in the Bronx has been rented and is being used to star Thomas Meighan in "The Frontier of the Stars," under the direction of Charles Maigne.

Within the next two months all the Eastern production work will be consolidated in the new $2,000,000 studio at Long Island City. The laboratories and short subjects department have already taken up their quarters in the buildings and only the final word from the superintendent of construction is awaited to make it the sole production center of the East.

In its expansion for foreign production Famous Players-British Film Co., Ltd., the English name of the corporation, have WITHOUT doubt the biggest problem before any studio engineer or architect is that of illumination. Modern studios practice calls for the utmost flexibility in studio light control and this in the case of a studio the size of the Famous Players-Lasky plant at Astoria, is of unusual importance.

The first studios were equipped after the pattern of the legitimate stage, with little thought given to the entirely different character of the work. In the beginning this deficiency was not so noticeable, due principally to the fact that the industry was confined and had not yet started to broaden out into its era of frenzied and intensive production.

Studios with more than a stage or two were unknown and probably unthought of. Instead of a number of different scenes being filmed at the same time in the same building usually one feature was finished complete before another was commenced. But even under these conditions the studio was far from efficient. When sunlight was not used, cables were laid here and there on the floor from the studio switchboard to the lamps. Lights were controlled by individuals either at the lamp or at the switchboard. This means a series of confusing signals, all of which added to the general confusion and made it more difficult to produce satisfactory films.

Strange to say many of these conditions have been brought down to a fairly recent period and it safe to say that only within the last two years have any great strides been made in the control of studio lighting. As the latest addition to motion picture studios that of the Famous Players has incorporated in it the very latest developments in this line,

In order to show best and most clearly the various points of interest in the electrical system a systematic order will be observed starting with the entrance of the central station service of the New York and Queens Light and Power Company.

The front cover of this section shows the studio building itself as it appeared on July 15, 1920. A noteworthy feature of the design of this building by the Fleischman Construction Company was the method of artistically concealing the water tank. Over the third floor will be noticed a saw tooth roof construction which provides daylight in the dressing rooms. At the right of the photograph on the upper part of the building is seen one of the pent houses containing all the ventilating apparatus. The other pent house is located on the opposite side of the building.

That part of the building to be devoted to the actual production of the pictures is located in the center, with offices, dressing rooms, scenario departments, modelling shops and carpenter shops occupying the outside portions.

When the electric service is brought into the studio it enters the lower level of the high tension vault, Fig. 1, at a potential of 7,600 volts, through oil switches and starting compensators shown at the right of the photograph. From here it goes direct to the motors without interposing step-down transformers, thereby eliminating transformer losses.

The vertical conduits contain the high tension wires which run to the various 450 h.p. motors in the generator room. The high tension vault is of the double floor construction, all rods and mechanical operating devices being placed on the lower level so that the walking level offers no obstruction. An aisle space of at least two feet has been provided all around each unit.

To the left of this photograph is seen the rear of the high tension board which is mounted flush into the wall separating the high tension room from the generator room.

Several high tension disconnect switches are provided on each oil switch unit with the lower jaws connected to the ground so that when it becomes necessary to work on any of this equipment the operator first connects his switch to the ground, thereby insuring him absolute safety.

The appearance of the high tension vaults from the opposite direction is shown in figure 2. Transformers for general studio lighting are placed on the upper level. Each of the six transformers on this level is wound for 7,600 volt primaries and 220/110 volt secondaries with a special 3,800 volt tap so that at some future time when the voltage of the incoming lines is changed the same equipment may be reconnected with additional expense.

Figure 3 shows the arrangement of the lighting and power transformers in greater detail. It will be noticed that each transformer is provided with secondary disconnect switches which in turn are connected to the main bus-bars running horizontally over and across the various transformers to the main low tension service board shown to the right in the photograph. From this service board the feeders run to the main low tension switchboard in the generator room. The design of pipes and racking allows any transformer to be removed without disturbing wiring or racking. Only the opening of the high and low tension disconnect switches being necessary.

Leaving the switching chambers the next step is to the switchboard, shown in figure 6. This main switchboard is 35 feet long, located at the left of the generator rooms and the three 300 k.w. 7,600 volt General Electric motor generators. The high tension-control board is shown set flush with the wall separating the generator room from the high tension vault. The right hand end of the main low tension switchboard controls 6–150 kw 110 volt direct current generators with provision for four future units.

At the left of the main low tension switchboard are the various panels equipped with feeder switches and circuit breakers for the studio feeders.

Fig. 11—Busbars coming from generator room and rising to footwalks

On the left of the photograph and rising vertically is the bus feeder supplying the upper studio. This feeder has a capacity of 10,000 amperes at 110 volts and consists of 4"x $\frac{3}{4}$ " copper bar laminations run on heavy type insulators securely fastened to the wall. Where these feeders run through the studio portions of the buildings they are protected and guarded by wire mesh grill work.

Modern Studio Practice Demands Economical Converting Apparatus of Unusual Flexibility

Installation of G-E Apparatus in New Lasky Studio

In the matter of size the new plant of the Famous Players outranks all other motion picture studios in the world.

In the matter of equipment, as well, this mammoth studio is unrivalled. Because of its unusual nature it was necessary to design much of the apparatus especially for the installation.

The three motor generator sets illustrated represent the latest development in converting devices for this work.

Each of the synchronous motors is connected direct to the 7600 volt supply line and drives two independent 150 K.W. direct current generators. With this arrangement the load may be 100% unbalanced without affecting the voltage regulation.

For special projects where existing designs must be altered to suit new conditions, the engineering resources of the General Electric Company are always available.

The three G-E motor generators and equalizer pedestals are shown in figure 5. Ample room and empty conduits have been provided for the installation of two additional units as soon as the studio is in operation

The absence of overhead pull boxes, conduits and wires is especially noticeable in figure 7 which shows the rear side of the main low tension switchboard as seen from the feeder end. This view shows also the special trench construction by which all wires are brought into the switchboard from below.

Figure 8 shows clearly the rear view of the same switchboard from the generator section end. At the time the photograph was taken the covers for the switchboard trench had not been laid.

Passing now from the generating and control room and following the natural order of sequences—that in which the power travels as it goes from converting machinery to the studio stage—one comes to the overhead footwalks, figure 9. It is from these footwalks that the overhead lights are hung by means of chain blocks. The footwalks are arranged so that lamps can be pushed along conveniently and are also designed to hold the various overhead cables, plugging boxes. Through the space between the footwalks may be seen the studio floor, 40 feet below.

Figure 10 shows another view of the footwalks and some of the travelling carriages on the monorails which support the overhead banks of Cooper-Hewitts.

One of the innumerable innovations incorporated in the design of this studio is the method of conveying the current used for the studio lamps. Instead of hidden cables the conductors consist of bare copper bus-bars in the open. (See figure 11.) This shows the vertical bus-bar feeder coming out of the generator room wall and travelling upwards to the studio. At the lower end of the bus-bars are the special supports used to take the vertical thrust of the feeder caused by and expansion and contraction with varying temperatures. These bus-bars rest on insulating material.

Following the progress of the conductors further—figure 12—shows the bus-bar rising up on the wall of the studio with the wrought iron brace embedded in the brick work supporting the insulators. A close up of this brace is illustrated in figure 13. All of these bus-bars will, when completed, be enclosed in heavy wire grill work fastened to the wrought iron braces.

Where the bus-bars rise up near the footwalks and then start running horizontally across above the monorails is all shown clearly in figure 14. These bus-bars will also be enclosed in wire grills. To the left of the latter photograph can be seen the main 5,000 ampere disconnect switch which disconnects the entire bus-bar feeder system running over the upper studio.

A similar bus-bar system runs down the entire length of the studio over the monorails. Figure 15 was made from a photograph showing this construction work before it was completed.

The bus-bars carry the current to the remote control boxes placed over the monorails in the main studio. (Figure 16.) These switchboards are approximately 9 feet in length and 5 feet in height and have been designed to handle studio lighting equipment consuming approximately 2,000 amperes.

Another one of these remote control switchboards is shown in figure 17, with an operator standing alongside it for purpose of comparison.

Fig. 15—Another set of busbars run down the entire length of the studio. These buses are supported on special insulators and also enclosed in grills

Fig. 17—The same remote control box with a figure standing beside it to afford comparison

Fig. 18—The main "pull box" located on the basement ceiling

Figure 18, shows a main pull box located on the ceiling of the lower studio and through which the various conduit feeders for the house light and power are run. Although it carries nothing to give it any indication of unusual size yet this box is in reality 10 feet long, 6 feet wide and approximately $1\frac{1}{2}$ feet deep. Its weight is about $1\frac{1}{2}$ tons.

Since the rapid developments in motion picture studio control lighting control mentioned at the commencement of this article, a number of control stations have been developed for the purpose. The Monitor Studio Remote Control Station was invented by J. R. Manheimer and is used to control the remote control switchboards direct from the stage by the director or camera man. This system was originated by the E-J Electric Installation Company of New York. By means of this control station one stage or as many as eight stages can be lighted by the operation of a single lever and without the assistance of the electrician.

All of the electrical equipment described in detail up to this point is merely incidental to the operation of the several types of floor and hanging lamps that will be employed once the studio is in operation. This system must be flexible enough to give satisfactory operation of over 2,000 Cooper-Hewitt lamp units, nearly one hundred Wohl lamps, about the same number of Kliegl lamps and 24 of the powerful high intensity, and versatile Sun Light Arcs. All of this has been taken into account by the electrical designers and contractors, the E-J Electric Company, and the Famous Players Studio bids fair to become known as the finest example of studio layout in the world.

The editors wish to thank Mr. J. R. Manheimer who placed his experience and knowledge at their disposal during the preparation of this section and who supplied practically all of the electrical data used in conjunction with the illustrations.

F-P Laboratory Takes Second Place to None in Completeness of Layout and Scope of Equipment

An Illustrated Description of the Building by
E. H. Jacobs, Office Manager of Laboratory

Fig. 19—An exterior view of the laboratory which is already in operation

THE laboratory of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was the first unit of the producing plant to commence operation. Film from the other studios of the company has been handled at the laboratory for several months, although at the present time it has not been fully equipped and for that reason is not yet up to its capacity nor efficiency.

Everything throughout the building has been constructed to be as near fireproof as modern science could make it. Innumerable vaults with special protective devices have been sprinkled through the building for the storage of film in its various stages from receipt to shipping.

For those departments where the inspecting and assembling has to be carried but particular attention has been paid to the daylight conditions. A wall coating was finally selected which gave adequate illumination without affecting the eyesight of the workers.

All the equipment is of the latest types, some of it being perfected especially for this installation. The projection machines for one thing are fundamentally the standard Simplex machine, but certain attachments have been added for the special use to which they will be placed. These improvements are described in detail in another article in this section.

The exhaust system in the perforating room is worthy of special attention. This system is made up entirely of threaded pipe fittings and no sheet metal ducts are used. This eliminates air leaks and a great proportion of the noise usually caused by the exhausting air.

In the drying room the ten revolving drying drums are driven from two jack shafts. Each drum is provided with a friction clutch so that it can be stopped without necessitating the stopping also of the motor or jack shaft.

Fig. 20—The exhaust system in the perforating room has many unique features

In the laboratory building the basement floor is used for titling, cartoon production and storage. The main floor is used for administration purposes, and to a small extent for shipping and for vaults. It is on this floor, too, that the Spoor-Thompson automatic processing machinery will be placed in operation. These are the machines with which it is possible to increase production far beyond present limits, and without the addition of manual labor, all of the work being carried out automatically.

For the purpose of supplying current to the several processes involved, special electric feeders have been run between the studio and the laboratory so that both alternating and direct current may be supplied in the event that the regular laboratory service should fail.

New Sun-Light Products Predicted

Although production of the standard lamp has been increased to its maximum during the last year, the Sun-Light Arc Corp., according to its president, J. Justice Harmer, has found time and facilities to perfect several unusual innovations in the realm of studio and theatre illumination.

They will be announced individually from time to time as conditions present themselves.

The expansion of the Sun Light Arc Corp. has focused the attention of the theatrical world. This surprise was brought to the climax by Mr. Harmer, when he gave out the information that his company has completed plans for its own office building in Hollywood and another in London. In addition to this, an architect is drawing up plans for an office building which will have a model studio to be located in the heart of New York City. It will be unusual in that it will be equipped only with Sun Light Arcs. The engineers figure that with the new attachments and devices now available for these lights all necessary effects may be secured.

The Sun Light Arc Corp. has also designed and practically completed two portable engine driven motor generator sets for use on location work. The capacity of each of these sets is 50 k.w., which is great enough to accommodate three Sun Light Arc units continuously and a larger number for shorter periods. These portable sets may be used at any place and at any time with as good photographic results as could be secured with the most elaborate layout. As these motor generator sets will be rented, the Sun Light Arc Corp. will be in a position to give further efficient service to the trade.

225 Simplex PROJECTORS

GUARANTEED BY MACHINE CO. INC.
th St— New York

Simplex Designer Was Former Official of Famous Players

Edwin S. Porter Was Treasurer and Director in Early Days

IT is a startling coincidence that the man who helped to organize and was an important factor in the affairs of the original Famous Players Company, which is now the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, should also play an important part in the inventing and designing of the Simplex Projector, which has advanced the scientific projection of motion pictures so greatly and at the same time giving to the projection world the many conveniences and improvements which help to protect film and abolish fire hazard.

Edwin S. Porter, Vice-President of Precision Machine Company. Mr. Porter was formerly an official of the Famous Players Co.

Mr. Edwin S. Porter, vice-president of the Precision Machine Company, builders of the Simplex Projector, is remembered as the treasurer and technical director of the Famous Players Company. Many of that company's early successes being produced under his capable direction. So great was his knowledge of everything pertaining to the production of motion pictures, that it caused the author of a recent well-known work to say:

"No other producer of motion pictures has ever been able to equal or approach the wonderful camera and other mechanical effects that Mr. Porter utilized in the production of motion pictures. Mr. Porter as the technical director of the Famous Players will go down in the history of the motion picture as the father of the present form of photoplay, he having put the first dramatic story in motion pictures."

With this technical and all-around studio and laboratory knowledge, together with his scientific and practical projection experience gained since 1896, Mr. Porter was, indeed, well fitted to design and produce the Simplex Projector, which to-day in the amusement and educational fields is regarded as the highest type of motion picture projector that has yet been placed upon the market.

Many of the industry do not realize what an important part is played by the Simplex Projector in the various studios where the product of the Famous Players Company is printed.

Let us take a look around the studio projection room and convince ourselves of the high standard both in workmanship and material that is required in the projector, whose important duty is the running off of the new prints as they are assembled. The various scenes have been assembled and the finished print is about to be screened for the first time in order that light defects, photographic and printing imperfections may be noted, and also in order that the assembling of the various scenes may be checked up as being O. K.

On account of the large number of reels that must thus be reviewed, and owing to the necessity of making early deliveries of the prints, the projection speed maintained in studio screenings averages about seven (7) minutes to one thousand (1000) feet theatre speed.

Special Simplex Machines

One of the things which strike the observer as being somewhat extraordinary is the peculiar design of Simplex machines installed at the Famous Players' Studio, and what makes the entire installation marked, is the absolute absence of speed controls. The speed controls have been removed in order to gain time through eliminating the gradual stopping and starting which the speed control insures. The switch is snapped and we sit in darkness—the motor buzzing is heard for an instant and the quiet running gears are revolving at high speed, the only sound now coming from the projection room being the pleasant hum of well-made gears operating long, one begins to realize what a terrific strain is imposed upon the studio projector.

In order that the examination of the operating in perfect unison. The projectionist stands with his eyes fixed upon the screen; suddenly his experienced glance reveals an over-developed spot in the print, he snaps his switch off and brings his Simplex mechanism to a sudden halt, without jar or grind.

This sudden stop is quite necessary in order that the projectionist will not be forced to unwind too much of the lower reel in order to indicate the required section for the attention of the inspector, who will later go over the spots as indicated.

E. M. Porter, General Manager of the Precision Machine Co.

It is necessary, too, that the machine stop and start without a jar or grind, for a sudden jar means tension and tension on that green, new print would be fatal.

The indicating clip having been quickly applied to the offending section of the reel in question, the projectionist again snaps on his machine switch and without the easing influence of the speed control this fully loaded mechanism is suddenly thrown into high speed; all of this being accomplished without a jerk or jar. It is now evident to the observer that studio projection demands a great deal of the projector, and that this thought is well founded is proven by the fact that the stopping and starting of the machine under these conditions is practically constant for one reason or another. When one stops to consider what it means to inflict the stopping and starting upon the already hard-working machine all day

Character in Frames

WE equip lobbies that contribute individuality and elegance to the theatre.

Every frame is so designed to bespeak character and an air of refinement.

Our work is also of special interest to architects who require lobbies of character beyond the scope of the ordinary manufacturer.

EVERY design is rich in style and tastefully harmonizes with the plans and expressions of architecture of every period.

Frames of permanent beauty, wrought in lasting materials, built to increase box-office receipts and theatre popularity.

Let us improve your front and lobby.

film may be simplified, a specially designed type of studio Simplex has been provided for the new Famous Players-Lasky studios, as a glance at the battery of five such machines will show. In place of the regulation iron pedestal, these machines are mounted upon a black finished wooden box-like table supported by four nickled legs.

The mechanism and regulation upper magazine is fastened to the top of this table, the front of which (facing the user) is open. The lower film shield is cut out in order to permit a good-sized lower loop to run out. The speed control is not used on this type of machine, the mechanism being directly belted to a quick stopping and starting 1,100 R. P. M., Holtzer-Cabot motor, which is the one-sixth H. P. type. This motor is located directly below the mechanism and occupies the space usually taken up by the lower magazine. In place of the usual take-up which on the commercial Simplex is located in the lower magazine, a specially designed hanger with a ten-inch reel and regular Simplex take-up is mounted in the interior of the table box directly under the position occupied by the lamp house on the regulation Simplex. A long belt drive spans the twenty-inch space between the mechanism and the take-up reel. Midway between the mechanism and the take-up is mounted a black metal box inside of which is located a small finger lamp covered with a square of ground glass. This box is used for the examining of the film which is taken from the lower sprocket of the mechanism to the take-up reel passes over the ground glass allowing (when necessary) for a perfect close-up view of the film.

Light Housing Is Unique

As the projection distance is no greater than a four-foot throw, and the size of picture is limited to two feet, the usual Simplex lamp house is dispensed with. In place of the regular lamp house, a very unique arrangement of lighting has been devised. A special small housing no greater than five inches square has been attached to the outside of the film trap, and is really a part of the complete film trap unit, occupying the position where the cooling plate is usually located.

Inside of this small, well-ventilated housing is mounted a miniature Mazda lamp, which is controlled by a miniature regulator, providing for "bright-medium and-dim" illumination. A special small condenser system also is included in this housing.

A controlling switch is used which when thrown "in" sets the motor and mechanism in motion, and also turns on the illuminating Mazda in the special housing. When, during the running of the films, anything appears on the screen that warrants a film examination, the switch is thrown off, and the screen light is shut off, as is also the mechanism and motor, while the examining light is automatically lighted.

Simplex a Studio Favorite

It might be well to note that aside from the large number of Simplex projectors employed in this manner by the Famous Players Company, 88 per cent. of the leading film studios of the country are using Simplexes for similar work, it being the opinion of the producers and directors that the Simplex is best fitted for this sort of work by virtue of its material, quality and workmanship. It might be added that since the cessation of hostilities which has relieved the Simplex factory of a certain pressure, no less than nine (9) important improvements and exclusive features have been incorporated in the Simplex. The very latest and most noteworthy being the commercializing of the new Simplex Mazda Incandescent Lamp Equipment, which is designed and engineered along lines entirely apart from equipments of similar type on other projectors. The new Simplex Mazda uses practically the same optical distances between the lamp and condenser, and the condenser and the mechanism as prevails on the Carbon Arc Lamp, and can be said to be the only commercial projector using the Incandescent Lamp that employs the regular plane-convex condenser system.

Through the use of the Simplex Mazda Equipment a new field of endeavor has opened not only for the Simplex projector, but for the high class productions of the Famous Players Film Company in schools, churches and miscellaneous institutions, which have heretofore hesitated regarding the installation of a commercial projector on account of the Carbon Arc with its attending heat and required attention.

Studio to have Fine Facilities

When the architects of the studio laid out the studio it would seem that as much attention was given to the facilities for the studio workers as to the actual producing facilities. For instance, the stars have been provided with fine suites of rooms, consisting of reception room, dressing room, dressing room and a room for the star's secretary. Extra large rooms have been provided for "extras" when the mob scenes are being filmed.

A gymnasium, library and restaurant for the studio technicians have been included in the plans. At the restaurant food will be sold at the lowest possible price.

In the basement of the building, which will also be used for production purposes, two tremendous tanks have been installed for water scenes. Rain machinery has also been included in the basement equipment.

The appearance of the inside of the main studio resembles a monster auditorium. Not a single column or post obstructs the floor areas, but up above a perfect network of footwalks and roof girders handles all the building stresses as well as the manipulation of the lamp banks.

The main studio is 260 x 120 and has a clear height of 50 ft. The stage in the basement is the same size but with a ceiling height of only 25 ft.

The land on which the buildings stand was purchased for the Famous Players Corporation through Cross & Brown, real estate brokers.

The Coming Motion Picture Center of the East

The Story of Queen's Borough, New York City, and Its Rapid Growth

By Walter I. Willis, Secretary, Chamber of Commerce of the Borough of Queens

WITHOUT doubt the big jump in the population of Los Angeles during the past ten years, making it the largest city west of St. Louis, has been due largely to the establishment of the motion picture industry in that attractive city. But now it has a rival 3,000 miles east on Long Island—a rival which many motion picture producers claim will surpass it within the next few years.

Where is Queens Borough and why is it becoming the motion picture center of the East? To answer the first question—Queens Borough is one of the five political subdivisions of New York City. It is also one of the oldest counties in New York State, located on Long Island between Brooklyn and Nassau County, and just across the East River from Manhattan. It comprises 37 per cent of the area of New York City.

Ten years ago Queens Borough lacked direct transportation facilities with Manhattan. The only way to travel between these two sections of the city was by antiquated ferries, as one must still travel from Manhattan to reach the motion picture studios located at Fort Lee, N. J.

Big changes have come to pass, however, since the opening of the Queensboro Bridge, from Fifty-ninth street, Manhattan, to Long Island City, which has enabled automobilists to travel between these sections of the city in from five to ten minutes.

The gigantic Pennsylvania Station at Thirty-third street was opened in 1910 with electric trains of the Long Island Railroad, through tunnels under the East River, making it possible to reach Queens Borough in less than ten minutes. The subway and elevated systems of the city have been extended under and over the East River so that passengers can now reach Long Island City and other sections in Queens in less time than it requires to reach points in upper Manhattan.

Why is Queens becoming the motion picture center of the East?—its strategic location and its geographical advantages, combined with the great changes and improvements in the art of making motion pictures, are the principal reasons for Queens becoming a great motion picture center.

Several big studios have now been built and many more are coming. The first large studio to establish in Queens was the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, whose beautiful building is described in this issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The Selznick Pictures Corporation have purchased a large tract a few blocks distant where they will also erect a big studio. The Municipal Studios, Inc., have purchased a block 600x200 feet, where they will erect what they claim will be the largest motion picture studio in the world. The Hal Benedict Studios have been established in College Point, and in Flushing is the Supreme Pictures Corporation Studio and the studio of the Gaumont Weekly.

Industries manufacturing motion picture accessories naturally follow in the wake of these big studios. The G. M. Film Printing Company have erected a large building in Long Island City, as have the Patheoscope Company of America. The M. J. Wohl Company, manufacturers of lighting apparatus for motion pictures, have established within the last month in Long Island City.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in a recent statement to the Queensboro Chamber of Commerce, told the various steps they went through in their plans before finally establishing their studio in Long Island City. Mr. Zukor stated: "Our reasons are obvious. Accessibility, I think, was the biggest. Since the bad winter several seasons ago, when most of the Fort Lee studios had to be closed because of lack of coal, there have been many and bitter complaints from stars and studio employees—many of the former were often obliged to walk up the long slippery hill from the ferry—and many thousands of dollars of valuable time was lost.

"Now the workers who travel on the rapid transit system of the city will be able to reach the studio in twenty minutes from Times Square.

"It has long been whispered in film circles that the center of production is slowly shifting back from the West—that New York will become the producing Mecca as it is the distributing.

"The Queensboro Bridge will do much to bring the cinema world to Long Island City—for not only must a certain number of employees make the trip each day, but there is a great deal of carting of scenery and "props" to be done. The saving in transportation costs on this one item will be many thousands of dollars."

Myron Selznick, president of the Selznick Pictures Corporation, in giving the reasons why they selected Queens Borough for their new studio, stated to a representative of the Queensboro Chamber of Commerce:

"The one thing which California has in greater abundance than the East is sunshine, but in the winter when sunshine is at a premium you cannot rely upon California any more than you can New York. Rainy spells are of longer duration and usually followed and preceded by several cloudy days. So far as the much-vaunted California scenery is concerned, there is scarcely any sort of a scene you want that cannot be reached in one day's ride from New York by train or motor. Why, some of the finest desert scenes ever put on the screen were made on the Long Island sand dunes, and when you want an industrial plant for a background, California has nothing like the variety and dimensions of the factories which we will have within easy walking distance of our new studio.

"Besides, New York City is the logical home and residence of theatrical people and the engaging of a high-class cast is greatly simplified. Furthermore, New York is a cosmopolitan city containing types of every nationality. There is the Ghetto with its types; Chinatown, harbor and river life.

"Again, no production company is justified in owning all the property which they probably use for one picture only. They borrow or rent a large part of their equipment and furniture, and New York is far superior in exchange facilities to any other center in the United States."

John W. Grey, president of the Supreme Pictures, Inc., whose studio is located in the Flushing section of Queens Borough, states:

"We can secure period furniture, rugs, furnishings and valuable accessories of a vastly higher order than is possible on the Pacific Coast. As for getting crowds for mob scenes and convenience for the cast, in actual operation a $1,000,000 studio at Islington, London, completed within the last year. The first production to be made at this studio, "The Great Day," a picture adaptation of the Drury Lane melodrama under the direction of Hugh Ford, is already under way.

The next producing unit, which has already passed the stage of contemplation, will be a $2,000,000 studio at Bombay, India. Frank Meyer, assistant secretary of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; and Tarkington Baker have already left for India to lay plans for the construction of a studio and future productions in this locale under the manipulations of a corporation which will be known as the Indian Empire Famous Players-Lasky Film Co., Ltd.

Studio organizations have been formed also in Switzerland, France, Spain, Scandinavia, Poland and Czecho-Slovakia, and it is more than likely that Famous Players-Lasky production will be under way in those countries before another year has passed.

Personnel at New Studio

In a project the size of the Famous Players plant at Long Island City the question of personnel is a vastly important one. Fortunately for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the men selected to construct, manage and supervise the installation and operation of the studio and its equipment are all men of great proven ability and knowledge of their craft.

Mr. Victor H. Clarke, in charge of construction, was formerly with the Stone & Webster Co., of Boston. George Kremer is chief studio electrician and M. W. Palmer occupies the important post of mechanical engineer in charge of heating and ventilating equipment. Following the resignation of J. H. McNulty, Victor Smith, for seven years chief studio electrician of the Biograph Co., was appointed to the position of studio manager.

Queens offers great advantages over New Jersey inasmuch as it is only a short subway trip with a five cent fare as opposed to the ferry and trolley necessary to reach Fort Lee.

"As far as locations are concerned, Queens Borough offers exceptional advantages in the matter of pretentious estates and exteriors unsurpassed in any part of the country. It is virgin territory for motion pictures and it will be some time before the newness wears off as is the case in California, where it is almost impossible to secure any exterior location that has not already been shown.

"As daylight studios are things of the past, there is no longer any advantage in producing on the Pacific Coast, because when interiors are used, they are essentially lighted by artificial light and the sunlight of California is a detriment rather than an advantage.

"Another point in favor of producing in the East—particularly in Queens Borough—is the close proximity to the market. New York City is unquestionably the film center of the world and all distributing companies use it as a hub in their distribution.

"All of the big producing companies have seen the handwriting on the wall and realize the advantages to be gained by producing in the East. New York will be the center of the film industry and the productions will be made in Queens Borough."

Many Cooper-Hewitts Used in Studio

The mere fact that the manufacturers' name has come into use as a common noun is an indication of the wide use of Cooper-Hewitts in motion picture studios. No studio is complete without its complement of these lights.

At the Famous Players studio the number of Cooper-Hewitts is enormous. The preliminary order consisted of over 2,000 units, consisting of 192 skylight banks, 50 floor stands, special footlights, title lamps and other units for special illumination.

All of the skylight banks are to be arranged so that they may be swiveled 180 degrees—or 90 degrees either side of normal. Special hanging devices have been perfected for the suspension of the overhead lights, and also for the raising and lowering of the banks. Many of these devices have been designed especially for this installation, and their operation will be watched with great interest by those acquainted with studio practice.

Heating and Ventilating the Motion Picture Theatre

Adequate Ventilation Means Increased Revenue

THE question of adequate ventilation for motion picture theatres from a business point of view, as well as from the standpoint of health, is becoming more and more universally recognized as an every-day necessity. The trend in this direction was begun by the enforcement of state and city laws and ordinances. When these laws first came into existence a few years ago considerable opposition was encountered in enforcing them because of the expense incurred when installing heating and ventilating equipment. At that time the motion picture theatres were small and very inferior in every way to the present day theatres. The seating capacity as a rule ranged from 200 to 500 and the buildings were for the most part old and remodeled. Ventilation was seldom thought of as a necessity for the theatre and consequently the necessary space for installing ventilating equipment was hard to obtain. Alterations were always necessary in order to install the equipment and the cost was much higher than it would have been had the building been designed originally with the intention of installing the apparatus. The cost of ventilating these small theatres looked large to the owners and managers; this, together with the fact that the public had not been educated to good air conditions, explains the cause of the opposition.

Theatres Have Minimum Natural Ventilation

Comparing theatre buildings with those of other classes, such as office buildings, stores, and like buildings where people congregate, theatres probably need mechanical ventilation more than any other buildings because of the very small amount of natural ventilation. Windows and other openings materially increase the fire hazard and as a source of annoyance from noises, cold draft and light they are very objectionable. It has been very generally agreed that a building does not need mechanical ventilation when the cubical contents per occupant exceeds 1,000 cubic feet and where the window area exceeds twelve per cent of the floor area, the windows being so located that they can be used for ventilation. Obviously, it is impossible for a theatre to meet these requirements. In fact, it takes a very spacious office building to do so.

Attitude of Theatre-Goers Toward Ventilation

The general public has been educated to such an extent regarding good air conditions that they will not patronize an unsanitary or poorly ventilated theatre. Owners and managers are aware of this fact, therefore proper ventilation has become, to them, a sound business investment; one that pays them well. It is interesting to note that after the installation of satisfactory ventilating systems in Chicago theatres, the owners and managers in the great majority of cases testified voluntarily to the improvement, not only in the conditions of the theatre, but as to the increase in patronage and improvement in their financial conditions.

Apparatus of Ample Size Important

The selection of equipment is very important and the mistake should not be made of installing apparatus which is too small. It should be selected amply large and the air duct system figured for low velocities. By doing this, noise from the operation of the fan or from the flow of air through the ducts is avoided, power required to drive the fan is reduced, and a very decided cooling effect can be obtained, in summer, by operating the apparatus at its maximum capacity. The equipment should be selected to deliver at least twenty-five cubic feet of air per minute per person and, if finances permit, it should be increased to thirty or more.

Importance of Air Washers and Heating Coils

Air washers and heating coils should always be installed with the ventilating supply fans and the heating coils should be under automatic control. An air washer is the best commercial apparatus on the market for thoroughly cleansing and humidifying or dehumidifying the air. The humidity is very desirable in winter and the cooling that can be accomplished in summer is no less important. Both the heating and the ventilation are accomplished with one apparatus. The equipment is not complicated and all that is necessary to obtain satisfactory results is to use correct principles of design, judgment in its installation, and ordinary care in the operation.

Typical layout of mushroom introduction system in theatre

Types of Systems

Ventilating systems for theatres during the last three or four years have narrowed down to about three main types. The type of system that modern theatres install probably more than any other and one when designed correctly is the very best shown in the accompanying diagram.

Mushroom Ventilator and Plenum Chamber System

The air passes through the tempering coils where, during the winter, it is warmed before entering the air washer. When it passes through the spray chamber of the air washer it is cleansed, after which it goes to the heating coils where it is heated to the desired temperature and then forced through the mushroom ventilators located under the seats. A multivane fan is used for supplying the air. So-called Plenum Chambers are provided under the floors of the auditorium and balcony and the mushroom ventilators are connected directly to these plenum chambers. Cut No. 2 shows the detail of one of these ventilators. The similarity to a mushroom will be readily noticed. Cut No. 3 shows an interesting installation of mushroom ventilators during construction. The floor introductory system has the great advantage over all other systems in that fresh air is distributed uniformly all over the building, in fact, it is the only proper system, for uniform distribution in theatres that have a balcony.

In cool weather the air enters the theatre at 70 degrees, while in hot weather, due to the cooling effect of the air washer, the air is 10 degrees lower than the outside temperature. This reduction in temperature gives a very decided cooling and refreshing atmosphere to a theatre and is a boon to the owner. The mushroom or floor introduction method described is the ideal method of introducing the air. The fact that the finest opera houses and theatres of this country are so ventilated is an indorsement of the system. The air leaves the mushrooms at a low velocity and a temperature about that of the room, with the result that no drafts are experienced. A positive exhaust is provided by means of an electric propeller or other exhaust fans. The fans discharge through the ventilators, which are constructed to swing with the wind, therefore the wind is a help due to the ejector or pulling effect instead of an obstacle, which would be the case were the ventilator unable to swing, thereby permitting the wind to blow directly against opening, part of the time. Drawing No. 4 shows a typical heating and ventilating apparatus such as would be installed on the system described above.

A New Style of Theatre Chair

Side view of chair

From W. W. Wolary, of Washington, Iowa, comes a set of photographs of a new theatre chair he has perfected. In explaining the chair, the inventor says:

I am taking the liberty of enclosing cuts of my new perfected theatre chair, which for cleanliness and safety has no equal on the market to-day.

The cuts enclosed are descriptive of the mission style, and the same will be manufactured in two other styles, viz.: curved seat and back upholstered. They can and will be manufactured so as to compete in price with the ordinary theatre chair. You will note that when being used they have the appearance of the ordinary theatre chair, but when seat is up and turned one quarter around, it turns the theatre into a veritable row of aisles, thereby affording safety and making an easy matter of the problem of keeping the theatre clean.

(Editorial Note) Providing this chair can be made at a price comparable with others now on the market it should find many sales. It would be necessary also that the pedestal construction be sturdy enough to resist the rough treatment met by opera chairs. Only a close examination of the design would enable us to give a decision on this feature.

Bartola Selected by Kleist

Work on A. J. Kleist's handsome new 1,800-seat theatre at Pontiac, Michigan, is rapidly nearing completion and it is scheduled to open early in September. Mr. Kleist reports that one of the features of his new house will be a magnificent Barton pipe organ and that experts from the Bartola Musical Instrument Company now are at work putting the finishing touches on the installation of the big instrument. A Bartola has been used in Mr. Kleist's Oakland theatre for several years and it gave such satisfaction that when the time came to contract for a larger instrument for his new theatre he arranged with Bartola Instrument Co. to install one of their new pipe organs.

Crane Opens New Architectural Offices

Announcements have been received of the opening of a Chicago office by C. Howard Crane and Elmer George Kiehler, prominent motion picture theatre architects. The new office will be located at 127 North Dearborn street, and will be in charge of Mr. H. Kenneth Franzheim

Practical Electricity—XXI

Study Lessons for the Projectionist

The Direct Current Generator

THE method in which electricity is generated by a moving conductor cutting a magnetic field has already been explained, and it was further stated that the induced E. M. F. set up in the armature was alternating, that is, the polarity changed each time there was a change in the direction of cutting of the magnetic field.

In order to obtain direct current in the external circuit it is necessary to have some means of reversing the coil terminals at the instant of the current reversal in the armature. This action is taken care of by means of the commutator, the method of connection for which is shown in Fig. 62.

The commutator is made up of a series of copper bars or segments which are rigidly connected to the shaft in the form of a cylinder at one end of the armature and are insulated from each other by mica sheets or fibre. Brushes are so arranged that they bear on the commutator segments and conduct the current to the outside line. These brushes are set so that they pass from one segment to the other during the time that the conductor is moving parallel to the lines of force and there is no E. M. F. induced in the winding.

Different positions of the loop winding and the commutator and the corresponding brush contact points are shown by the Figs 63, 64, 65 and 66. Fig. 63 shows the conductors moving parallel to the field and the brushes passing from one commutator bar to the other. As the loop is revolved and an E. M. F. induced the current passes out through the brush N, around the external circuit and returns to the loop through brush M, thus completing the circuit. Current continues to flow in the direction AB until this conductor reaches the top and ceases to cut the magnetic lines, also at this time the brushes pass from one commutator segment to the other, so that with the reversal of the direction of the current generated which is now in the direction of B to A, the positive end of the loop will be connected to the brush M, and the current continues to flow in the same direction. This action is shown by Figs. 65 and 66. Thus it is seen that the purpose of the commutator is to reverse the connections between the terminals of the loop and line wires each time the direction of cutting of the magnetic field is changed.

A single loop, however, will not deliver a steady current, for even when used with a commutator which causes the current to flow in one direction, there will be no induced E. M. F. while the conductors are passing parallel to the magnetic lines. Thus a pulsating current which attains a maximum when the greatest number of lines are being cut, and falls to zero again when the loop is in the neutral position. The curve showing this action is illustrated by Fig. 67 in which the negative part of the curve of Fig. 61 is made positive by means of commutation.

To obtain a steady current, with comparatively even voltage at the brushes a large number of coils is placed around the armature core and the commutator made up of a corresponding number of segments. By this means the loops of the different coils may be so distributed that some of them are cutting a maximum number of lines at all times. Thus by increasing the number of coils sufficiently a voltage of practically constant value may be obtained.

The effect of winding two coils on an armature at 90 degrees apart is shown by the curves of Fig. 68. The voltage curves are 90 degrees apart so that when the induced voltage of one curve is zero, that of the other is at a maximum, so that the resulting voltage is that shown by the solid line.

In the construction of an armature there are two general methods in which the conductors may be wound. These are known as the Ring and Drum type of armatures.

The ring armature coil is made hollow and the wire is wound in and out on the core. Such a winding may be made continuous with leads to the commutator segments being taken off at the proper points. This method is that which was first used in the generation of electricity, and is now sometimes used for high voltage because the numerous coils necessary can be well insulated. However, since it is only the outer conductors of the ring winding which generate the current, because the inner conductors are screened from the lines of force, the drum winding was developed in which the conductors are placed in slots on the surface of the armature core. By this method less wire is used to generate a given voltage because the only inac-

Gentlemen:

As any producer will readily explain, initial runs of "rushes", and first showings of all pictures must be true, exact, and exhibited without any flaws in order that we may judge the values of light, photography, make-ups, etc. Perfect projection, is therefore imperative, and it is a pleasure for me to state that ever since I can remember I have been fortunate enough to have POWERS machines in our projection rooms.

This is proof positive of the exceptional worth of your product. It is my desire to continue using the POWERS machine.

Very truly yours,

tive section of a drum winding is the end connectors, while in the case of the ring winding the entire inner section is practically useless for generative purposes. Fig. 69 illustrates the core for different forms of windings, and Fig. 70 shows the way in which the two kinds of windings are made up.

When an iron ring is placed in the field between the poles of a machine the flux will flow as shown by Fig. 71, however, when a winding is placed on such a core and the armature rotated so that a current is set up in these windings, then the field produced by the current in this winding will tend to distort the field set up by the field magnets. This effect is shown by Fig. 72.

With reference to Fig. 72, the line xy is the Neutral Axis since it is perpendicular to the magnetic field at no load. This line would indicate the point at which there would be no voltage induced in the armature conductors and would be the proper point at which commutation should take place if there was only the flux set up by the field magnets to deal with. However, due to field distortion, caused by what is known as armature reaction, the conductors are still cutting some of the lines and as the brushes in passing from one commutator segment would momentarily short-circuit a certain number of conductors so that a current would flow which would cause arcing when this segment left the brush.

To obtain proper commutation it is necessary to place the brushes forward of the neutral axis as shown by the line mn, this angle between mn and the neutral axis being known as the angle of lead. Additional discussion on the proper brush setting will be taken up under the subject of Armature Reaction.

Projectionist Adds a Few Valuable Words to Article on Intermittent Movement

Makes Several Suggestions That He Hopes Will Be Considered by Manufacturers

G. W. BENNEWITS, a frequent contributor to these columns comes in this time with an informative article on the Intermittent Movement written in answer to the story on the same subject which appeared in a late issue of the News:

Just a few lines and a suggestion to the Nicholas Power Co.

In July 10 issue of the News the article on adjusting Powers Intermittent Movement, page 492 third paragraph reads: The pincross spindle is pushed inwards (from the left) again until its end meets the small eccentric bushing, No. 671, and this bushing is now adjusted by turning it (with a screw driver applied to its slotted outer end) until the pincross enters it readily, and is a free rotating fit. When this is the case it will be found that the intermittent spindle is perfectly level, and is secured in this position by tightening bushing (No. 671) in place, by means of its set-screw.

I think that the Nicholas Power Co. should put out a special tool for their intermittent movement, as to begin with I do not think that there is one out of twenty projection rooms that have a screw driver with a blade wide enough to catch both slots in bushing, No. 671, and it is not a good practice to use just one of them. When using just one slot you are liable to break off the corner of the bushing.

Some use the screw driver this way, others use the side of the screw-driver blade (spoiling the blade), and still others use pliers. Some take and emery the bushing so that it will turn freely in the casting, but this is bad as after setting up the movement as you want it, then tightening set-screws that holds the bushing throws it out of adjustment. True sometimes a bushing may be a little oversize and in this case you will have to dress it down some. But before doing this make sure that there are no burrs or rough spots on the end of the bearing. If there is, dress them down with a fine file or fine emery cloth. Then make sure that you have backed off the set-screw and apply a little clean oil to bushing and casting. If you find it is necessary to dress down the bearing, be very careful as you can take off metal but you can't put it back. Try it every little while and play safe.

Now it would not cost a great deal to supply each machine with a special tool for adjusting the movement and you cannot make as good adjustment with a make shift as with a real tool.

Some will say that they do not need a tool but there are a great many more that do need a tool.

Another thing that some have had trouble with is the bushing, No. 671 sticking. In this case do not try to force the bushing as you may make matters worse. Take a torch and apply the flame to the casting around the bushing being careful not to heat the bearing. This will cause the casting to expand and will free the bushing. Never carry the heating too far, just heat it, never get it red hot or anywhere near it.

As to installing a new intermittent sprocket I would suggest that the Projectionist take a pair of thin-nosed pliers, say with a nose $\frac{3}{4}$ -in. wide. In one jaw drill a $\frac{3}{4}$ -in. hole about $\frac{3}{4}$ -in. from the tip of the jaw. Then grind the knurled face of the jaw smooth. Now when you want to insert the taper pins, line up the holes and put the pin in place. Take the pliers and press the pins home, having the jaw with the hole in it on the small side of the hole so that when the pin comes through they will enter the hole drilled in the pliers. When removing the sprocket just reverse the pliers and press the pins out. This will save a lot of trouble as when using a hammer it is very easy to spring the shaft.

A hammer is the most common tool in use and is a tool that many do not know how or when to use. Many men rely on the hammer and cold chisel as the tools for every use. I know of a man who used a cold chisel and hammer to get the cover off of a Simplex movement thinking that the cover was pressed on instead of screwed on. Another who undertook to install a new pincross in a Powers. When he started the intermittent sprocket was as good as new, but by the time he was ready to reassemble the pincross and sprocket he had all but six teeth on the sprocket jimmied. Still this kind of a man gets and demands the same money as the man who knows how.

I would like to hear what the Nicholas Power Co. have to say about putting out an Intermittent Tool and also what other Projectionists think about it.

Considerable Juggling of Scenes

CHAS. NIGHTINGALE, Johnstown, Pa., describes a transplanting operation which he was forced to carry out recently on a comedy received in bad condition from the exchange. How many readers of this department can read twelve words in five-sixteenths of a second?

We might say here that all that is necessary to join the N. A. M. L. is to fill out the pledge and send it to this office. We will take care of it from that point on.

Nightingale's letter reads:

This is the first time I have written anything to the News, but I will say this much that I read it each week. I am enclosing a few pieces of film that came to me in this condition. By the looks of one piece undoubtedly some operator (I will underline operator because he is not fit to be listed as projectionist) was in a hurry and forgot to match sprocket holes, as you can see by this one piece, also the other one with title in which piece is a swell framer.

I received a comedy from a firm at Pittsburgh and as I have always had the habit of looking over film before running I took a chance and did not bother looking at it. But while running it I found a title of twelve words with only five blocks in which to read it. I suppose some exchanges believe we have a portable machine with Mazda equipment that we can stop at a title and wait till the audience is through reading it. (Enclosed is title above mentioned.)

Now if you could furnish me with this information I would be very much pleased. How would you go about it to join the Anti-Misframer League as I am a firm believer in it. If all projectionists would cut out bad splices, punch holes, quick scenes and such and send them to the exchanges I think the exchange manager would look these things up.

Another thing I nearly forgot to mention about the comedy is it had no ending and I was forced to take a scene out of the middle of reel where the comedians were kissing and put it at end of picture to make it complete.

Wants Address of Book Publishers

William A. Lippert, Globe theatre, Johnstown, N. Y., writes:

Noticed in the July 24th issue of the News in the Projection Department, an article in regards to a "Lens Testing Chart," as mentioned in Volume II of the Optical Society of America's publication.

Will you kindly supply me with information as to where I can obtain this publication, as also the address of the Optical Society of America?

Where can I secure the book, "Condensed Course in Motion Picture Photography," as mentioned by the New York Institute of Photography and edited by Carl L. Gregory?

Reply:

The Journal of the Optical Society of America is published from the office of John P. Smith Printing Company, Rochester, N. Y., and any communications to the officers will get to the right individual if sent to that address.

The "Condensed Course in Motion Picture Photography," by Carl Louis Gregory, may be obtained from the author by writing him at New Rochelle, N. Y., and remitting the sum of $6, which we believe is the cost of the volume.

Two projectionists from the Globe theatre, New Orleans, Victor Bouterie and C. Zerr, have submitted to us a little idea they have developed for their Simplex machines. The device is an oil catcher which prevents oil from dripping from the machine on to the floor and keeps the projection room in good condition. Although the specifications would indicate that the two projectionists made all the material themselves, the readers will understand that practically every part may be purchased outright, thus simplifying the attachment. The two illustrations on this page will explain much better than words the idea that these men have developed.

INTRODUCTION

The new studios have decided from either their own experience or that of others, that it is an economical proposition for them to have their studios so equipped that a sufficient supply of electrical energy will be available for the proper illumination of their stages. During the past two years, there has been a general tendency towards using more artificial illumination in the studio, almost to the total exclusion of sunlight. During this period, there has also been a great tendency to unify the electrical installations so the same nature of current is used throughout, irrespective of the nature of supply current. Some studios, particularly the new ones, in and about New York are being equipped with direct current exclusively.

The large power companies, except in restricted zones, are making the extensions of their power distribution system, alternating current, and in fact, have replaced most of their old direct current distribution systems with alternating current. These tendencies have forced most of the studios to install their own substations for converting the alternating current supply to direct current.

Except in certain portions of New York City, there are very few studios located where they can obtain sufficient direct current to meet their requirements, but nearly every studio is located where alternating current can be purchased in sufficient quantity so that the easiest and most economical means of obtaining direct current is to purchase alternating current power and convert it. Converting apparatus will be described later in this paper.

II. TWO-WIRE VS. THREE-WIRE DISTRIBUTION

A two-wire system is one in which a single voltage is generated and a three-wire system is one in which two separate single equal voltages are transmitted which may be additively combined to produce a third voltage. With the two-wire system, as the name implies, only two wires are required. With the three-wire system, three wires are required for main distribution. On a three-wire distribution system, one wire known as the "neutral" is common to both the equal voltage circuits and carries only the unbalanced current in the system. By unbalance is meant the difference in amperes flowing in the two equal voltage circuits. The other two wires, known as the outside wires, carry their proportional part of the total current in the system, whether balanced or unbalanced.

2 Wire D.C. System.

3 Wire D.C. System.

An Alliance With the Music Makers

By Charles D. Isaacson

Author, "Face to Face with Great Musicians"

THE music publishers are to be considered as valuable adjuncts to your musical activities.

They are in a position to strengthen your position; they are equipped to do real things for you.

In the first place, in this talk about music publishers, I want to emphasize the fact that there are two grand divisions in the business.

One publisher devotes himself to what is called standard music.

The other fellow is in the business of selling only "music of the moment."

Of course, some houses sell both popular and standard music, but generally where this happens, there is a division into departments.

By standard music, I refer to the writings of the master musicians of all epochs, past and present—the accepted works of all time, the music which will never die, and which has continued to thrill and move audiences since first they were written—the music which is not merely known to-day and forgotten to-morrow—the music which has not a spectacular, meteoric career, and is on everybody's lips now and sickening to-morrow—the music which is better the twentieth time you hear it than the first, and better still the two hundredth time than the twentieth. Standard music need not be music the layman does not know. I place in the standard catalogue the little songs of simple measure, which have survived the ravages of time, and still are known.

My "music of the moment," I mean the late hits, which please everybody now, and won't be remembered to-morrow. In this category are all the songs, dances, musical comedy sensations, novelties, etc.

Both divisions are absolutely essential to the business. You see the concert manager would spurn the "music of the moment"—but you dare not do so (much bears out the necessity of having the kind of "people's man" for the musical executive, I indicated, in last week's NEWS). The vaudeville manager, on the other hand, would say he needed nothing of the standard music. But you cannot say that, for the standard music is the backbone of your whole musical enterprise. You can't get along without it.

Now, I feel that the wideawake theatre man can get a lot of assistance from the music publishers.

Let us take the popular-music folks first.

Of course, every Tom, Dick and Harry who publishes a song, is anxious to make it a hit. He must get it sung and played, so that it will get "under the skin" of the public—and then they will go to the music stores and buy it.

While most of the publishers have long since discontinued the practice, they formerly even paid actors to use numbers. That was bad business, but it is mentioned to show how important it is for them to have their numbers played.

Knowing the wideawake spirit of these publishers, it would seem to me that properly approached, they would welcome with open arms the theatre managers who plan to do real things with current hits. They would go out of their way to aid, and to have their local dealers boost. It would be pure selfishness on their part, but, nevertheless, it would help you.

When you are all set to do yourself justice, I would recommend that you send a letter to the popular-music publishers, something along these lines: "Gentlemen: We are out to make this the headquarters for music, and we are going to carry through any idea, stunt, scheme, co-operative venture—which is not out of keeping with our policies, but which will help to give our patrons the music of the minute."

"We want you to feel that as far as this city is concerned, this is one place where you can count on getting a connection with the public ear for your hits and prospective hits."

"Just what it means to you, to possess a platform from which to reach a clientele of about ——— thousand persons a week, you know more than we. But the point of our letter to you, is this: You are looking for the means to spread your hits. We are looking for ideas to give our people the musical hits. This is the liveliest spot in our city."

"Keep the name of this theatre before you. Write us if you have anything special in mind right now, and if not, when you do come across a brilliant thought, sound us on it."

"If co-operation can give us both what we want, let's have it."

This letter would make any publisher sit up and take notice. He would keep you in mind. He would communicate with his local dealers, and would get his most brilliant ideas working for you. He would certainly become a business booster for you.

Along the lines of this letter, get one to your local music dealers—and inform them that if they have something really unusual to bring to you, for tie-up with their windows, counters, advertising, etc.—which will work into your store, that you will be open to reason. You know—make the musical publishers and dealers think and plan for the exploitation of their hits, and if their thinking and planning seems to promise box-office opportunities for you, then you'll take advantage, is it not so?

By the way, I should like to say a word here about so-called picture-songs.

I would say offhand, that all picture-songs ought to be considered not good until they prove themselves otherwise. It is not logical to suppose that a composer and word writer can dash off a hit just because it's going along with a picture. Most picture songs have been rank failures. There have been some hits—a very few—you could count them on one hand.

The audience will find an interest in a song bearing the name of the picture—and if it's half-way decent, it is always worth a venture. The point I wish to make is this: Don't just use a song because it carries the name of your feature picture, but if it's half-way decent, use it, and if it seems really good, then go the limit with it. Encourage the singing of it, in advance of its showing at your theatre—wherever you can. Use the song to impress the name upon the public—it's a wonderful means of doing it. To prove my contention, just imagine this condition: Say that it had been planned to make a motion picture called "Over There," which might have been run on the tail of that great song-hit. Gosh! Can you imagine the cash it would have meant to your house to have been able to have swung in a feature called "Over There," while everybody was singing it? Therefore, in any use of a picture-song, if you think it's a genuine hit, use your ideas to get it sung everywhere. You'll be doing the publisher's business for him, in this instance, but you'll be getting your return out of it, sure as fate.

Now, to return to the two kinds of publishers, let us now look at the concern devoted to standard music.

The dead departed composers of classics—Beethoven, Chopin, Schubert, Schumann, Mendelssohn, etc.—left their masterpieces to be used as anybody wanted to. The result is that any publisher has the right to do as he pleases. In the standard collections offered by different publishers, there are differences in editing, which only musicians can appreciate. The later masters and the living standard composers have retained rights in their products, and the result is that you will then find that the publishers have exclusive rights to their compositions, and are interested in spreading the name and fame of such men.

Therefore, while the "big hit" application of music is not to be considered in talking with the exclusive publishers of standard music, nevertheless the same principles apply as have been mentioned in connection with the popular-music publishers. You have a good chance in approaching them, to win unusual support. For instance, I am thinking of Charles Wakefield Cadman, a leading standard American composer. The publishers of his opera, "Shanewis," would be delighted if you would offer to make a plan which would arouse local interest in that score. If you watch (and, of course, I am thinking now of your musical executive, and if he has the right point of view on his job he will be watching) the developments in standard music, you will see all the points at which to suggest an alliance with the standard publishers. Even where there is a new grand opera published in Italy or France, and the publishers are looking for American publicity, they will go out of their way and even spend money to get the link-up possible through your theatre. Don't imagine that because some of the standard publishers may not yet understand what you mean in their development that they won't jump at the opportunity to use an alliance which is going to help them over the road to profits.

Aye, aye, my lad, it's all a big question of profits—and if a fellow knows how to make it his business to show the other one how to make more money, his business will be boosted in the other one's attempt to get what's coming!

Yes, the publishers are allies in your business, if you go at them in the right way. If you want to get in touch with the music publishers of all kinds and want to be put on their lists, just send the word along to your Music Editor.

Questions, Answers, Discussions

"Dear Mr. Isaacson:

"I am a subscriber and reader of the 'News' and especially interested in your department and as an exhibitor feel that the most essential part of the business is the Music.

"I am up against a problem as a small town exhibitor and wish to call on you for information.

"Have built up my business to capacity with good music. In the towns it is next to impossible to secure a good pianist, or in fact, any kind. And the expense of procuring one from the cities would be prohibitive.

"Could you advise me as to mechanical instruments, whether they can be used successfully such as the Foto Player and others of that same nature, which would not require an experienced musician. I would be willing to invest around $1,500 for an instrument, but want to get something which will be an addition to the business.—Edward C. Weeks."

In order to take up Mr. Week's query properly, the News Music Service asked several authorities to answer it. Extracts from some letters follow:

"The writer is the inventor of the Bartola and Barton Organ. I have spent a lot of thought along the line brought out by your inquiry. At the very beginning of my connection with the musical instrument industry, I realized the importance of the musicians' end of the game, having spent seventeen years in the business, the majority of the time in theatres and actual playing in theatre orchestras. My first conclusion and one that has stayed with me was that proper music for a motion picture theatre must be produced by the human element, that in no case music produced automatically could be fitted to pictures with the correct technique, phrasing and shading, and working on this line I devised the Bartola to represent an organ and orchestra, but to be played by a musician.

"We were immediately confronted with the exact situation in the small towns as your inquirer and six years ago we began to develop with our company, a service which would handle this matter, that would insure the exhibitor a musical instrument producing beautiful tonal quality played by a musician and at all times with available performers. We attribute the growth of our business to this particular service, and it has become of such importance to us that we have very recently engaged an eminent theatre organist, Mr. Vern Comstock, to take exclusive charge of this department for us.

"Our method is to secure players, teach them the playing methods of our instruments and send them to the exhibitor. In other words, we aim to sell a competent player with every instrument and to overcome the high cost of sending players from big cities to small ones, we advertise for pianists and organists in the locality where our salesmen are working. As an example, when we opened the territory surrounding Minnesota, we advertised in the daily papers of Fargo, N. D., Rochester, Minn., Duluth, Minn., as well as the Minneapolis papers. These players came to Chicago to receive instructions upon our instruments and in many cases were sent out on positions within a very few miles of their home town and in some cases right back to their home town. This service is maintained without any cost to the player or the exhibitor. In the case of your inquirer, he states he cannot secure a good pianist. Without any doubt he cannot secure a good motion picture pianist, but there is no town or village today which does not contain several pianists who are competent to read music at sight, but who lack the experience which enables them to fit the music to the picture. This pianist could come to Chicago where he would be taught the playing of our instrument and given a thorough course in the essentials of fitting the music to pictures under actual theatre conditions. We believe we are on the right track to enable the exhibitor to secure the best of music with the proper player.

"The writer has noted the new music department and compliments the News on the same. Without doubt this will be of great assistance to a lot of exhibitors. It is a fact that many exhibitors could better their business if they realized the importance of the music.

"We will be glad to cooperate with you in any way possible in your new department and wish you the best of success.—Dan Barton, General Manager, Bartola Musical Instrument Co."

"I would answer you to the effect that while it is possible to obtain some kind of an instrument for $1,500, I doubt very much whether that would be adequate for even a small-sized auditorium.

"So long as you ask my opinion, I am free to say that if this correspondent has built up his business to capacity as he says by virtue of supplying good music in connection with his shows, it would seem to me that this very fact would indicate that his audiences are of the kind that can distinguish between humanly created and mechanically performed music. I would say that if this man has a good Grand piano, a good pianist, and perhaps a good violinist or cellist, he would inspire a thousandfold more interest in his audiences by the music that is played by two such performers, than by the best mechanical device that he could install.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"The Great Shadow"

(Adamac-Republic—Five Reels)

FOR teaching stern and sober Americanism, for giving a tense picturization of the present struggle between capital and labor, setting forth each faction's side without prejudice or favoritism, and for offering an interesting solution almost certain to arouse debate, "The Great Shadow" should be hard to equal.

The "great shadow" that threatens to descend upon the land is Bolshevism—creeping into the labor union and, through its sinister influence, turning the honest laboring man into an enemy of all government. Tyrone Powers is starred as the conservative labor leader fighting against the steadily growing doctrine preached by unshaven disciples from Russia. A general strike is decided upon and its immediate results are graphically pictured. It is a powerful condemnation of the men who allow a whole nation to be gripped by starvation, poverty, and intense sufferings of every sort, in order to accomplish their own ends.

But let it not be thought that this picture is propaganda for the capitalist class. On the contrary the adamant employer who stands pat, and refuses to arbitrate and discuss the just demands of the laboring man, is just as severely criticised as the most radical worker. For this reason it will offend no one, and will set most who see it talking, while everyone will be enlightened. The solution mentioned is a plan for a year's armistice between capital and labor and the creation of a permanent arbitration board to discuss differences.

There is a romance woven in between a secret service man and the daughter of a leading capitalist. This couple divide the action fairly equally with Tyrone Powers. The picture works up to a climax when the Bolsheviks attempt to carry out their plans of bombing government property; the girl, meanwhile, being held prisoner. Quite a thrill is provided when an automobile plunges over a high cliff. A runaway scene is also realistically done. There are also some interesting shots of the condition of Bolshevik Russia, which help to bring out the point. Some of the titles tend to be too heavy and are openly didactic. On the whole it is a wholesome Americanizing picture, having average action and thrills, and enough drama to form an icing for its propaganda.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Duck Inn"

(Mermaid Comedy-Educational—Two Reels)

THIS Mermaid comedy featuring Lloyd Hamilton is a subject of invention, there being no end of original and amusing gags incorporated, most of which are sure-fire. It is a burlesque on Fords, ducks, decoys, the sands of the desert, matrimony, rainstorms, and what not. It breezes through with nary a slip in comicalities. You see the Duck Inn with the mighty gunmen all "set" for shooting the famous "Whiff-Em-Poof." A wary bird, this specimen. More of a decoy than a live one. He pops up and shoots a wicked stream of water at Bud Hamilton and teases him to desperation. But the impression is gained that he is tied on the head of a submarine fisherman. One duck gets a trifle too much "hooch" and instead of saying Quack! Quack! has to resort to Quacksh! Quacksh!

Bud has a hard time getting to the Inn for the gunning expedition. He starts to leave his house and the rain comes up. He turns back and the downpour ceases. And the rain teases him every time he ventures out. Finally he ventures out heavily disguised in order to fool the clouds and succeeds. But when he starts to play himself the rain comes down in buckets. This "business" is not kept up too long. The director has used discretion all the way. And that's the virtue that should be the aim of every comedy producer. Here he has used every new gag for its value and has kept up a running fire of surprises by turning to other tricks. A desert storm with the wind and sand cutting up didoes with the filivier is sure-fire hokum. The subtitles are funny. Most of them are brief and say just enough and no more. A chase, a wedding and it is all over. A laughable burlesque, ridiculous to the extreme, but scoring easily with the bases full.—LAURENCE REID.

"Some More Samoa"

(One Reel Educational—Release Made Up of Views of the Samoian Islands)

"SOME More Samoa" sounds like a comedy when as a matter of fact it is a combination educational and scenic subject concerning the Samoian Islands, of more than passing interest.

Some excellent views of the natives backed by tropical scenery have been obtained and a good idea of the life and habits are contained in the sequences and the titles explaining them.

The exploitation angle of the offering seems to lie more particularly in the reel's educational value.

Good for any program and up to the usual standard of Educational's releases.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"The Castaway"

(Bruce Scenic-Educational—One Reel)

THERE is a tone and quality about this Bruce scenic, "The Castaway," which entitles it to the highest praise. It casts a glamour over the spectator through the magic, the enchantment of its colorful scenes and the very effective captioning which emphasizes the various highlights. A castaway is washed up on a jungle beach where there is no sign of human habitation. The setting sun, the rising moon, the lapping of the waves, the wild vegetation—these bring him an enchantment which is caught by the onlooker.

He scans the horizon for a sail but the ship fails to catch his signal. After a time when a derelict ship is washed ashore he builds himself a hut from its wreckage. And then when another sail is sighted he is content to let it pass by. His contentment is also felt by the spectator. He is a nomad, a Crusoe, oblivious of the past, unmindful of what the future may have in store for him, his only thought being in living his life in his own simple way. Fruits are in abundant growth in close proximity. Sustenance is his; there's no fear of starvation. The world belongs to him. He is monarch of all he surveys. The scenes are truly picturesque and excellently tinted. A gem of a scenic.—LAURENCE REID.

"A Bare Idea"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—One Reel—Fox)

These cartoons seem to be getting more foolish with each issue, and are the funnier for it. They need the height of nonsense to be really laugh-provoking. We mean nonsense in the idea rather than in the drawing. Here Jeff locates a "wishing well" and drinks deep of it. He immediately wishes that Mutt, who is trying his skill on the golf links, be obliged to push the ball over the course with his nose. The big fellow does and if an audience doesn't come across with a laugh at his antics they are incorrigible. Thereupon Mutt wishes for a beautiful girl to bear him company and a racing car to complete his happiness. There is a joker in the "wishing well" however. As soon as the drinker tells a falsehood he loses an article of his clothing. With a young lady prying him with questions, and demanding an answer, Mutt soon finds himself in an embarrassing condition. The reel ends when Jeff, weary after his extensive nasal operations, drinks of the magic waters, and through them learns that Mutt was the cause of all his troubles. The two are fighting it out inside of a barrel at the fade-out.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to March 27, 1920.

"WHILE NEW YORK SLEEPS"

(Fox)

New York's Night Life Graphically Depicted in Three Separate Stories

FOX has presented a touch of novelty in its latest production, "While New York Sleeps," by offering three distinct chapters in the sordid life of the metropolis and portraying realistic phases among the upper, middle and lower classes of its inhabitants. It differs from a serial, however, in its adherence to truth and the fact that it doesn't rely upon melodramatic thrills but presents three ideas which are logically conceived and executed. The wheat is separated from the chaff here and one only sees the chaff. In this respect the city is held up to the light and depicted in all its sordidness during the hours between midnight and dawn.

The ideas incorporated, titled as "Out of the Night," "The Gay White Way," and "A Tragedy of the East Side," are truly dramatizations of the back page of a newspaper. The authors know their New York and Charles J. Brabin, who collaborated with Thomas F. Fallon, has given it a production which is remarkably real. Every detail is rich in its color and atmosphere and the ideas are perfectly constructed so that every ounce of action and suspense is squeezed out, thus keeping the interest and holding it to the conclusion. The first chapter depicts a favorite one-act-play recipe with the background laid in the suburbs. A husband is forced to go to town one night and during his absence his wife is confronted by a former spouse whom she thought dead. Complications develop when a burglar enters the house and shoots the other intruder. And the wife permits him to go, promising to forget his crime if he will forget what he has overheard. And the sanctity of the home is kept.

A story well done and acted up to requirements. "The Gay White Way" is a dramatization of the "badger game" and shows a vampire and her parasite being caught red-handed by a detective who had registered innocence. The surprise finish gives the chapter a healthy punch and no little humor. The best of the stories is "A Tragedy of the East Side," which for its grim realism, its authentic detail, its fine interpretation by Marc MacDermott and his assistants, comes near being a melodramatic masterpiece. The suspense is overwhelming as the action progresses. It is quite original, and stark, and vivid in its tragic development. The crime is solved by the expressive eyes of MacDermott in the role of a paralytic. It's a tale carrying the same sweep and vigor as "Broken Blossoms." And executed with the same spontaneity. Harry Sothern, Estelle Taylor and Earl Metcalfe lend admirable support.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"While New York Sleeps," the latest Fox production to appear at the theatre next, is a distinct novelty in that it presents three separate and distinct stories which, while not connected in any way, are related in the sense that they offer chapters in the sordid life of New York during the hours between midnight and dawn. Each picture is faithful to life; each might be a dramatization of a story on the back page of a newspaper. Each is graphic and well developed and interpreted by a small cast of capable players. The chapters are entitled "Out of the Night," which represents a phase in the lives of suburban dwellers, "The Gay White Way," a breath of sordidness in the cabaret life, which belongs to the middle class, and "A Tragedy of the East Side," an epic of crime and sorrow in the lives of members who belong to the lowest strata. All three of the chapters are true in their conception and execution, the details and atmosphere being remarkably realistic. Mr. MacDermott gives a rare performance as the paralytic in the last chapter. The picture carries a rich vein of action and at times the suspense is overwhelming. Charles J. Brabin directed.

PROGRAM READER

Have you ever wondered what happens in New York during its sleeping hours? Your opportunity has arrived to see the metropolis in all its sordidness—in all its stark reality when the Fox picture, "While New York Sleeps," comes to the theatre next. The offering presents three distinct and distinct stories depicting life among the upper, middle and lower classes. The first mentioned shows a touch of drama in the suburbs, the second strikes home in its artificial aspect and the last mentioned depicts a grim tragedy on the East Side. The picture is wonderfully produced and acted. It is the treat of the season.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is your chance to play upon the novelty and realism of a picture. Make mention that the offering presents three distinct stories although it is not a serial. Bring out that the upper, middle and lower classes of New York are dramatized with wonderful vitality and vividness. Play up New York and use it in all your copy. Play up the sordid life of the city, the night life, the fact that 10,000 policemen are there giving protection to its inhabitants. Use New York as your main angle. Have your orchestra play "The Side Streets of New York," "The Bowery," and other familiar tunes suggestive of the big town. Play up the cast.

"THE PERFECT WOMAN"

(First National)

Constance Talmadge Has Had Better Ones Than This Naive and Single-Track Story

THAT clever writing combination, John Emerson and Anita Loos, haven't shown their ingenuity in Constance Talmadge's latest contribution, "The Perfect Woman." The authors flashed signals of distress in her last picture as if they were running out of ideas. While Miss Loos (we credit her with the subtitles) is imaginative enough to keep up a running fire of snappy comebacks as usual, the fact is becoming apparent that life is not made up of continuously smart and up-to-the-minute dialogue. Were the subtitles taken out and assembled, the result would be a humorous contribution. And the picture would be a rapid creation. As it is it has a difficult time in maintaining the interest due to the naive plot and characterization and the recourse to a deal of melodramatic humum.

While the gags in the subtitles meet with a lot of responsive attention, the incidents fall by the wayside. So the appeal is solely with the dialogue, aside from the interest the average spectator has in the star. No part of the comedy is heightened by comic "business" in itself. It seems as if it is forced by placing too great a stress upon the conversations. The authors are still delving into the psychology of sexual attraction. It's a frail idea at best which expends itself early and repetition is fatal. Thus the over-worked formula of introducing a party of Reds is planted to give it variety, or punch, or both.

The heroine has the theory that certain facial expressions are efficacious in making conquests. She is a baby "vamp" and knows it by casting sheep eyes at old men, registering "pep" at those of middle-age and romance at the young fellows. There is very little conflict and what is offered is not made the most of by Charles Meredith in the role of the woman-hater. The big highlight in the picture is presented when the Reds are rendered hors-de-combat by the resourceful heroine. They are charmed by her whims and caprices and stretched out lifeless by a blunt instrument, wielded by a good right arm. Still the picture will pack 'em in because of the star's personality and the fact that the authors are talented in their line. Technically it is flawless.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Mary Blake.....Constance Talmadge
James Stanhope.....Charles Meredith
Mrs. Stanhope.....Elizabeth Garrison
J. J. Simmonds.....Joseph Burns
Grimes, the Anarchist.....Ned Sparks

By John Emerson and Anita Loos.
Directed by David Kirkland.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Constance Talmadge as Mary Blake in the First National attraction, "The Perfect Woman," written by John Emerson and Anita Loos, has for a starring vehicle one of the most humorous and entertaining stories ever written for this inimitable comedienne. The authors have hit upon a big psychological truth. The story is built around a young girl who is madly in love with a woman hater. The girl practically throws herself at him, without as much as a how-do-you-do by way of recognition. Now, every one skilled at the art of romance knows that the law of resourceful vampires is "indifference"—an inviting personality with just a touch of frigidity.

Mary Blake tries this method. She also tries several others. Eventually she finds herself involved with a group of Bolsheviks. The incidents which accompany their introduction are fraught with melodramatic suspense, and there is also a pleasant vein of humor which serves to give the picture the necessary balance. "The Perfect Woman" is ideal material for the personality and talent of the star, and in it she finds adequate expression. The picture will appear at the theatre next. Supporting the star are Charles Meredith, Elizabeth Garrison and Ned Sparks.

PROGRAM READER

Constance Talmadge, the inimitable star of First National, is coming to the theatre next in "The Perfect Woman," a picture declared to be the most interesting subject which John Emerson and Anita Loos have ever written for her. It is a comedy naturally, but it also carries a rich vein of melodramatic action and suspense, which gives it a balancing feature. The story revolves around the star's attempt to win over a woman-hater and the situations plot her through a world of adventure. Miss Talmadge is fortunate in having such competent writers as Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos, and she is able to score her personality in all its attractiveness. Charles Meredith and Ned Sparks are splendid in the supporting roles.

SUGGESTIONS

A Constance Talmadge picture is certain of winning patronage. All that is necessary is to give it the proper display so that your patrons will know it is coming to your theatre. Make mention again that John Emerson and Anita Loos are the authors. They have written so much for the star that they have her personality gauged to a nicety. So feature their names. Play up the star in your biggest electric lights. Make use of the title. And give a prize to that patron who gives the best description of "the perfect woman." Treat your copy in a humorous manner. The fact that it is a Constance Talmadge picture will interest the newspapers. And you should have no trouble in placing all your exploitation matter.

CATCH LINES

He was the sort of man who scorned women. All his life he had resisted the fair sex. Then he saw "the perfect woman." And straightway lost his heart.

See Constance Talmadge in her newest picture, "The Perfect Woman," by John Emerson and Anita Loos. A fascinating story of the power of a maid over a man.

"ROSE OF NOME"

(Fox)

Alaskan Picture Holds the Interest, But Is Not Big

GLADYS BROCKWELL has made one of her best pictures, we believe, in "Rose of Nome." She herself leaves an excellent impression, but the story, due to the unstimulating incidents rather than the main plot, which is strong and not hackneyed, prevents it from being a really big production. But it is a story of the North, filled with rugged types who help to keep the interest at high tension. The feature should please almost anywhere.

Some very splendid acting is done by William Scott, who is given the interesting character of a care-free, simple and brave French-Canadian wanderer. Herbert Prior, Stanton Heck and Gertrude Ryan are not far behind.

The story opens in Canada, where the star is the abused wife of a brutal husband. She flees with Hilton, who, unknown to her, has murdered her husband. Hilton opens a dance hall in Alaska, and we have here the usual assortment of picturesque miners and dancing girls. Rose aids in the establishment by luring rich miners to the roulette wheel. To this place comes Anatole, the French-Canadian, and the romance begins after he performs a chivalrous deed to help Rose. A member of the Canadian police arrives on the scene and seeks to arrest Rose for the murder of her husband. She tells him she did not even know of the death and he suspects the guilty party. Hilton forces her to flee with him under a threat of taking from her an adopted child which she loves. The hero, of course, follows them, and a fight occurs out on the plains.

The exteriors are not quite satisfying. There is an absence of snow and the presence of telegraph poles, which is not in conformity with the popular idea of Alaska. The photography is perfect and the titles are vigorous and readable.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Rose of Nome," a story of that modern wonderland, Alaska, will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ———. Gladya Brockwell, who already has a large following in ———, will be seen in the stellar role. She is cast in the role first of an abused wife, and later as a dance hall girl in an Alaskan gold town.

Like all stories of this great northern country, "Rose of Nome" is a tale of the great outdoors, of hardened men and helpless women. Above all it is a story of love and adventure, for in that land, where gold seekers of all sorts and types from all over the world have rushed in headlong haste, love and adventure are necessarily coupled.

The story is by Barbara Le Marr Deely, and is one crowded with dramatic moments. The star, fleeing from her brutal husband, is forced to earn her living in a dance hall. To this place comes a stranger—a different type of man from the rough miners. He is a French Canadian, and a gold seeker, but unlike his associates, he has not forgotten his good instincts and chivalry. Rose had almost forgotten that men of this type existed. When she was in danger she prepared to protect herself when this stranger—a man who still believed in the duty man owes to women—interfered. The picture works up to a gripping and thrilling climax.

Among the supporting cast are such players as William Scott, Stanton Heck and Gertrude Ryan. The picture was carefully directed by Edward J. Le Saint.

PROGRAM READER

A special treat is in store for the patrons of the ——— theatre on ———. On that date "Rose of Nome," starring Gladya Brockwell, will be the attraction. This is the kind of a picture that is as rare as that day in June that the poet talks about. From its title you can guess where the action takes place—in Alaska. But you can't guess the thrills, romance, interest and excitement that are crowded into its five reels. Gladya Brockwell never made a better picture. In "Rose of Nome" she has a role that suits her perfectly. She is forced by circumstances to earn her living in a manner abhorrent to her—luring the wealthy miners in the dance hall to the roulette wheel, in the hope that they will lose their fortunes in gambling. Playing opposite her is William Scott, the popular leading man, who does one of the most creditable pieces of acting of his screen career. He plays Anatole, a simple French-Canadian peasant, who has heard the cry of "gold" that arose in ice-bound Alaska and re-echoed throughout the world. There is romance aplenty when these two meet, and it is a clean, touching story of a woman's regeneration and the influence of a good man among a community composed of the riff-raff of the world. You will never regret seeing "Rose of Nome."

SUGGESTIONS

If you happen to book this in the right season of the year it should be possible to arrange a profitable tie-up with a nearby florist shop. A floral lobby display might be donated by a florist. It would be a mutual advertisement. Appeal to Gladya Brockwell by showing a few stills of close-ups of the star. Depend chiefly upon catch lines to get over the setting of the picture, insisting that it is a story of the great outdoors, and filled with the rugged types of men who make up the population of a mushroom gold town in Alaska.

CATCH LINES

A story of the rough mountains and roaring streams of Alaska and the riff-raff of the world, lured to its barrenness in the hope of finding gold.

"THE SILENT BARRIER"

(Tracy-Gibraltar-Hodkinson)

Obvious Story Has a Good Climax and Scenic Backgrounds

WHATEVER merit is contained in Louis Tracy's novel, "The Silent Barrier," has been lost track of in the adaptation for the screen. Aside from its scenic investiture, the backgrounds representing the Swiss Alps, the offering carries little appeal insofar as its dramatic moments are concerned. It is a perfectly obvious story, one in which the action is easily anticipated from the introductory reel. But if the director paid too much attention in planting his characters in respect to making his plot impenetrable, Sheldon Lewis has not added much mystery in his interpretation. While this actor is an acceptable villain of tried and true service, still the fact remains that he has not shaded his role to create any suspense in his movements. By merely watching Lewis' gestures one is certain just what will take place even before he starts his villainy.

It strikes us that the picture should not have been shortened. The jumpy continuity and the fact that several potential punches are lost can be blamed upon the cutting department. "The Silent Barrier" is a tale of a blighted romance, the heroine being a daughter of an Alpine guide who works as a governess in London. The action revolves around her girl friend's effort to reconcile her with her father. The former is a society reporter who is detailed to the task of covering the carnival at St. Moritz. Of course she will kill two birds with one stone. And the villain who dishonored the Swiss girl is equally intent upon playing his game with the reporter. And follows her to the Alps.

The action takes a long time in getting started and doesn't travel anywhere in particular. The scene disclosing the ascent of the mountain is fraught with some suspense, for it is at the summit that the villain learns the identity of the guide and attempts to kill him. In the end a discarded sweetheart revenges herself by imparting the precious information. And the guide and a worthy admirer of the governess start in pursuit of the villain and catch him with the reporter in a shelter hut far up the mountain side. And the culprit is frightened into falling through space. The climax is effective and is some compensation for a slow-moving story. And the scenery comprising snow-capped mountains and suggesting Swiss atmosphere is attractive. The London interiors are out of harmony.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Silent Barrier," a picturization of Louis Tracy's novel of the same name, is a tense drama with a fine flavor of romance running through it. It will appear at the ——— theatre near ———. The plot revolves around an American mining engineer and a millionaire speculator who threatens to ruin the love affair of the former during their sojourn in the Alps. The action presents rich conflict and adventure and is capably interpreted.

PROGRAM READER

A throbbing story of love in the Swiss Alps is coming to the ——— theatre next ——— in "The Silent Barrier," the first of Louis Tracy's stories to be adapted for the screen. Patrons of the ——— are sure to respond to the adventure of a disappointed lover, the vengeance of a father whose daughter has been dishonored, and the picturesque scenery. The vast reaches of snow, the perilous ascent of the mountain, the backgrounds of fir trees, shelter huts, and the carnival—all of these pictures give the photography a value which makes its atmosphere correct. The story is enacted by a cast that includes Sheldon Lewis, Gladya Hulette, Corinne Barker and Donald Cameron. Our patrons will remember these names. We feel sure you won't be disappointed when the picture is presented.

CATCH LINES

They made the ascent of the mountain. Would a storm carry them to destruction? This is only one of the tense scenes in "The Silent Barrier," which come to the ———. A picture of vital action and marvelous scenery.

"CUPID—THE COWPUNCHER" (Goldwyn)

Great Entertainment with Star in Ideal Role

THIS picture belongs to Will Rogers, lock, stock and barrel. He appears in 99.4/100 per cent of the scenes, does his famous rope stunts, rides a bucking broncho and has quite evidently contributed most of the titles along with his share of the entertainment.

The story of "Cupid—the Cowpuncher" is so slender that it gets lost for long sequences, but that doesn't matter in this picture for it is straight comedy with the inimitable Rogers in a role that fits him like a glove.

The picture is a Western, but there is nothing of the "shoot 'em up" stuff about it, the gun play running to comedy. Rogers plays a matchmaking cowboy who finally falls in love with his employer's daughter, with his courtship and the subsequent defeat of his rival, a young doctor who has "a lot of tools, but no sense," the subject matter for most of the scenes. There are times when the unfriendly might just claim that too much footage is devoted to close-ups of the star "looking foolish," but since this specialty has put some of Rogers' previous vehicles over, it ought to be overlooked in this offering.

Eleanor Gates wrote the original story under the title of "Alec, the Cowpuncher," and the direction is by Clarence Badger, who has made a very good job of it. Helene Chadwick is the girl, and the rest of the cast are also entirely capable. Some especially good types have been secured for the cowboy roles, and the atmosphere is excellent throughout. Compared with some of the other releases which cost a lot more money, the picture can be called one of the hits of the year. All in all the production ranks very closely to the best thing Rogers has done since his initial picture, "Laughing Bill Hyde," and should prove a popular booking wherever good comedy is appreciated.—Length, 6 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The one and only Will Rogers, whom most people are willing to admit is the homeliest and best actor on the American screen, will appear in his newest comedy photoplay, "Cupid—the Cowpuncher," at the theatre for a —days' engagement beginning —.

"Cupid—the Cowpuncher" is an adaptation of the famous magazine story, "Alec the Cowpuncher," by Eleanor Gates, with Rogers playing the role of the match-making foreman of a Western ranch.

The picture is for entertainment purposes only, but in this connection nothing quite so genuinely humorous has been offered — patrons this season.

How "Cupid" succeeds in marrying off all his cowboy friends, puts over a campaign to elect his boss's daughter as the winner of a beauty contest being conducted by a visiting medicine show, and finally wins the fair Macie as his bride against the competition of the young Eastern doctor who has a "lot of tools but no sense," makes entertainment of A1 variety.

Besides playing the leading role and exhibiting his famous talent as a trick roper and bronco buster, Rogers has also contributed most of the titles, which are of the brand that made him internationally famous on the vaudeville stage, and which has brought his "Hilitee Digest" into popular favor. This is a Western picture with more laughs than a Chaplin comedy and more heart interest than usually goes into a "way down East drama."

PROGRAM READER

Will Rogers, humorist, rope expert, monologist and for the past year or so film star of first magnitude, will be the headliner at the — in his latest Goldwyn photoplay, "Cupid—the Cowpuncher," beginning —.

Most liked by the audience, Rogers' contributions to the screen who should not fail to see "Cupid—the Cowpuncher." It is a new kind of a Western that Rogers has brought to the screen. A Western without the melodramatic gun play, with humor, heart interest and genuine comedy both from scenes and titles the predominating feature. You will laugh until your sides ache as Rogers wins the homeliest man contest when the medicine show comes to town.

You will grin from ear to ear at the way he circumvents his rival who plans to elope with the girl. You will like his trick rope work and his broncho busting that ends with a ducking in a muddy pond. You will vote the titles the best that have ever come your way. You will like the plot, all about a match-making cowboy who finally falls in love himself and has a lot of trouble winning the girl of his choice. It is just human, likeable, well developed story designed for entertainment purposes.

SUGGESTIONS

Opportunity for pulling a lot of "ballyhoo" stuff for this is apparent. The medicine show performance sequences of the picture are good material on which to work. A "ballyhoo" medicine show staged as a prologue or in the lobby would be a sure fire attraction. As a title "Under the Shade of the Old Apple Tree," the song is used for good comedy. Use this as a quartette song with cowboy costumes for your singers and a Western drop provided. Bill this as Will Rogers' best picture to date, emphasizing the comedy angles and the fact that most of the titles are comedy gems, written by Rogers himself. Be sure and give your patrons an idea of the plot in so far as it refers to Rogers as being a match-making cowboy, and mention that he rides a bucking broncho, does his rope tricks, etc.

In using a scene cut for your displays select something that suggests the comedy side of the picture as against using just a photo of Rogers. Tell them that the story is by Eleanor Gates, since she is well known as a magazine writer. Give the picture your personal guarantee, as it will live up to all promises.

"BLUE STREAK McCOY" (Universal)

Enjoyable Western Melodrama with Star in Likeable Role

FUNDAMENTALLY this is as old in plot as pictures, but it has been dressed up so nicely that it should go over as more than average entertainment and prove a delight to Harry Carey's considerable personal following.

For fully two reels hardly a glimpse of the story is in evidence, but this is the most entertaining part of the offering, plenty of good incident of a semi-humorous character being provided in which the star figures prominently in one of the most likeable roles of his career.

Carey plays the part of a happy go lucky cowboy who meets an eastern girl sojourning with her uncle in a mining camp and in order to be near her he forsakes cowpunching to join the Texas Rangers. A crooked superintendent of the mine plans to steal a fortune in gold that has been secured from the mine and the owner's wife, a relative of the girl with whom Carey is in love. Carey frustrates the plot with the aid of the Rangers, but his dream of wedded bliss comes to an end when he learns that the girl has pledged herself to a young college chap who is also a member of the Rangers.

The picture is consistent throughout and has been very well produced especially the melodramatic scenes having to do with stealing the gold. Carey makes much of his role and displays a talent for characterization that is entirely commendable. Some rather romantic titles, worded too extravagantly and suggestive of the old time drama, seem unnecessary.

The story is by H. H. Van Loan, author of "The Virgin of Stamboul," and one of the most prolific writers the screen has produced recently. The direction by Reeves Eason is entirely satisfactory. Suitable for any house where Westerns are enjoyed and fully up to the standard set by the Carey productions.—Length, 5 reels.—J. S. Dickerson.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The popular interpreter of Western stories, Harry Carey, will come to the theatre next — in "Blue Streak McCoy," an original contribution by H. H. Van Loan, the author of "The Virgin of Stamboul." This is considered by many as the finest Western in which the Universal star ever appeared.

In the prologue Ben Alexander effects the role of Job McCoy. It is years later when Job, grown to manhood, becomes a ranger in a mining town on the border. He is popular with all and loves Diana Hughes, niece of Marlowe, a prominent mine owner.

Through his acquaintance with the girl, Job comes into contact with Marlowe and his wife. The latter, he finds, is carrying on a clandestine love affair with a mine official, who plans to steal the magnate's wife and his gold at the same time. His scheme is spoiled by Job, who also persuades Mrs. Marlowe to return to her family. Marlowe shows his gratitude toward the ranger. An excellent supporting cast includes Ruth Golden, Ruth Royce, Ben Alexander, Chas. LeMoine and others. The picture is punctuated with enlivened action and scenes humor, pathos and thrilling melodrama. Reeves Eason directed from a scenario by Harvey Gates.

PROGRAM READER

Here is Harry Carey again in another captivating Western melodrama by H. H. Van Loan, the author of "The Virgin of Stamboul." There is something about a Carey picture which appeals to every emotion, but particularly to that sympathetic chord which is in every one of us. Perhaps because of the naturalness of the star. "Blue Streak McCoy" will come to the theatre next — and the unusual quality of the story, combining humor, pathos and a rich assortment of thrills, makes it an offering which will linger in the memory. It is enriched by the acting of a very capable cast, two of the members being the cleverest juveniles on the screen, "Breezy" Eason and Ben Alexander. It also presents three leading ladies, Ruth Golden, Ruth Royce and Lily Leslie.

SUGGESTIONS

The names of the author, director and star should enable you to make a good exploitation of this picture. The title is a winner and should come in for some special advertising. Make mention of Carey's previous pictures, telling that this one keeps to the same high standard. Mention the high spots, one of which shows the hero succeeding in reuniting a wife to her family. Mention that it carries a wealth of humor, a goodly portion of pathos and abundant thrills. You might use the Universal slogan in regard to Carey, "He's human." Tell that the picture is one of the most interesting Westerns ever presented on the screen. Play up the ever-increasing popularity of the star. Use effective catch lines.

CATCH LINES

"Ask anything I've got. It's yours, and I'll still be in your debt." Did Blue Streak McCoy ask for wealth, which he might have had? Or for the hand of the girl whom he loved? No. He asked for just —. See "Blue Streak McCoy," with Harry Carey.

See Harry Carey in his latest Western, "Blue Streak McCoy." A fascinating picture with action, suspense, humor and thrills and romance.

"THE BREATH OF THE GODS"

(Universal-Jewel)

Artistic Production, and Star's Ability Raise Japanese Story

TSRU AOKI, featured in this production, comes to the fore with a rich, colorful and at times delicately shaded portrayal of an intensely dramatic role. The production affords her splendid opportunities and she takes advantage of them, while the artistic Japanese settings add to the impressiveness of her emotional scenes.

The picture proves to be unusually constructed. The characters change places—the hero developing into a villain, and the apparent heavy being made, entirely, sympathetic in the end. The story is laid in 1903, in Washington and Japan, immediately preceding and during the Japanese-Russian war. There are no war scenes, but all the characters are in the diplomatic service, and the dramatic situation arises when the star is forced to choose between serving her country as the wife of the Japanese minister of war, or remaining true to the young Austrian with whom she is in love. She finally chooses duty, and marries the Japanese in the hope that her knowledge of foreigners may aid her country.

Partly through her negligence, some valuable papers are stolen by her former lover, the young Austrian. The bargain for the return of the documents states that she must give herself to the thief. Rather than do this she commits suicide, leaving an unhappy ending except for the fact that a subtle hints at a future life with her husband, whom she finally grew to love. It is possible that there is a straining after drama which will be noticeable. A few of the situations, one would imagine, could be cleared up by a little physical action.

There are some especially beautiful shots of the Fujiyama, Japan's sacred mountain, from the sea, and the Japanese interiors are artistic. Grant that an Occidental could be consumed with such a deep passion for a Japanese maid, and you have a tense, well-acted, and artistically produced picture, with only a few lulls of interest after the several climactic scenes. The dramatic situations should compensate for the lack of thrills and action.—Length, 6 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The Breath of the Gods," the feature attraction at the _____ theatre on _____, is a Japanese story starring the brilliant Oriental actress Tsuru Aoki, the wife of the well-known film star, Sessue Hayakawa. The picture is described as a masterpiece among Japanese photoplays, and was adapted for the screen from the novel by Sydney McCall.

Part of the picture is laid in America and the latter part in Japan. The time is that thrilling period in 1903 immediately preceding the Russian-Japanese war. Yuki Onda is a Japanese girl studying in an American college when the little island in the Pacific is preparing for war. Immediately she returns to her native land. Her young lover follows her, but in order to serve her country best she consents to marry the Japanese minister of war. Then follows a series of incidents which help to make this production one of the most grippingly dramatic offerings to reach the screen in many moons. Although her difficult role requires the most consummate skill, the dainty little star is not found wanting. Her delicate expressions of emotion will bring the tears to your eyes and send a thrill to your heart.

All the beauty of the Land of Cherryblossoms is fully brought out. The photography, from beginning to end, is a sustained effort to produce a masterpiece of pictorial beauty as well as an intense drama. Supporting the star are such players as Stanhope Wheatcroft, Arthur Carewe and Ethel Skinner. "The Breath of the Gods" will be shown for _____ days.

PROGRAM READER

The year of 1903 was just as an eventful one for Japan as the year of 1917 was for America. At that time the Nippon Isle was preparing for the war with Russia which was to elevate it to a world's power. It is around this absorbing setting that the photodrama, "The Breath of the Gods," which will be shown at this theatre on _____, was built. Tsuru Aoki, known in private life as Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa, is the star, and this picture is going to make its mark in screen history as one of the most dramatic and gripping productions of a year of great productions. Besides the splendid acting of the star and her support, which consists of Stanhope Wheatcroft, Arthur Carewe and Pat O'Malley, there are hundreds of real Japanese serving as extras. There are no war scenes, but the picture gives an intimate view of diplomats and their intrigue as the nations start their game of war. In these days, when the screen is crowded with pictures of cheap sentiment and unreal action, such a wholesome, dramatic story as "The Breath of the Gods" will come as a welcome relief.

SUGGESTIONS

If there is a long-established newspaper in your city, we suggest a glass enclosed front page of the edition of seventeen years ago that announced the opening of hostilities between Japan and Russia, in your lobby. For an overture use selections from "The Mikado." They are well known and immediately suggest a Japanese atmosphere.

"A WOMAN'S BUSINESS"

(B. A. Rolfe-Jans)

Only Average Interest Here, Despite Attractive Theme

BUILT upon the age-old topic of woman's attitude towards marriage, and her desire for a wealthy husband, this production basically has a story which should be appealing to a motion picture audience. Having such a theme, it is naturally a story of character development. The incidents here are not forceful, and as a result the impression left is not as deep as one might expect.

The story opens with a bit of philosophizing. An elderly gentleman is watching women, young and old, lured to the dress-maker's window. His companion remarks that this is woman's business to look attractive. Then the story opens with a series of lukewarm incidents. Olive Tell, the star, is leading a drab existence in her mother's boarding house and longs for marriage in order to fulfill her love for luxury and social prestige. She discards her poor sweetheart and marries a wealthy young man who shortly after loses his income. She carries on a flirtation with an elderly man in the hopes of learning a tip on the stock market, and is divorced by her husband for her actions. She then tries to make money running a millinery shop; fails, and finally decides that her true place is with her ex-husband.

The star looks pretty at all times (perhaps too much so for a poor boarding house maid), but in one or two places has a most stilted manner of expressing strong emotion. The titles are not very well done. The dialogue especially appears quite unreal. Bad photography is noticeable in one or two spots. A great part of the picture deals with society life in New York, but there is nothing very elaborate about the sets. On the whole it appears to be a novel whose main character would have been a real interesting personage upon the screen if she were only put through some more interesting and unique incidents. Length, 6 reels, Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

"A Woman's Business," a feature production starring Olive Tell, and adapted from the popular novel, "Nothing a Year," by Charles Belmont Davis, will be the attraction at the _____ theatre on _____. This picture, when in release millions of motion picture fans.

The story is built up around the interesting question—"what is a woman's business?" Is it to love her husband, cook his meals, and see that his shoppers and pipe are ready for him when he returns in the evening? Or is it to strike out for herself in the business world? Or again is it the business of marriage? Olive Tell, playing "Barbara," a girl of a poor Southern family, who had had nothing but drudgery throughout her twenty years, decided it was the last. So she promptly set about to find for herself a wealthy husband. She did, but now longs to woman, makes up the bulk of this interesting photoplay. The story has a genuine appeal to every class of theatre-goers.

Olive Tell is one of the rising stars of screen-dom. Or rather, it should be said that she is already shining far above the horizon, and promises, with a few more such absorbing pictures as "A Woman's Business," to well-nigh reach the zenith of popularity. The balance of the cast is equally commendable, consisting of such players as Edmund Lowe, Lucille Lee Stewart, Donald Hall and Warner Richmond. The picture was made under the supervision of Director R. A. Rolfe.

PROGRAM READER

People look at marriage in different lights. Pretty little Barbara hoped for it as a deliverance from her life of drudgery in her mother's boarding house. All her life had been filled with dishes and pans, and complaining boarders, and prunes for breakfast. She saw the belles of twenty years ago now penniless widows, or was a woman's business. Such a girl was Barbara, and Barbara is none other than Olive Tell, the dainty and beautiful screen star, who plays the stellar role in "A Woman's Business," which will be the attraction at this theatre on _____.

The story is from the pen of Charles Belmont Davis and reached an appreciative audience in novel form under the title of "Nothing a Year." It has been pictured under the personal direction of Director R. A. Rolfe, who has his directing eye in making an absorbing photodrama out of this interesting story. You will like dainty little Barbara, and you will be surprised how she changes her views on this marriage proposition after a time.

SUGGESTIONS

The exploitation possibilities of this picture center largely around its title, and the catch lines which can be made from its interesting story. Charles Belmont Davis may not motive very much to audience, but is worth mentioning. Tie-ups might be arranged with millinery and dress shops, with such signs in the window: "A Woman's Business is to look attractive!" If you can start a discussion through letters to the editor, in the local paper, about woman's place in the business world, it would help.

CATCH LINES

An absorbing story of a pretty little girl and what she thought was her business in the world; how she realized her mistake, and finally settled down in the business that has been woman's since the beginning of time.

Olive Tell in an absorbing story of a woman and her business.

"CROOKED STREETS"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

Melodrama Is Long on Atmosphere, Short on Plot and Suspense

NOT much invention has been expended upon "Crooked Streets," which serves to introduce Ethel Clayton in a melodramatic line of action. It is a story which has been done often on the screen and because of its familiarity, there is very little mystery attached to the various scenes and situations. Some effort has been made to carefully hide the motives of the characters—to give it a note of suspense. But dressing up the villain with sidewhiskers and making him resemble a collector of bugs is futile when a title is flashed that he is on his way to China to gather antiques.

One is certain that he will be revealed eventually as an opium-smuggler, and one is not disappointed. And the girl, who accompanies him as a secretary, is positively identified as a detective. If either one of them had been drawn otherwise the surprise aimed at, would have been achieved. Though the story would have been too simple for the average audience. Nothing happens in the action until the heroine ventures out unaccompanied in the streets of Shanghai. Here is the picture at its best. For it is richest in its atmosphere and local color. The material isn't complicated enough for five reels, so the action falls back upon a naive scene depicting a fistic encounter between a would-be-protector of the girl and a French sailor. And they fight in a den of iniquity for easily two reels.

The man from the Occident is shrouded in mystery and a play at romantic conflict is offered when his advances are disregarded. Eventually he reveals himself as a representative of Scotland Yard, after the very people she accompanied to the Orient. The fight is the big punch and is quite interesting. We can see no reason why the French sailor, who opposed the hero in the ring, should be exploited as having stayed five rounds with Carpenter. "Crooked Streets" is well named insofar as its locale is concerned. It is a painstaking effort upon the part of the director to supply a faithful touch. Miss Clayton is denied a chance to reveal her emotional gifts, though her acting is as convincing and natural as ever. Jack Holt plays the hero with admirable poise and restraint.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Ethel Clayton's latest picture to be presented at the _____ theatre next is "Crooked Streets," an adaptation by Edith Kennedy of Samuel Merwin's story, "Dinner at Eight." It may be defined as an adventure-romance with the scenes laid in the native and European quarters of Shanghai. It is appropriate background for a tale of this character. The star appears as a young American girl on her way to China with an old professor and his wife, with whom she has accepted a position as secretary. Once arriving in the city Gail becomes suspicious that her employer's errand is not an honest one. Venturing alone into the native section of the city, she is involved in a brawl between some Chinamen and roistering French sailors on leave. An Irish adventurer named O'Dare rescues her with difficulty, but the adventure is not half so startling as the one which follows. Gail learns eventually that her employer is really engaged to opium smuggling and his guilt is established in a most dramatic manner. The picture is packed with adventure and romance for which the "Paris of the East" is famed and offers the star a most entertaining subject. Miss Clayton, as usual, contributes a portrayal marked for its sincerity and naturalness and her support which includes Clyde Fillmore and Jack Holt, is praiseworthy. Paul Powell directed.

PROGRAM READER

Shanghai, the "Paris of the East," has served as the locale of many a tale of adventure and romance in real life, as well as in fiction. It is appropriate background for the exciting story unfolded in Ethel Clayton's new picture, "Crooked Streets," which comes to the _____ theatre beginning _____ Samuel Merwin, who fashioned the story, which has been adapted by Edith Kennedy and directed by Paul Powell, has incorporated elements such as romance and adventure, intrigue and mystery and the result is a most interesting entertainment. Miss Clayton plays her part with admirable poise and understanding and assisting her in a capable manner are Jack Holt and Clyde Fillmore.

SUGGESTIONS

The title suggests mystery and adventure and should be exploited here for all it is worth. Tell that it is an exciting adventure tale of Shanghai, "the Paris of the East." Bring out too, that Samuel Merwin wrote the original story which has been adapted by Edith Kennedy. Say something about the star regardless of the fact that she is well established as a most interesting entertainer. Dress your lobby in an oriental manner, with subdued lights, Chinese effects and coloring. You can also dress your stage in an appropriate manner. Mention the other players. Also the director. Bring out that the picture carries a deal of action and suspense and that it offers a pleasing romance.

CATCH LINES

See "Crooked Streets," a story where East meets West. Follow the adventures of Ethel Clayton in Shanghai, "the Paris of the East."

A mystery tale of love and opium-smuggling in Shanghai, "Paris of the East." It is alive with the lure and odor of the Orient. See "Crooked Streets."

"THE CHEATER"

(Metro)

Fair Entertainment on a "Miracle Man" Sort of Theme

IN all likelihood when Henry Arthur Jones wrote "Judah," the play from which May Allison's picture, "The Cheater," is adapted, he had never heard of "The Miracle Man." That it is based upon the same sort of theme, depicting the power of faith as it comes to a girl steeped in sin, and regenerates her, is merely a coincidence. She is a "mental healer" whose object it is to mult a rich man of his fortune by working upon his faith in her. Where it differs from "The Miracle Man" is the fact that a true healer doesn't redeem the crook through his own faith. She is regenerated through the power of love given her by the rich man in question and his unfortunate child.

"The Miracle Man" depended a great deal upon its humanity, its pathos and the religious note it conveyed. "The Cheater" doesn't show the spirituality, but relies upon its disclosures of the methods of clairvoyants for entertainment. And it looks as if the director had gauged its values correctly. Certainly there is a rich vein of humor in the trickery of the fakirs, particularly when a gullible heiress, possessing imaginary ills, comes to the clairvoyant to have her fortune told. All the paraphernalia, all the tricks of the trade are presented with a fidelity to truth. Then the girl of the triumvirate conceives the plan to try faith healing. And gradually she feels that she is endowed with a power to heal. Because the light of purity is shining in the crippled child's eyes and the light of love in her father's.

It is quite improbable that he would proffer his affection when the girl and her father are revealed as a pair of clever crooks. Still the child is able to walk for the first time. And such a revelation would forgive a lot of sins. The picture doesn't carry any real moving moments, yet it keeps the interest because of its logical development, the fine moral of the tale, the good production, and the acting by the star and her support. Miss Allison takes care of most of the scenes and acquits herself in a creditable manner. Frank Currier is amusing as her "never work" father, the man who lived by his wits for thirty years. The picture will certainly enlighten those who place their trust in fortune tellers. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

May Allison, the charming Metro star, will appear at the _____ theatre for three days beginning _____ in "The Cheater." Adapted by Lois Zellner from Henry Arthur Jones' play, "Judah," it is described as an intensely dramatic offering. The story of "The Cheater" deals with faith healing and when it was produced upon the stage created quite a furor. Miss Allison's role is that of Lily Meany, who, under the name of Vashti Delich, has won a reputation for pect of trying to cure the crippled sister of Judah, Lord Asgarby, the experiences a change of heart due to the nobleman's sincerity and the simple faith of his little

The drama of her redemption is said to have been developed with effective dramatic skill, the sponsors seeing to it that its moving moments are well emphasized as well as the moral. Henry Otto, the director has taken advantage of every situation and has also staged the picture with appropriate backgrounds. King Baggot, widely known for his work as a screen star, appears as Judah. Others in the company are Frank Currier, Harry Van Meter, Percy Challenger, and Lucille Ward.

PROGRAM READER

In "The Cheater," a picturization of Henry Arthur Jones' powerful drama, "Judah," which came to the _____ theatre next _____, May Allison has a role that is fascinating in its grip upon the emotions. The story has to do with a girl whose whole life is a deception. She is brought up among fakirs and charlatans. In the guise of a "mental healer" she enters an aristocratic household and prepares to deceive them with a false assumption of power—when she meets the man who makes her ashamed of herself. What she does then—how the nature course of her life is abruptly altered—is told in gripping style in a drama that pulsates with action and abounds in clever dramatic incidents. Miss Allison does some of the finest work of her career. Lois Zellner adapted it while Henry Otto directed.

SUGGESTIONS

Catch lines and attractive teasers would be a good angle to exploit this feature. First make known to your patrons that it is an adaptation of Henry Arthur Jones' play, "Judah," which held the British public spellbound when it was produced in England. Make the author's name known to your audience. List the plays which have been adapted to the screen. Bring out Miss Allison's charm and talent in your advertising and feature the other members of the cast. King Baggot is certainly well known to your patrons. Feature the drama as a particularly fascinating story of a woman's redemption after she has lived a life of deception. Talk about the production.

Motion Picture News

4 to 1

- ☐ Thousands of dollars now wasted in trade paper advertising can be saved by simply asking the Exhibitor what paper he reads. He'll tell you gladly.
- ☐ He just told one concern that the "NEWS" was his preference over other trade papers—by four to one.
- ☐ Preference means the reading of your advertising announcement. To duplicate it is to throw your money away.
- ☐ Make your own test, then direct your advertising appropriation accordingly, and you'll double its effect at one-half your present outlay.

The News Alone Covers the Field

You Must Read "The Claws of the Lobster"

In Martin Quigley's "Exhibitors Herald," issue dated August 7, Page 65, there is a signed article by Marshall Neilan which will interest every motion picture theatre owner and exhibitor in the United States. If you have laid aside your issue of "Exhibitors Herald" when this advertisement comes to your notice it is our suggestion that you take out your copy and read the article at once.

Under a good-natured but nevertheless biting Irish wit in Mr. Neilan's article there is strong, sound, clean reasoning that will interest an exhibitor's pocketbook.

The seven members of Associated Producers, Inc., owing their own organization, are "free men." Each of the seven members has kept and is keeping and working out his previous contracts cleanly and honorably. Not one of them is a defaulter or pledge-breaker or contract-jumper.

For the first time in their lives, for the first time in the history of the motion picture industry, these seven Producers are able to do the big things they want to do without hindrance or censorship. They are able to do the pictures they have dreamed about and worked out in their minds. They are able to engage and star or feature or use the personalities who mean new blood and larger audiences for the screen.

They are able to deal with exhibitors direct. They have in New York an organization that cannot be bunked or tricked into alliances that will work against the exhibitors of the country; an organization that has never had a recorded or unrecorded case of pledge breaking or ill-treatment of exhibitors.

Knowing these things about us, you will read "The Claws of the Lobster" with even greater interest and you will be more prepared to take our word for it that we are already engaged in making the biggest pictures of our careers for your theatres. We ask you to give us time for our thirty pictures and not to sew up your time. If our pictures are not big cancel any one of us out under one-picture cancellation. There's an individual producer cancellation clause in every contract we make with you.

That Warm Feeling Around the Heart

YOU know the feeling—you get it only now and then, and when you do get it the whole world looks young and rosy.

You get this feeling as never before when you see Tom Meighan in "The Prince Chap." It's so wholesome and altogether delightful that men, women and children see it and feel happy for a week afterwards.

The exhibitor gets a pleasant feeling, too, when he shows "The Prince Chap." A feeling around the pocket-book that only comes when the crowds have been storming his doors all day long, and when the old bank balance is as fat as the Muggins' Food Baby in the ads.

From the play by Edward Peple. Scenario by Olga Printzlau and CLAUDE FARRERE*A Paramount*

MARRIED against her will to a vicious brute—deprived of her right to love—insulted and humiliated—

And then—at last despairing—to meet a man who could give her all she craved!

What should she have done?

That's a question your audiences will discuss long after the showing. It will make enough talk to keep your theatre packed night and day.

The production is more spectacular than "On With the Dance"—it is the biggest thing, dramatically and scenically, that Fitzmaurice has ever done.

The first of the new season's productions. Released in September.

"The Fighting Chance"

A Paramount Arcraft Picture

Gosh What a Punch!

NO wonder the audiences gasped at the Rivoli! No wonder the newspapers raved about it! No wonder everybody's talking about it!

Because it's got a regular knock-out punch in every scene. In story, in settings, in situations and in acting it stands clear at the top.

The Tribune said it was the best thing seen in New York recently. And when a New York critic talks like that you know he's seen something big.

The fame of Chambers, the fame of the all-star cast, the luxurious production and the marvelous direction are conspiring to help you break records.

Go after it!

GIVE SATISFACTION WHEREVER PLAYED"

—says M.P. NEWS

STORIES of Canadian border life, with the Northwest Mounted Police playing prominent roles and the French inhabitants introduced to give the proper balance, are always interesting. 'UNDER NORTHERN LIGHTS' is a picture of this type, with the elements of romance, incident and romantic moments mixed in the proper proportions. Comedy relief is furnished in the form of a negro who is always "seeing things." It is ludicrous, indeed, when he is seen pursued by a young bear, who does not hesitate to climb a ladder in his efforts to get the negro. This picture should give satisfaction wherever played."

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

'Never have there been any as remarkable' says Virginia Dale in the Chicago Daily Journal

"THERE have been cannibal pictures before, but it is safe to say that never have there been any as remarkable as these now on exhibition. Aside from the awe this film inspires, there is an educational value not to be ignored—it looks as if the missing link were found.

"Brisk subtitles explain as the film unwinds. The photography, for the most part, is unexpectedly clear—it should be remembered that much was done by microphotography. Mr. Laemmle has accomplished an accurate pictorial history of a race of which little has hitherto been known. It is worthy of the utmost consideration."

says:

"The LA SALLE is having a time seating all the Chicagoans who crave a close view of cannibals and their haunts. The pictures are exciting and intensely interesting and different."

GENEVIEVE HARRIS

says:

"I am quite sure you will enjoy seeing this film record of a daring adventure. It is interesting from start to finish. There are no dull moments—the views are all genuine."

The fact that International News scores its scoops so consistently is of real dollars-and-cents value to the exhibitor. This persistent beating of competitors has built up a following that means an actual cash increase in your box-office receipts. The news weekly often is the deciding factor in winning wavering patrons. With International News on your program you get those wavering patrons—as well as all the other extra admissions that International News regularly brings. Released thru Universal.

BOX OFFICE TITLES

If you don't think the TITLES on your billing have a direct relationship to your BOX OFFICE, just try a picture with a meaningless name on your public. Or, to put it another way: List your poor-draw pictures of last year. Then take heed of THEIR TITLES. One needn't be a title expert to find that some are "commercial" and some ARE NOT.

Every Realart title in the coming year is "commercial." Every title has to meet the double requirement of fitting the picture and fitting the box office. Sometimes an original title will meet that test. Oftentimes a great stage play or book is available, to be used as it was originally or with an original twist. In such cases, the tremendous value of a title which has been internationally advertised and established becomes a very great asset. But ALWAYS the appeal of the title to your public is kept in mind. A few from next season's list to prove it:

"FOOD FOR SCANDAL"

"BLACKBIRDS"

"SWEET LAVENDER"

"THE NEW YORK IDEA"

"YOU NEVER CAN TELL"

"THE BELOVED VILLAIN"

These are the first six productions covered by the Realart Star Franchise, quoted to you right from the standing schedule. What is YOUR opinion of their box office value?

Are you seeing our nearest exchange today?

BRINGING OLD WORLD MARKETS TO NEW WORLD MERCHANTS

—via INTER-OCEAN

FIVE years ago, the foreign film market, its scope and possibilities, were unknown to the American Producer. Today it represents a vital adjunct to his business.

Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, acting as the medium through which foreign buyers were enabled to obtain exclusive territorial rights to American productions, has played a most important part in the development of this branch of the business.

During its brief career as an export house, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has taken over the problems of export distribution and brought the old world market to new world merchants.

¶ Romance and Love.

- ¶ The history of the world holds no greater romance—save the love story of a boy and a girl—than is played on the oil fields of America today. The gold rush of 1849, the diamond mines at Kimberley, the Alaska placers—all fade into insignificance before the magic of oil.
- ¶ The shooting of a twenty-thousand-barrels-a-day gusher thrills the beholder into a veritable ecstasy—and such a scene is in the picture.
- ¶ Oil, the life-blood of industry, is the object of the greatest game in the world today; it is the second most interesting word in the language to the most people in the United States.
- ¶ But the greatest romance of all time, the one word that means most—universally—is love. And there is a love story in this picture which is truly beautiful—because it concerns a girl and a boy “even as you and I.”
- ¶ Timely—thrilling—sweet: these attributes make “OIL” the comedy drama of the year.

¶ Drama and thrills.

¶ Every day brought another battle to keep what he had earned by the sweat of his brow from the vultures that prey on every field where treasure abounds.

EX

¶ Twenty-thousand-barrels-a-day; pouring forth with all the pent-up energy bottled up for centuries in Earth's fastnesses to supply the life blood of industry.

“OIL”

¶ Treachery, plotting, villainy—overcome by honesty, determination and grit—just the kind of part for Arthur Guy Empey.

¶ He won out because he was fighting not only for wealth, but for the girl he wanted—offered the one way for him to win her

“OIL”

¶ With this greatest incentive, he was bound to win out; his victory will thrill your patrons and crowd your theatre.

¶ After the busy day at the office or the shop, after the housewife's daily stint, after the lessons for school are done, man or woman, boy or girl—all seek entertainment and happiness in the intimate revelations of life they behold on the silver sheet of the screen.

"OIL"

brings them into a world of adventure and romance, thrills them with its drama and emotion, tickles them with its wholesome comedy, brushes away the frowns of the workaday world.

1. Benj. B. Hampton

The producer without a failure.

The man who made "The Dwelling Place of Light," "Riders of the Dawn," "Desert Gold," "The Westerners" and "The Sagebrusher."

2. Winston Churchill

America's greatest novelist.

A sincere genius who wrote "The Crisis," as well as "The Dwelling Place of Light."

3. An All-Star Cast

With a sterling aggregation of players including: Robert McKim, Claire Adams, and King Baggot.

This alliance of great names has brought to the Screen a genuine Special Production that tells a story of heart-hunger and American ambition, such as has no equal for power and intensity and emotional appeal. It is, in fact, Benj. B. Hampton's supreme triumph as a producer of great screen drama.

THE BEGINNING OF A NEW ERA IN MOTION PICTURE DISTRIBUTION

Under the present system the producer and distributor have been, and are spending MILLIONS OF DOLLARS OF THE EXHIBITOR'S MONEY in shouting from the housetops, "What wonderful pictures we are making," and then proceed to collect from the exhibitor, advance payments and deposits for pictures before they are completed, and in many instances before they are even started.

Is it not a better idea, Mr. Exhibitor, to be governed by my plan, and allow the exhibitor, who is "The Backbone of this Industry," to participate in these millions, by allowing him to run a few of these productions FREE OF CHARGE, thereby proving to him, and to the public, that you have pictures that are really WORTH WHILE, giving him a practical demonstration, instead of spending money to tell him how good your product is.

Although this announcement may appear startling to many, it is absolutely bona-fide in every detail, and is the outcome of a plan that I have had in mind for many years, and which am at last in a position to demonstrate and prove to the industry that "My Idea" is the solution of many evils and obstructions that have confronted us in the past.

I have been authorized and have the extreme privilege, granted me by a Large producing and distribution company, to offer to THE FIRST THOUSAND exhibitors who will communicate with me DIRECT:

FIVE WEEKS SERVICE OF TWO PICTURES A WEEK ABSOLUTELY FREE OF CHARGE AND WITH NO OBLIGATION WHATSOEVER TO THE EXHIBITOR TO CONTINUE THE SERVICE AFTER THE FIVE WEEKS FREE DEMONSTRATION, UNLESS THEY SO DESIRE.

It SOUNDS IMPOSSIBLE, does it not? So DID PONZI'S PLAN!!!

ASK THE U. S. GOVERNMENT if it's impossible!!!

After the Five weeks Free Demonstration, I am going to save you over fifty percent in rentals if you desire to continue with us.

A Co-operative company organized in such a manner that we can give the exhibitor 100% production—100% co-operation—100% Efficiency and 100% distributing service, with absolutely no financial investment, no selling of stock, no support from the exhibitor except his moral good-will and the use of our product, if same meets with his requirements, and most important of all, N-O D-E-P-O-S-I-T-S. How does that strike you? Made to order, eh? and best of all, IT'S REAL. So don't rub your eyes.

THERE ARE 20,000 EXHIBITORS IN THE U. S. I am personally acquainted with over 5,000. Many of you have read the "Smiling Jimmy Stories" in the different Trades Papers for the past few years. You know how I stand towards the exhibitor. I have been an exhibitor myself for many years before launching into the exchange and distributing end of the business. NOW: WHO WILL BE THE FIRST 1000 TO GET IN ON "MY FIVE WEEKS FREE DEMONSTRATION PLAN?"

YESTERDAY IS GONE! TO-MORROW MAY NEVER COME! TO-DAY IS HERE!

ACT QUICKLY or your competitor's wire may reach me first, and I will be compelled to award him the FREE DEMONSTRATION.

Not one red cent's cost to you, except the regular U. S. Government tax and express charges from our Branch Office in your territory.

"THE PROOF OF THE PUDDING IS IN THE EATING."

Help me prove to the industry that "MY PLAN" is right!

This is going to be "Your Company," and I am your employee, but I MUST HAVE your co-operation.

Arrangements for Suburban FIRST RUNS and certain localities in New York City, Chicago, San Francisco and larger cities will be made according to FIRST COMMUNICATIONS TO REACH ME. (No exceptions.)

No verbal communications count, as my large staff of employees will be extremely busy with the many communications received. Must be letter or WIRE. SUGGEST TEN WORD TELEGRAM (prepaid) if you want to be FIRST.

I will answer each communication personally, and RIGHT AWAY, with full details regarding our releases and plans, and advise you if you are one of the FIRST THOUSAND.

Commence releasing in September.

is the greatest financial drain in the motion picture production because it can never be recovered but—

BRUNTON Service and BRUNTON Equipment

Have made LOST TIME A LOST ART with those making pictures at this perfectly equipped plant.

Ninety thousand square feet of covered stages; seven warehouses of properties; $150,000 worth of electrical apparatus; sixty-five acres of buildings, permanent sets, and location spots, are among some of the things right at hand on the studio grounds.

The requirements of producers are executed with an understanding, a decision and an accuracy that make the ROBERT BRUNTON STUDIOS the quickest and the best, therefore the cheapest place to prepare dramatic material for the screen.

This explains why the most noted stars and most famous producers of the day systematically patronize the world's greatest picture producing plant.

Sound Advice

It is a worthwhile service to point out to anyone how failure may be avoided and success attained. Our constant effort has been to show the exhibitor how he can attain the maximum of success through the display of posters that will fill his auditorium with patrons—and his box-office with the price of their admissions.

The one type of poster that will do that is the RITCHEY poster. It is designed and executed with just that purpose in view, for the RITCHEY organization is composed of practically every great motion picture poster genius in America—no matter what his specialty—artist—printer—or advertising psychologist.

The result is an organization competent to turn out the greatest motion picture posters possible to produce—an organization that cannot possibly produce any other kind of poster!

To the exhibitor it is the one absolute essential to business success!

More Work—Less Talk

MOST hardheaded citizens are firmly convinced that what this country needs to-day—for its government, its industry, its commerce—is less talk and more work.

"You can't run a Government on Gab" proclaimed a resounding cartoon the other day. "Stop Prattling and Produce!"

And we don't know of any better advice that could be given this particular industry right now; nor do we know of any industry that needs more this particular advice.

"Stop Prattling and Produce!"

And by "Produce" we don't mean merely the production of pictures; we mean the production of practical, workable, livable rental policies; we mean the production of theatre management which will please and hold and increase the motion picture public.

Of all the volume of printed stuff recently published—and "volume" alone describes it—we have seen but one utterance that spoke throughout with honest-to-God sincerity and sense. That one was printed in a contemporary and came as a telegraphic statement from James C. Quinn, the Rialto theatre, El Paso.

Mr. Quinn says that he's fighting for his life against the Lynch aggression in the South; but that if he loses he'd rather lose to Mr. Lynch than to any other man he knows because Mr. Lynch does things and doesn't talk.

Stop wasting "verbal peas" advises Mr. Quinn, and "mould some steel nosed bullets." The only way to fight an aggressor is with the aggressor's own strength and methods.

Mr. Quinn says some other things that ought to be held standing in large, black type.

He says that if the exhibitor could live through the days of the Patents Company, he can survive the present. Mr. Quinn is dead right!

He says that the exhibitors' enemy is just as much the other exhibitor who controls and unfairly operates a closed territory as the producer who invades it by buying theatres. Mr. Quinn is dead right. Some day the eighty per cent exhibitor will know just what effect this kind of exhibitor has had upon the other fellow's rental prices.

If producers could concentrate upon production—and certainly it takes concentration if with eyes and minds and creative enthusiasm fixed upon nothing else they could work without apprehension; if distributors were free to buy selectively and to devote their other energies entirely to the improvement of distribution; if exhibitors were showmen only and gave the whole working day to their own undivided and highly important profession—well, we wouldn't have our almost continuous and South American-like revolutions. We'd be economically correct.

But being a very young, very big and very fast growing industry, we evolve jerkily and the digressions are ominous at times.

Paul Cromelin, in a thoughtful and straightforward address this week, sounded a solemn note of warning. He said he would as soon have a few men censor all films as to control all production.

You are right, Mr. Cromelin. The effect would be quite the same. It would kill the motion picture. But it won't happen.

The temptation to control the motion picture is a glorious one. It inflames imaginations.

In this connection we wish to criticize the capitalization of a recently announced concern, which is set at only one hundred millions. That is far too little.

But the agent that can restore Russia, awaken China, educate the world's millions and make a young woman star known to more minds and hearts than the greatest personage in human history—that agent was never meant for a few hands to sway nor a few minds to censor, nor for a government to control.

To get back to our own present film situation and to Mr. Quinn, this industry was nearer to control in the days of the Patents Company than it is now or ever will be again. Had control ever been possible we would already have it. That's certain.

And it's equally certain that we haven't got it now and we won't have it.

Principally, there's a fight on to own first run theatres. That's the new phase of aggression. But the ownership of first run houses doesn't mean control of the American film industry by a jugful. Can anyone tell us of the right kind of picture from any source that deserved and didn't get its due share of first runs?

Let's get back to work—to good pictures, good distribution, good theatres—better than we now have.

Cromelin Urges That Pictures Be Imported

Declares We Cannot Hope to Develop Our Own Foreign Trade by Repelling Imports

THAT the American motion-picture industry is willing and ready to accept the motion-picture offerings produced by our European confreres was maintained in an address made by Paul H. Cromelin, president and general manager of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, at a luncheon at which he was host to a representative gathering of members of the trade press at the Hotel Astor, Monday, August 2d, 1920.

Mr. Cromelin re-echoed the sentiments expressed at the luncheon which was tendered to W. G. Faulkner at the Hotel Astor on February 25th last, when that distinguished member of the British press, coming as the emissary of Lord Northcliffe, the British publisher, arrived in this country to study American motion-picture conditions. But further than that, Mr. Cromelin endorsed wholeheartedly the policy of importing not only British productions, but the product of other foreign producers as well. In this respect, he placed himself definitely on record as favoring the resolution unanimously adopted at the recent exhibitors' convention in Cleveland which augured for the importation of foreign-made films as an incentive to stimulate competition in this country; and also pledged co-operation of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation to obtain for American distribution the best cinema offerings available in foreign film markets.

That what he urged during his speech was the correct policy to pursue for the American motion picture industry, was conclusively evidenced by the applause which greeted his remarks. Especially was this so when he said:

"We cannot hope for the development of our foreign trade, if we are going to continue the policy of refusing the product of the foreign producer. We have been trading with him in the past, and he realizes that up to a short time ago he had to take the American product or go without any at all. But now he is producing pictures on his own initiative and his productions show a marked improvement. Eventually the time will come when his pictures will be of sufficient quality to compete with the American product. The time is rapidly approaching, and in some instances productions have been made which are almost on a par with our American pictures. If we show by our neglect to import the foreign-made production that we are not anxious for their product, foreign producers will cease to purchase American productions.

"The motion picture is now commonly recognized as the 'universal language.' The motion picture business has developed from a mere novelty to a gigantic industry. The foreign film buyer is just as responsible for the growth of our business as is the American motion picture man. The time has come when we must look facts squarely in the face, and in doing so we cannot fail to perceive the progressive strides in motion-picture production which have characterized the foreign producer's activities during the past few years.

"If foreign productions are of a meritorious nature and of a quality consistent with our own product, I ask you, gentlemen of the press, should we not import them for physical distribution in this country? I have always maintained that the same fundamentals which make for a good picture in this country are the same qualities which make for a good picture abroad, and vice-versa.

"The English picture, the French production, and the offerings of our other foreign producers should be given an opportunity to demonstrate their value to the American public. While not all the productions made abroad could find a market in this country, the best product could be selected and shown in the theatres of this country, notwithstanding the attempts of others to clog the channels of distribution."

Mr. Cromelin, during the course of his interesting address, touched on the censorship problem, which he said required immediate attention in foreign countries.

A. L. Feinman was the first speaker at the luncheon. He introduced Bert Adler, American representative of the Kinematograph Weekly of London, who prefaced Mr. Cromelin's address with a few interesting remarks regarding Mr. Cromelin's early ventures in the motion picture industry. Mr. Cromelin followed with his interesting talk on foreign conditions.

The Small Exhibitor and His Problem

By "Smiling" Jimmy Kelly

DURING the many years that I have been connected with this great industry, both as an exhibitor and exchange man, I have possibly had as much chance as any other man in the business of investigating and thoroughly analyzing the many difficulties that are now and always have confronted the exhibitor, and having had the great advantage of meeting face-to-face possibly 70 per cent of the "small-town" exhibitors right in their own home in practically every state in the Union, it naturally gives me an insight into certain phases of the business from their standpoint. In my present affiliation, as general manager of a large producing and distributing corporation, I will have the privilege and authority to cope with these conditions in a way that will guarantee the exhibitor a saving in money and increased efficiency in the manner that he will receive his pictures.

In the past and right now all of the producers and distributors throughout the country have never really analyzed the "small town" situation in the proper light; they have simply sent out instructions to their branch managers that the minimum price on "Lizzie's Delima," featuring Fannie Ignatz, in the town of Exzema, Neb., is $25.00 per day and no less. The town of Exzema contains 2,000 souls, 1,500 of them have one foot in the grave, and the other 500 are prohibitionists. However, that doesn't worry the "home office" any, and they must have that twenty-five cartwheels for "Lizzie." If Mr. Exhibitor in Exzema does not play "Lizzie," his patrons think he is a piker, and give him the "Double O O," and if he does play "Lizzie" he loses his shirt, because his patronage is limited, and it is impossible for him to take in more than a certain amount, which is less than the twenty-five the "home office" insists upon.

Now why is it not possible for the distributor to secure the "right dope" on these towns, why don't they give their local branch managers more leverage in the matter of price to the "small town exhibitor," and then in turn the branch manager should take a little for granted, what his sales representatives tell him. The salesman is right on the ground; he sees the small patronage that the small-town exhibitor has; he sees his actual receipts each night, taken from the U. S. government reports, which have to be authentic. If he is a good salesman he should and will protect his company, but not at the expense of his customer, the exhibitor. Therefore, why shouldn't he be able to judge, if he is any kind of a man at all, just how much the exhibitor can afford to pay for a picture?

I have visited many small towns myself, as a representative of large distributing corporations, I have analyzed the situation thoroughly and figured out exactly what the exhibitor could afford to pay for my pictures, and after I had gone to the expense of visiting the town, spending my time figuring out the "correct amount" of

Zukor Agrees to Confer with Sydney S. Cohen

Sydney Cohen's reply to Mr. Zukor's offer to confer with members of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was made public late Aug. 5.

Mr. Cohen advised that he had appointed a committee of nine to meet during the week of August 9, and would notify Mr. Zukor of the exact time and place in order that he and his associates might attend.

The committee consists of three officers of the Theatre Owners Association, Sydney S. Cohen, president, New York; C. C. Griffin, vice-president, California, and E. T. Peter, treasurer, Texas; three members of the executive committee, Ralph Talbot, President Oklahoma Theatre Managers Association, J. C. Ritter, President Michigan Exhibitors Association, and C. L. O'Reilly, New York. The committee is rounded out by three members of "the rank and file," J. T. Collins, President New Jersey Exhibitors Association, H. C. Bean, President, M. P. Theatre Owners of New Hampshire, and H. C. Varner, Secretary North Carolina Exhibitors Association.

FOLLOWING an exchange of letters, which are printed below, Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has agreed to a conference with Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, in the hope of amicably settling the differences between the producing company and the national exhibitors association. Mr. Zukor agreed that further correspondence would be useless and requested that a time be set in order that the difficulties might be thrashed out and an end put to all misunderstandings.

Mr. Cohen's letter to Mr. Zukor under date of August 4th, read as follows:

"Dear Sir:

"I have read with the deepest interest your statement given to the trade press touching the very matter which I brought to your attention in my recent communication to you.

"You have deliberated a considerable length of time before declaring yourself on the situation of which, under the instructions of the Cleveland Convention, I complained to you in my open letter. Your statement does not directly or in terms refer to my letter, but as it touched upon all the vital points at issue between us, I do not think that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America want me to stand on form and ceremony.

"You have gone on record as saying that the abuses of which we have complained have never had your sanction. You supplement this assurance with a definite and practical offer which I do not think ought to be ignored.

"The uses of correspondence have, I think, been now fully exhausted: we have come to pass where a meeting face to face in the next step in any effort toward fair and reasonable arbitration.

"Assuming then a disposition on your part to meet us half way and casting aside for the present at least any doubt as to the good faith of the offer, I believe that the interests of the motion picture theatre owners of America and the interests of the whole industry will be well served by a formal declaration of our willingness to accept your offer. You have in the most explicit words, disavowed all responsibility for the offences against the independence of the exhibitors. You have gone further even by your emphatic avowal that you will personally take up, consider and adjust such grievances as we have time and again submitted to your representatives.

"To show the good faith and the conciliatory spirit of which, under the instructions of the Cleveland Convention I had given such a pointed assurance in my letter, I propose under the authority conferred upon me by the unanimous voice of my fellow exhibitors to appoint a committee of motion picture theatre owners which will be thoroughly representative of the exhibiting body of the whole country. I will ask this committee to share the responsibility of discussing and acting upon your declaration. I believe that this committee will be willing, as I know it will be competent, to sit as a board of arbitration, according to you the privilege of proving your sincerity and good faith by appearing before it, conferring with it and I trust in the end cooperating with it. Peace and harmony throughout the various branches of the industry is essential to its prosperity, and its future development, both as an art, and as a business.

"On behalf of the organization I have the honor to represent, I am willing to waive any matter of mere form if the substance of our mission can be accomplished.

"If the necessary assurances can be obtained to this effect, backed up by such deeds and pledges as will satisfy the committee, it will mean the end of an evil which has cast its shadow over the entire industry and has created conditions of chaos and confusion, portending economic disaster all around.

"We have specific instances in writing of representatives of your organization threatening and intimidating exhibitors and also similar activities by the associate of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in New England, Mr. Alfred S. Black, and of the associate of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in the South, Mr. S. A. Lynch. We are prepared to meet you and your associates at the earliest possible moment and present these definite and specific facts.

"In view of the new season rapidly drawing near, you, no doubt, appreciate the need of a speedy adjustment of the various controversies between your corporation and the members of our organization, and we request an early reply, hopeful that it will be productive of a better understanding.

"Sincerely yours,
"Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.
(signed)
"Sydney S. Cohen, President."

Mr. Zukor's reply, dated August 4th, was as follows:

"Dear Sir:

"I agree with you most heartily that the best interests of all of us can be best served by the conference suggested. I shall be very glad indeed to meet your committee at the earliest possible moment. Will you please set a time for the discussion, which I am sure will clear away a few difficulties and put an end to the arguments that I know have been caused only by misunderstanding and ignorance of our problems.

"Yours very truly,
(signed) Adolph Zukor, President,
"Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

Crandall Employees Visit Metropolis

Prominent Washington Exhibitor Gives House Managers Business and Pleasure Trip

HARRY CRANDALL, the Washington exhibitor, has brought the managers of his twelve theatres to New York for several days' tour of the city, its theatres, studios, etc. This in itself is not such an unusual event if back of the trip was not a motive more to be commended than a personal compliment to the Crandall employees and a desire to show them a good time.

Mr. Crandall is one of the exhibitors who has grown with the motion picture industry. He recognizes that to build the greatest efficiency in his organization an exchange of ideas, an inspection of the methods of others, a building of good feeling, a knowledge of how pictures are made, a breaking away from the daily routine, is as essential as a box office statement of each day's receipts.

The present visit to New York is the first of what will become an annual event with the Crandall theatres staff. Next year a similar trip, perhaps to some other city, will be held.

Better methods of showmanship are being sought. The Crandall theatres are not to stand still. That is Mr. Crandall's ambition and the real reason for the New York trip.

However, it is not to be inferred that the present visit is a matter of business only. Mr. Crandall recognizes that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" and therefore entertainment for the crowd is being given special attention.

Monday evening Mr. Crandall gave a dinner to his employees, members of the staffs of the trade papers and some invited guests at the Hotel Astor and afterward entertained with a theatre party at the Ziegfeld Follies.

Those attending the dinner and theatre as Mr. and Mrs. Crandall's guests are as follows:

Independence Versus Centralized Production Monopoly

By J. D. Williams, Manager of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

WHEN Mr. F. E. Woods, supervising director of the Famous Players-Lasky West Coast studios, attacked the commercial practicability of independent stars and independent producers, charging that their lack of business management, the absence of organized studio methods and complete production facilities made for higher production costs, and, in consequence, higher rentals to exhibitors, he had in view a very definite purpose, and one which, in justice to the independent stars of the present, and more particularly of the future, and to the exhibitors who are booking, and who will book, their pictures, should be pointed out to correct any misgiving it may have created in artistic quarters where the spirit of independence has not yet penetrated.

Obviously, Mr. Woods' arguments for monopolized production units reflects the official attitude of the organization which he represents. His article was not an argument so much as it was a profound resentment by his company of a fast-growing desire by the capable, aspiring members of the rank and file of production workers to cease being servants, and, instead, to become their own masters as independent stars and independent producers, following in the footsteps of the more courageous and matured independent "masters" of today who were the "servants" of yesterday.

Reduced to its chief thought, Mr. Wood's article says to its "servants": "You must not become masters. You cannot succeed. We, as masters, are too great and too powerful to enable our servants longer to leave our ranks and become successful as their own masters. You are servants now, without the money, the studio equipment, and the myriad organizational facilities which we command, and as servants you cannot obtain these things and become your own masters. It requires tremendous equipment, and a wonderfully efficient centralized control to create profitable motion pictures. As an individual you would lack these things."

In terms more blunt, and more clearly expressive of the result Mr. Woods and his company hoped would follow his article, it amounted to an attempt to discourage other capable servants, still in the ranks, from becoming their own masters.

The reason is simple, but not obvious. If the "servants" of yesterday, with the tremendous production facilities of the producer-exhibitor-distributor combines striving to bring out their latent genius and artistry, had not succeeded to such an astounding degree as the "masters" of today, as independent stars, independent directors and independent producers shaping their own destinies and fortunes and without the manifold advantages pointed out by Mr. Woods as the assets of a centralized production monopoly, then Mr. Woods and the company for which he writes anti-independence articles would not feel the slightest concern over the "servants" of today who have the ambition and ability to become the "masters" of tomorrow.

A prodigal employee usually is a better investment for an organization than one who has the desire to be his or her own master, but who has not essayed independence with the difficulties and handicaps which Mr. Woods alleges. Let an actor or actress, a director, or any other studio employee cease playing the servant to centralized production monopoly, and become a "master" independent and at the head of his or her own company, and have that venture into the realms of freedom and unrestrained artistic effort climaxed by failure, and they will return to the fold of the G. P. H. (general production headquarters), docile and penitent, willing and anxious once more to become the "servant" and to remain the "servant," satisfied that without studio facilities equally as great as those which Mr. Woods describes they cannot become successful as "masters."

But the exact opposite has been true of those stars, directors and producers who have chafed at the restraints, the machine-like routine and the "official" limitations of a large production concern, and who have become "masters" so that their genius and talent for wonderful work could be exerted to the limit for bigger and better pictures.

The old Biograph Company provides an apt illustration. The "servants" of its early production days are among the best known and most popular of the independent "masters" of today, and practically every one of them has had months and years of experience with the extraordinary facilities and thorough producing equipment of the studios controlled by the producer-exhibitor-distributors. They deserted the homes of mechanical perfection to become "masters," using less studio space, fewer aids, and without tremendous resources in money and experienced business managers. And they have not returned as prodigals.

It is only fair to give to the centralized production groups the credit to which they are entitled for what they contribute to the industry apart from the pictures that are made in their plants. They amount to excellent training schools for developing talent and histrionic ability. It is to them that the embryo stars, directors and producers go for their initiation into the mysteries and the technique of the motion picture art. It is in these studios that much of the genius is developed and brought to perfection. It is from these places that the great stars, directors and producers of today have come after months and years of training and practical experience. Therefore, they have an important place in the business, and deserve consideration accordingly.

I am certain that no large producing organization could induce Mary Pickford to exchange her self-mastery as a star and become once more a "servant" for any amount. She invested a great deal more in her first production as an independent than any of her previous pictures had cost. But exhibitors did not complain, nor did they feel that she had worked any hardship on them in creating "Daddy Long-legs," "The Hoodlum" or "Heart O' the Hills," at production expenses which made necessary higher rentals than they ever before had paid for her pictures.

There is an equal certainty that Marshall Neilan, Douglas Fairbanks, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Charlie Chaplin, Mack Sennett, Thomas H. Ince, or any other of the "masters" of today, who were the "servants" of yesterday, could not be prevailed upon to return again to the rank and file for any sum.

It has been pointed out many times before that a great majority of the really big and successful productions of the last two years were made by independent stars, independent directors and independent pro-

Group Bookings Rejected by Majority of Bigger Companies

National Association Canvass Reveals Producers' Strong Opposition

UNANIMOUS rejection of a group booking policy through agencies was the sentiment expressed by leading producers canvassed on the subject by P. L. Waters, chairman of the Distributors' Division of the National Association.

The fact that added expense would accrue to the exhibitor through establishment of a middleman in the form of a booking agency was a point taken cognizance of by practically every producer.

The replies received are reproduced in full:

Dear Mr. Waters:

I have your letter of July 20th, requesting that I advise you as to the policy of this company with reference to group booking with Booking Agencies in the United States.

This company will adhere to its existing policy of booking independently to the exhibitors, and does not intend to contribute its product to any plan or scheme to establish or entrench booking agencies throughout different sections of the country.

Yours very truly,

Dear Mr. Waters:

Your letter of the 20th inst., requesting a statement of our policy in regard to booking agencies, is received.

We have always been opposed to selling our product through booking offices, and we see no reason why we should alter our policy at this or at any future time.

In justice to the exhibitor and to ourselves, we must sell our product direct to the theatre owner, and not through a middle man.

Dear Mr. Waters:

I am in receipt of yours of July 20th asking me to advise you as to the policy of Select Pictures Corporation and Republic Distributing Corporation with reference to group bookings of our product with booking agencies in the United States.

We will positively not book our productions in that manner. We will do business direct with the individual exhibitor.

Gentlemen:

Replying to yours of recent date.

Triangle is decidedly opposed to group bookings, feeling that each theatre should be booked separately and direct, and not through an agency. This has always been our policy.

Office of the Manager.

Mr. P. L. Waters,
Chairman, Distributors' Division,
National Association of the Motion Picture Industry,

1520 Broadway,

New York City.

Dear Mr. Waters:

We do not believe that distributors have any right or any special privilege in this industry which entitles them to dictate in any manner to producers or exhibitors. This is my personal opinion expressed in response to the request in your letter of July 20th.

Distributors are, to use a pat phrase, "a necessary evil," and the fact that they are essential to the industry does not preclude the fact that they should be fair and assume and maintain a policy of square dealing with producers and exhibitors. There are no forces in the motion picture business which can be considered a vital part of the industry with the exception of producers and exhibitors.

The distributors should give exhibitors without interference or objection the same rights to cooperate for their joint protection in booking or in any other way they deem necessary, as they, the distributors, take in collective actions on various matters of mutual interest, and the same attitude should prevail toward producers.

If six directors can get together and form an organization for their mutual benefit, for their mutual prosperity, and for the advancement of their mutual interests in every particular, there is no reason apparent to me why six exhibitors, or more than six exhibitors, should not join hands for mutual protection.

Before definite action could be taken by Associated First National Pictures to arrive at a conclusion concerning any booking plan, it first would be necessary to have a decision on the subject by the Executive Committee, and I feel quite confident that the members of the Executive Committee would decide every individual booking plan or booking arrangement between exhibitors strictly on its individual merits rather than attempting to deal with the matter in a general way.

Yours very truly,

Manager.

July 23, 1920.

National Association of the Motion Picture Industry,

No. 1520 Broadway,

Gentlemen:

Herewith I tender the policy of Fox Film Corporation with reference to group bookings with all booking agencies in America, as requested in your letter of July 20th.

Booking agencies formed and operated for the purpose of making group bookings on behalf of exhibitors are bound in a short time to develop into a monopoly of a most destructive character. Exhibitors are invited into the plan on the pretext of lower rentals and of booking protection for their theatres. But that is only the ingenious, sugar-coated, sweet and innocent invitation to join the booking agency at the beginning.

Facts and conditions of the past prove that very shortly after the exhibitor places ducers. A very small percentage of the total of great pictures have come from the large homes of mechanical perfection in studio operation. This leads to the conclusion that complete and elaborate studio equipment is an asset, but not in the least an absolutely essential asset to successful productions.

It is a very dangerous thing for exhibitors, for the independent producers of today, and more particularly for these "servants" of today who will rise from the ranks and become the "masters" of tomorrow, to permit or give heed to any effort to discourage independence among the artists, present or future, to whom the industry must look for its product. Such discouragement may benefit one or two specific companies; but it is harmful to the business as a whole. The several thousand exhibitor members of Associated First National Pictures, and, undoubtedly, other thousands of independent theatre owners, want and need productions from independent stars and producers. As exhibitors they have had a varied experience with pictures of all character and description, and our members are emphatically in favor of independently made releases, no matter through what distributing agency they may come.

There are only two vital departments of the industry—production and exhibition. Distribution is essential, but not vital, because it is utterly dependent on the other two. And when the exhibitors voice the unanimous opinion that independently made pictures are much to be preferred, those in the ranks of studio workers today who have the ambition to become their own masters as independent stars and producers are justified in giving greater attention to the wishes of the men who will be asked to buy their product than to the arguments of those who seek to discourage them in their desire for self-mastery.

They must remember, too, that the great paintings, the great sculptures, the greatest stories, in short, everything in art that is classical, was created by men and women who were their own masters. "The Angelus" did not come out of a commercial art studio. Shakespeare was not a salaried author when he wrote "Romeo and Juliet" or "The Merchant of Venice."

A very small per cent of the greatest artistic efforts in the motion picture industry have been produced by stars or directors who were "servants" on salary, and a still smaller per cent will come from them in the future.

Sydney Cohen Sends Wire to Film Producers

FOLLOWING is a copy of a wire dispatched on August 2 by Sydney S. Cohen, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to manufacturers, distributors and producers of film:

"Trade papers state that S. A. Lynch is negotiating for output of all producers for entire eleven Southern States. As he already controls output in these States for Paramount, Realart, Triangle, and in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas First National, this would mean absolute monopoly.

"We urge you not to enter into an arrangement of this nature with Mr. Lynch and his associates, and thus show that your concern will not be a party to this booking scheme, which tends to control the market in these States and deprive the independent exhibitor from doing business directly with your company, and may eventually, deprive your company of a market for your productions.

"The exhibitors of the United States will resent any such arrangement being entered into which will permit any person or persons to use the control of the bookings of any producing organization to threaten or intimidate exhibitors into disposing of their theatres, or to compel them to book their theatres through any individual or combination of individuals.

"We ask for immediate reply from your organization so we can print same in a special bulletin our organization is sending out to every exhibitor in the United States."

Shauer, F. P.-Lasky Official, Sails

The latest member of the official family of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to undertake a commutation trip to Europe is E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and in charge of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, according to an announcement made today. Mr. Shauer, who will be accompanied by Mrs. Shauer, will leave New York on the Imperator on August 12th for London, where he will spend some time in the offices of the Famous Players Film Company, Ltd., the European offices of the corporation. Later they will visit France, the Scandinavian countries, and possibly Germany. During the course of a stay of several weeks, Mr. Shauer expects to make arrangements for increased facilities for the distribution of Paramount pictures in Europe, to meet the rapidly increasing demand for these productions.

rental, my contracts were all refused and turned down by some "mahogany desk bound" in the "home office" whose last trip West ended in Trenton, N. J., and the farthest south he has ever been has been Atlantic City, N. J., but who thinks he "knows" exactly what every exhibitor in the United States should pay for his product.

Now, Mr. Exhibitor, through the columns of this paper I want to reach you with the good news that I fully believe I have arrived at a sane plan that will give the "small-town exhibitor" worth while moving pictures at "Live and let live prices." The large producing and distributing corporation for whom I will have full charge of has faith in the exhibitor and particularly the one in the smaller towns, and they have absolute faith in my plan of procedure. Believe me, although I am going to see that the big-town exhibitor receives his film at a fair rental, I am going to use every effort I possess and personally see that the "small-town exhibitor" is taken care of, and I think that I know something of what he can afford to pay, for I have visited with him and have counted his audiences.

Universal Executive Gets Back from Europe

Maurice Fleckels, second vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, arrived in New York last week from Europe, aboard the Olympic. He had been on the other side several months, partly on business connected with the foreign affairs of Universal and partly on pleasure. He was accompanied by Mrs. Fleckels.

Mr. Fleckels was enthusiastic over future prospects in Europe for American film concerns. Germany especially is crying for American films, he said, and is awaiting only the establishment of peace-time relations with the United States to let in American films now barred by a luxury ban.

First National Sub-Franchises Discussed

Meeting of Independent Exhibitors in Boston
Hears Details of Plan Explained

THE Boston City Club was recently the scene of a large gathering of over one hundred independent exhibitors on the occasion of a banquet tendered to the exhibitors by Nathan H. Gordon, member of the board of directors and the executive committee of the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and owner of the First National franchise for the Boston territory. The purpose of the meeting was to give the exhibitors the opportunity of learning the details of the sub-franchising plan adopted by First National. The gathering, according to First National, represented more than three hundred independently owned and operated theatres operated in all parts of New England.

Mr. Gordon was toastmaster for the occasion and surrounding him were Gerald Street, a Boston real estate operator and owner; Lee Friedman and Chandler M. Wood, prominent Boston bankers; Samuel Spring of California; J. D. Williams, manager of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.; E. Mandelbaum, holder of the franchise for Associated First National Pictures for the Cleveland territory; and Lieutenant James P. Anderson, general representative for the First National franchise.

The chief speakers of the meeting were Nathan H. Gordon and Joseph Levenson, manager of the Boston Strand theatre. Mr. Levenson told the story of the organization of First National from the time it was first conceived, how it has aided exhibitors in making bigger profits, has fostered and advocated big productions and been indirectly responsible for many of the most successful films of the day and of the endorsement it has received from exhibitors and public. Mr. Levenson traced First National up to the present time, when more than twenty-five hundred exhibitors have applied for sub-franchises with the organization. He declared that through First National exhibitors throughout the smaller cities of New England would be able to reap the benefits of the greatest pictures produced at a price they could afford to pay.

Upon the request of exhibitors present, Mr. Gordon took the floor to personally go into a heart-to-heart talk about the franchising proposition. He explained the method in detail, pointing out how it benefits the small as well as the larger theatres and predicted a new era of quality and service in motion picture production and distribution as a result of the plan.

There was no attempt to substitute exclusive speech-making for open discussion. The asking of questions by the exhibitors present as to the details of the franchising plan and how it would work out in practice was encouraged right from the start of the meeting. Every exhibitor present was asked to participate. Exhibitors were asked to take up from the floor any question that concerned the franchising system. And whatever questions on the part of one exhibitor prompted further inquiries on the part of others were especially asked by Mr. Gordon, who declared that modern business methods made it essential that those who work together shall have a perfect understanding of every detail of the work in which they are engaged and that he would appreciate nothing better than all the questions it was possible for every exhibitor to ask him.

Chandler Wood, president of the Metropolitan Trust Company, declared that the banking interests of the country no longer have an adverse attitude toward the motion picture industry. "Producers are now able to demand capital, and not only capital for actual productions but capital which eventually will be used in the exhibiting end," declared Mr. Wood.

Applause greeted the announcement that the independent exhibitors granted franchises with Associated First National Pictures would be entitled to six Marshall Neilan productions, two James Oliver Curwood pictures, six Charles Ray pictures, sixteen Norma Talmadge pictures, twelve Constance Talmadge pictures, twelve Katherine MacDonald pictures, six Anita Stewart pictures, four Lionel Barrymore, four Mayflower and two Mack Sennett five reel productions.

A meeting of all exhibitors of the entire State of Connecticut has been called for August 6th, to be held at the Hotel Taft, New Haven.

Smith Tells of Conditions in Canada

Hodkinson Salesmen Talks on Menace and Hope of Independent Exhibitors

“UNDER the present conditions which exist in Canada,” reports A. W. Smith, Jr., assistant sales manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, who returned recently from a conference with various Canadian exhibitors, “where certain producer-exhibitors are proving a menace to the progress of the industry by requiring exorbitant rentals for their pictures and building and buying theatres where they cannot get such rentals, an organization such as Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Ltd., offers independent exhibitors a wide avenue of escape.

“Thomas Scott, general manager of the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, states that by the end of September, 1920, the Exchange will number a minimum of 200 members who will use Hodkinson productions. The independent exhibitors of Canada are willing to pay a fair price for pictures and a price which will allow them to show a profit.

“Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Ltd., are very fortunate in having as their president Mr. Brady, of the Madison theatre, and on their board of directors Mr. Alexander, of the Doric theatre, and Mr. J. Cronk, of the Oakwood theatre. These men are big business men and they are fighting for their place in the picture industry.

“A paragraph in the prospectus of the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Ltd., gives the reason for the formation of the Exchange as follows: ‘It has long been felt by the exhibitors throughout Canada that the prices demanded for films and accessories by producer-exhibitors are, in many cases, unreasonably high, and that the terms and conditions upon which pictures are leased are very often unfair to the exhibitor. In short, many exhibitors

Letters From Readers—Timely Topics From the Viewpoint of Exhibitors

Against Longer Runs

Mr. William A. Johnston,
Motion Picture News, Inc.,
Dear Sir:

You raised a few personal lines on problems concerning the industry.

You cover the issues quite well in your editorials and are generally right, always, I believe, presenting the matter as you conscientiously believe that they are.

I believe that you are decidedly wrong, however, on the question of longer runs. Such longer runs are, perhaps the thing for the first run houses or the down town house in each city. Certainly not for the neighboring house.

The Court theatre, over which I have had the care for the last five years, is 50 per cent. a neighborhood house and the remainder is drawn from more distant sections, not in transient trades, but from persons seeking our doors through the excellence of what we offer.

For three years we have endeavored to establish a longer run policy by placing each week a program for two consecutive days.

We have jockeyed the play dates about to different sections of the week and endeavored to find its right location. It has never paid us. No matter how good and how costly the production two day runs have not been lucrative.

I believe that the Exchanges make a mistake in using the prints that are to be run in the second, third and fourth run houses in the cities in small country towns where their equipment is poor. The film becomes scratched and torn. These country places should be held back and films not released to them until after the film has had its proper run in better houses in the city. During the first run protection the film goes through houses from Spionk to Oshkosh.

The deposit system should be maintained against those houses that are irresponsible, but not those concerns and persons that have established themselves well in the business.

Yours truly,
COURT AMUSEMENT CO.,
Nathan Myers, Pres.,
Newark, N. J.

High Rental Menace

Dear Mr. Johnston:

I have just read your editorial in your NEWS issue of July 17, and want to just say that your side of the question is exactly our side, and we heartily agree with you regarding the stand you have taken.

The South is in a rather peculiar position today, but it is not in as bad position as some would have us believe, and while our magazine is on the fence and not going to fall either way at present, we have nevertheless warned every exhibitor to use his own head and pencil and paper for himself. Just so long as there are exhibitors who are content to stand still and put up a few posters, or sweep out once each day, just that long will we have exhibitors who will tremble with fear when the rent is a cloud in the sky.

The great menace today is high film rentals. I can cite you to a number of towns who pay fifty to one hundred dollars for pictures, when they have only 2,000 whites to draw from. Just so long as we have producers who insist on making pictures to run into the thousands, just so long will they force exhibitors to bear the heavier end of the bag.

Assuring you of our hearty support in every way, and with best wishes, I am,

Respectfully,
SOUTHERN PICTURE NEWS, INC.,
N. L. Royster,
Managing Editor.

To Hiram Abrams

Wm. A. Johnston, Editor,
"Motion Picture News,"
New York, N. Y.

Mr. Hiram Abrams' statement regarding 100 per cent advance deposit which appeared in your columns last week, is of especial interest to the small exhibitor, because the latter is usually in no position to file a suit to recover these deposits, on account of the small amount involved, the distance from the exchange, and the custom of "blacklisting" any exhibitor who howls.

The fifth largest industry," to quote Mr. Abrams, is in a class by itself in regard to credits and collections. It is the only large business in this country which does not recognize the financial responsibility of the individual exhibitor. This is amusing when one considers the fact that the credit limit of the average exhibitor exceeds that of the producer, in proportion to gross volume of business.

Mr. Abrams is unwilling to run the risk of loss through bad checks, but is very cheerful about allowing the exhibitor to remain unprotected in case Mr. Abrams should break, or fail to deliver. Mr. Abrams has no intention of making any adjustment whatever, involving a return of funds, in case he fails to perform his part of the contracts. The idea is, primarily, to get the money; then, if the exhibitor is lucky, he gets the service.

Mr. Abrams doesn't lie awake worrying about bad checks. That, as is usual in producers' statements, is merely poor camouflage. Mr. Abrams needs money to operate his organization. Why, however, pay interest, and put up collateral when he can make the exhibitor give it to him? Taking live theatres in this territory, ranging from a 1,500 seat house in a city of 200,000, down to a 300 seat house in a town of 1,500, the average deposit is 51 per cent. of the gross annual intake. As this condition no doubt obtains to a reasonable extent over the country, it takes only a minute to figure that the total moneys of the exhibitors at all times in the hands of the producer organizations is something like $41,000,000, without interest and without protection. This is based on the ordinary system of scores deposits and payment in advance for current pictures. On a 100 per cent. deposit basis, the sum would be, of course, enormously increased.

Does the exhibitor benefit by the fact that he supplies the producers' capital? He does not. A deposit is spent when the check is cashed; he practically waives his rights when he signs the contract.

We do not infer that the exhibitor gets nothing for his money. We do claim that the producer takes the minimum of chances, and that in case of loss, the exhibitor stands his share of it, which is 100 per cent. We believe that the motion picture industry can be placed on the level of any other legitimate business, and that in its present unhealthy condition, it is impossible for either the producer or the exhibitor to reap the full reward of his efforts. The producer who conducts his business on the basis advocated by the late Mr. P. T. Barnum is allowing the prospect of immediate profits to blind him to the possibilities of developing an industry which, properly expanded, holds the lines of legitimate American business, offers an outlet for the talents of artists and writers, giving to the public a world of entertainment and education on a plane which has today been scarcely dreamed of.

Yours truly,
COLONIAL THEATRE CO.,
Carrhage, Tenn.

Padded Pictures

Dear Mr. Johnston:

The writer is taking the liberty of an acquaintance and friendship of long standing to bore you with a matter which he thinks of vital interest to the motion picture business.

Everywhere I go I find the Exhibitors disgusted by the great number of features they get which are six, seven and eight reels or more that could just as well have been five reels and probably have proven a better picture.

It is my opinion and shared by nearly everyone I talk to that five reels is the ideal length for a feature. The exhibitor can never build around a longer feature than five reels and make the most satisfying kind of an entertainment, for the reason that to do so makes his program too long.

Everyone who has made the problem of putting together of picture programs agree that variety, comedy and all the trimmings are not just as well as a good program as the feature itself, but it is made impossible at once if the feature is over long.

The exhibitor is not as well satisfied with features having more than five reels (though it is truly a super production) the public (though not always realizing just what is wrong) are not as well satisfied as they would be with a balanced program. Still nearly all the producers seem bent on making features of extreme length. Why? I doubt very much whether these features draw a dollar more in rentals than the meat of the same feature would get in five thousand feet length.

If the producers will standardize their program features at five thousand feet, the moving picture business will progress much faster than under the present practice.

The padding of long pictures, padded out from five to eight thousand feet, can never kill the single reels as it is only through the subject matter in the single reels that a great many people become theatre patrons, who would otherwise never have been coaxed to the theatres by features alone. It is about time the producers standardize their product so as to fit in to a perfect show. What do you think? I would like for you to open this subject in your valuable trade publication for discussion.

Cordially yours,

H. W. OVIATT,
P. O. Box 501,
Portland, Oregon.

"Survival of Fittest"

Dear Mr. Johnston:

I find your editorials very true, timely and interesting. I have often wondered whether you take into consideration the many exhibitors who do not play ownership, I can not blame the producers of theatre if they own theatres, as I know that many of the exhibitors play exactly the same game if they are in a position to do so. It is the same old story of the survival of the fit.

With best wishes, I am, sincerely yours,
QUINTON D. HERMAN,
Herman's Playhouse,
Kutztown, Penn.

Lieut. Ormer Locklear, who with his flying companion, Lieut. Milton Elliott, met instant death at Los Angeles late Monday night, Aug. 2nd, while making a nose dive from an altitude of two thousand feet, with torches attached to the plane which he was flying for the last scene of the special feature picture, "The Skywayman," which William Fox was producing with the daring aviator starred. The stunts being performed were for a scene in the picture which was to represent an aeroplane on fire during a fight, with the men riding in it diving to their death.

Salt Lake City to Have Big Producing Company

Backed by some of the best known men in the industry, a $10,000,000 moving picture producing company will be launched in Salt Lake City within the next few days. While it is not yet definitely determined that the studios will be established in Salt Lake City, the preliminary plans indicate that such will be the case, since this city is said to offer better inducements than have been found elsewhere.

W. H. Swanson, president of the Swanson theatre circuit, and George Mayone, general manager of the Swanson interests, are backing the venture, while interested with them are Elton Cook and Hamilton Smith, of New York and Los Angeles, both well known in the producing field.

According to Mr. Cook, a glass covered studio will be built that will accommodate seven dramatic and comedy companies. Sporadic attempts to organize companies here have been made, but, according to Mr. Cook, this is an entirely different type.

Liberty Defense League for Sunday Opening

The newly organized Liberty Defense League of Maryland has come to the aid of the moving picture men of the State in their battle against the reformers who are trying to keep the people from voting on Sunday moving pictures. The organization is preparing to bring its influence to bear when the matter comes up in the Court of Appeals in October.

The Lord's Day Alliance, it will be remembered, attempted to restrain the Board of Election Supervisors of Maryland from allowing the people to vote on the question, and their case was thrown out of court by Judge Morris A. Soper. The Alliance then carried it to the Court of Appeals.

Exhibitors of New Hampshire and Vermont Hold Convention

Meetings in Boston July 27 Enthusiastic Gathering; Quotas Oversubscribed

ENTHUSIASM ran to such heights at the convention of motion-picture exhibitors of New Hampshire and Vermont, held in Boston on July 27th, that as a result the quotas for the two states towards the national fund were oversubscribed in cash. Invitation had been extended to every exhibitor in the two states to be present and a large number of independent unaffiliated showmen attended.

In addition to subscribing to the national association, the convention approved the plans and purposes of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as expressed in the acts and resolutions of the Cleveland convention, and voted full confidence in the ability and integrity of the officials of the national organization, and declared its allegiance to the association they represent.

Following the adoption of a number of resolutions, officers of the association were elected, all of them unanimously. C. H. Bean, of Franklin, N. H., was named president; J. E. Charoneau, of Manchester, first vice-president; Herbert Dallye, of Cleveland, second vice-president; A. H. Davis, of Nashua, third vice-president; L. L. Willey, of Rochester, fourth vice-president; F. G. Berry, of Manchester, secretary; and A. L. Countere, of Manchester, treasurer.

The executive committee consists of: Michael White, Dover; J. D. Hallisey, Nashua; D. J. Adams, Concord; C. C. Baldwin, Keene; Ansel Sanborn, Sanbornville; George La Pierre, Lakeport; Alfred M. Graves, Lebanon; H. D. Perry, Bellows Falls, Vt.; Homer A. Graves, St. Johnsbury, Vt.

Ex-Senator Charles Bean officiated as chairman and Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, addressed the convention. Mr. Cohen reported the activities of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America since the national convention at Cleveland, and a general discussion was had by all of the exhibitors present relative to the abuses existing in the industry, and the desire and necessity for the changing of same at the earliest possible moment.

Among the resolutions adopted, the New Englander went on record as being strongly opposed to any form of percentage booking. It was stated that if the same interests control production and exhibition there can be but one result—higher prices and poorer pictures. The deposit system was also condemned, and the members of the organization pledged themselves not to enter into any contract requiring payment in full for any picture more than seven days before play-date.

The producer-exhibitor was condemned in the following resolution: "Whereas,

A New Department

PLAYER, director and author will have their full inning in the new, live, newsy Professional section which will in future appear each week in the NEWS.

The work of each will receive due credit. Producers will find the department valuable in that it gives ready access to information concerning actors, actresses and directors with whom they may wish to get in touch.

The exhibitor will welcome data on the latest work of those who are favorites with his clientele.

Lillian R. Gale, well-known to players, directors and the trade in general, and who has handled publicity and advertising for many stars, will direct the section.

this committee after carefully deliberating on the data placed before it and after interviewing individually and collectively many independent exhibitors who are accredited delegates from all points of New Hampshire to this convention, unanimously reports to this convention that they condemn the practice of any manufacturer or producer or distributor of motion picture film of buying or building theatres in competition with independent exhibitors, and they further denounce as being unfair and vicious the practice of these companies or their agents and representatives in threatening exhibitors with competition or ruin, if they do not accede to their unwarranted demands, therefore be it

"Resolved, that it is the sense of your committee that this organization in convention assembled, urge every independent exhibitor to use every lawful means to prevent the continuation of the activities of these producer-exhibitor companies, and be it further

"Resolved, that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Hampshire pledge their full support and cooperation to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in their effort to keep the screens and theatres of America free and independent."

A uniform form of contract was recommended. The committee reported that "the contracts now entered into by and between the exhibitor and the producer are inequitable, and that this committee recommends that a contract be drafted and submitted to the producer and distributor, whereby the exhibitor will at all times have equal rights and be equally protected therein with the distributor and producer. We further recommend that a uniform form of contract be used by all distributors and producers.

"It is further recommended that the law and legislative committee cause such a contract to be drafted and submitted to the distributor and producer and a report returned forthwith as to their attitude regarding same."

Other activities of the convention included a protest against censorship, in which it was stated there are sufficient local police powers to keep from the screen obscene films. It was stated that censorship has proven a failure in the three states where it has been tried and local, state or federal censorship was described as "vicious in principle, and wholly alien to the spirit and genuineness of our institutions."

It was resolved that the collection of an additional music tax was unfair, inasmuch as the success of a composer's production is based almost exclusively upon the popularizing of such productions by the playing of them in motion picture theatres. It was agreed to deny all members of the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers the use of the screen until they discontinue their present demands.

Support of the independent producer was pledged, and the activities of the F. I. L. M. Clubs condemned, as was the use of the screen for purposes of publicity by any private concern.

A rising vote of thanks was extended to Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, for his address to the exhibitors present, and the fullest cooperation pledged to the national organization in behalf of the independent exhibitors of New Hampshire and Vermont.

Atlantic City Festival Interests A.M.P.A.

In the interests of the motion picture branch of Atlantic City's approaching festival, A. Conrad Ekholm, chairman of the Festival Committee, addressed the members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers last Thursday. The Festival, which is to be known as Atlantic City's Fall Frolic, is planned on a scope rivaling the Mardi Gras of New Orleans, states Mr. Ekholm, and will be directed by the City Commission, Chamber of Commerce and the Stadium Carnival Association, among other public bodies of the seaside city.

There will be special days of the Festival, which will be held September 21 to 25, set apart for participation by the Motion Picture Industry and by theatrical producers, states Mr. Ekholm. Following a discussion of plans and methods, a motion was put and carried promising A. M. P. A. support and a committee of the Association, with Arthur James as chairman, was appointed.

himself and his theatre in a book of a booking agency he loses control of the management of his house, and by cut-throat, blackjack and monopolistic methods the exhibitor is driven to give up fifty per cent or more of his theatre or he driven out of the motion picture exhibition line.

Exhibitors will remember in 1908 and succeeding years of my testimony before the long-until legal battle against the General Film Company and the Motion Picture Patents Company to keep the business open and free to competition.

The then growing success and popularity of the motion picture was the result of the splendid competitive opportunities afforded to any person or set of persons in the production of pictures that would entertain and educate. In the regular course of events this condition permitted the exhibitor to make a handsome profit and to build up a substantial business. The exhibitor was his own boss.

Twelve years ago a combination of men attempted to strangle the industry and to create an all-powerful monopoly. Fortunately for the public and the exhibitor, and I feel free to state largely due to my effort, this attempt resulted in disaster. The progress of men, who by every means endeavored to take possession of the motion picture industry in every branch, were brought before the United States Courts and their monopoly was ordered dissolved and the American was free again. Then once more the exhibitor became boss of his theatre.

Today the exhibitor is confronted with a more daring and distasteful attempt to dominate the industry. The formation of booking agencies to deal with distributors in group bookings spells the stagnation of the industry should it meet with favor by exhibitors. A group of booking offices in the principal sections of America would soon control the motion picture industry in every branch. The exhibitor would be the biggest loser.

The American public will not support a monopoly in the art of the motion picture. No longer would the exhibitor be the boss of his theatre. The booking agency trust would boss and command the picture theatres after kicking the exhibitors into business oblivion.

Every branch of the business lends itself to absolute domination if the nation-wide booking agency trust is an established fact. No longer would the exhibitor be the guiding star of the industry. In its place would come greed, the tyrannical domination by a small group of men and the elimination of the exhibitor of today.

Fox Film Corporation places itself on record as absolutely opposed to group bookings with all booking agencies. It will deal exclusively with the exhibitor direct.

Any person or persons or company is authorized to use the name of Fox Film Corporation or the undersigned in the promotion of booking agency schemes. It was reported from several sections of the United States that booking agency promoters had promised Fox pictures, which is an indication of the misleading, unauthorized and greedy tactics that are being used.

The Fox Film Corporation and the undersigned stand on record for free and competitive dealing in the motion picture industry. We are opposed to monopoly in any form.

We hope the public has made our position clear.

Very truly yours,

FOX FILM CORPORATION,
(Signed) Wm. Fox, President.

PATHE EXCHANGE, Inc.
Executive Offices
25 West 45th Street, N. Y.

July 21, 1920.

Mr. P. L. Waters,

Chairman, Distributors' Division,
National Association, Motion Picture Industry, 1520
Broadway, New York City.

Dear Mr. Waters:

Acknowledging your favor of July 20th, in which you request that we advise you as to the policy of this company on the question of group booking with all booking agencies in the United States. I beg to advise you that there is very little that can be added to what we have already said and the position that we have uniformly maintained on this subject.

Our policy has at all times been one of unqualified opposition to group bookings in principle, regardless of the disguise in which they are cloaked. They are not justified by any sound business principle and simply put upon the exhibitor and the public an added expense without any return whatever. The injection of middlemen simply adds another complication to the distribution of film—and the middleman must get his unwarranted profit at the exhibitor's expense.

But in order to protect our business against the inroads of competitors who by more or less fictitious ownership or control, either directly or through other corporations, of theatres included in one or more of the larger booking agencies have sought to nullify any general agreement that might be reached on this subject, we have been obliged to meet this competition which cannot be regarded by us as unfair, and have been obliged to continue dealing with such agencies until such time as each distributing company in good faith withdraws its support from all booking agencies, however disguised and adheres to that determination in both letter and spirit.

I am obliged to bring up this question because you have forced the same in your inquiry.

As regards any new attitude of this nature, I beg to advise you that our exchanges have already been instructed that no contracts are to be made with any agency representing any theatre or group of theatres, and that pictures are to be rented solely and directly to the individual theatres exhibiting such pictures.

In other words, while we regard the booking agency as one of the greatest evils with which the industry is confronted today, so long as our competitors recognize the agencies above referred to and deal with them, either as such or on the ground that they have ownership or control in the theatres, we shall be obliged to protect our own interests by doing likewise.

Very truly yours,

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION

Office of the President.

July 22, 1920.

Mr. P. L. Waters,

Chairman, Distributors' Division,
National Association of Motion Picture Industry, 1520
Broadway, New York City.

Dear Sir:

We have for acknowledgment your letter of July 20, 1920, requesting advice as to our policy with reference to group bookings with booking agencies in the United States so the entire trade may be informed of such policy by the publication of our reply in the Motion Picture trade journals.

Under prevailing conditions we are not in favor of having our pictures booked through booking companies because it is not fair to preclude the exhibitors from judging for themselves the quality, character and box office value of motion pictures that are offered for exhibition to the public.

Our present plan of distributing pictures permits every exhibitor to see and select the pictures desired before the contract is made therefor and until this plan has been proved a failure we will not consider withdrawing from the exhibitor this privilege which in our opinion we deem of incalculable advantage to him.

We trust that the foregoing has clearly set forth advice you desire.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) Samuel Goldwyn,
President.

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION
469 Fifth Avenue, N. Y.

July 21, 1920.

Mr. P. L. Waters, Chairman,

Distributors' Division,
National Association of the Moving Picture Industry,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:

There is only one position for either an Exhibitor or a Distributing organization to take with respect to group bookings. Realart declines such bookings on the following grounds:

(1) They would increase the cost of pictures to Exhibitors.

(2) They would inject into the business a commission merchant who is an unnecessary factor and whose purpose it is to collect toll both from Exhibitor and Distributor.

(3) They would tend to force the Exhibitor and Distributor apart and to prevent solidarity in the industry.

(4) They would check competition between Distributors and deprive the Exhibitor of detailed information which he should have with respect to the various propositions available.

(5) They would give one man, or to one small group of men, an unfair advantage over competing Exhibitors; no one else would profit anything.

(6) They would open wide the way for secret agreements and understandings with the persons controlling the booking combination, enabling them to exact or to receive tribute for unfair exercise of their influence with Exhibitors.

(7) They would allow a clique to dictate theatre policies and so reduce other Exhibitors to the status, virtually, of house managers.

(8) They would give to the booking manager, without any real investment, the control of a large group of theatres; conversely, they would result in the signing away by the Exhibitor, without any financial return, of his rights in the most important part of his own business.

They would encourage neglect in service to the Exhibitor because the booking agent would be the factor catered to and satisfied.

Canadian Conditions

feel that they are often "held up" by some of the great combines now appearing in Canada, and that the time has come for the exhibitors themselves to protect their interests by dealing exclusively with independent distributors.

"Mr. Hodgkinson is heartily in accord with the ideas and policies of the Canadian Exhibitors Exchange, Ltd. He is very glad to have such an organization distribute Hodgkinson pictures in the Dominion of Canada.

"Business conditions in general are very good, according to all reports throughout all of Canada. The city of Toronto itself is reputed to be one of the best show towns on the continent. The people have money and they patronize the picture shows.

"Import duties on films which go into Canada are very high. The distributor must pay 3 cents per foot for each positive print which he imports and in addition to these he must pay a heavy duty on advertising.

"The writer brought with him into Canada a package of advertising matter valued at $2.00, and the duty which he paid was $1.57.

"Producers should take this fact into consideration when selling pictures to distributors in Canada."

National Ass'n Directors to Meet September 8

William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has issued a call for the adjourned meeting of the board of directors to be held on Wednesday, September 8th, at 3 p. m. This is a meeting which was adjourned from the annual meeting at Cleveland.

(10) They would insure discrimination in every issue involving priority which might arise in the territory, the bookers and his friends, of course, always having the advantage.

(11) They would tend to deprive the Exhibitor of the freedom which he now has with respect to changes in service, because the booker might easily be obligated to favor the Distributor whose service the Exhibitor desired to discontinue.

(12) They would often impose upon the Exhibitor the necessity of going on his knees to the booker in order to obtain the rights which would be his without question if his contract was signed in his own name.

(13) They would make the business of a whole group of Exhibitors a side-line of the business of the booker, with probable corresponding neglect of the affairs of the individuals of the group.

(14) They would be a confession on the part of the Exhibitor of his inability to conduct his own affairs as well as someone else could conduct them.

Reduced to its elemental factors, Realart's objection to group booking is based upon the fact that it would destroy the intimate personal relationship which has been established between this concern and its customers.

We believe development of this principle is fundamentally essential to the industry—that the normal tendency is toward the strengthening of individual relationships and that any tendency to furtherance of this policy should be strongly opposed by Distributors as well as by Exhibitors. For these reasons Realart declines to sign contracts with intermediaries.

We are frank to say that we are much more impressed by the individual appeals and arguments of our customers than we possibly could be by the formal demands of a more or less disinterested third party. We trust this answers adequately your inquiry of July 20th.

Yours for freedom of trade,

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION,
(Signed) J. S. Woody,
General Manager.

Who Owns This Attractively Decorated Theatre Lobby?

Here is a beautiful theatre lobby with attractive decorations for "The Yellow Typhoon," for which we can give no credit, to our regret. The photograph from which this cut was made was received by the exploitation department of First National, but if information relative to the theatre sending it in was also forwarded, the data became lost. Will the owner or manager of the theatre whose theatre lobby is shown above please advise us, that we may give him due credit in a forthcoming issue for the display reproduced and prove how universally exhibitors read the NEWS?

Von Herberg Tells Why Many Stills Fail to Meet Requirements

West Coast Exhibitor Makes Suggestion Based on Long Experience

IN a discussion in Seattle the other day with a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative on the subject of "stills," or photographs of motion picture subjects, Manager J. von Herberg, of Jensen and Von Herberg, spoke rather clearly the viewpoint of the exhibitor on this subject, which will be of interest to the motion picture producers of the country. Jensen and Von Herberg, having constantly in operation nineteen motion picture theatres and buying a score of photoplays each week, have a wide practical working knowledge of the subject of stills.

"Stills, you might say," remarked Mr. von Herberg, "are for two uses, reproduction in newspapers and trade papers, and for lobby display. For the latter the requirements are not so particular. Nevertheless, the better the picture the better it will be even for lobby display. Stills for newspaper use have to come up to a lot of requirements. In the first place, when it is an interior scene the figures, if possible, should be silhouetted against a white or light background so that the outlines will be sharp and distinct when reproduced.

"When you pose a man or woman against a black velvet curtain and that picture is reproduced in the newspaper in a sixty-five line half-tone, the person's head and body and the curtain all merge into one.

"Second, when a man and woman are taken together, as in a love scene, the figures should be close together and not across a table or across a room. Newspapers as a rule make two-column cuts and it is impossible to make the figures of any size if they are separated.

Third, in every set of stills there should be good, clear personal pictures, either star photos or in the costume of the play, not only of the star but of the leading man or woman. Some newspapers when they run a picture of Mary Pickford or Constance Talmadge on Saturday or Sunday will be glad to run a picture of Anna Q. Nilsson or Barney Sherry or Harrison Ford or Theodore Roberts along in the middle of the week if they have them, but these pictures seldom come in a set of stills. A lot of these good actors have big followings and it will pay producers to recognize that fact.

"But the most important of all is to make the still just like a fine piece of statuary; that is, action frozen right into the photograph, the same as a piece of sculpture is action frozen into marble. It is absolutely the rule and not the exception that sets of stills from nearly all companies overlook the very best action in the picture.

Rivoli Specialty Very Pleasing

THE regular weekly combination dancing and vocal specialty at the Rivoli is perhaps the most pleasing number on the program.

Before a stage setting of unusual beauty and artistic conception, depicting a Neapolitan scene, with a lake extending up to the foreground and masked off by a dock landing, a mountain country rising on the right with typical Neapolitan buildings represented, a quartette attired in correct costumes of the locale sings Neapolitan boating songs as an opening. This is followed by the appearance of a practical gondola from off left with Edoardo Albano, baritone, as a soloist, also in correct attire. Paul Oscar and Thalia Zanou, dancers, follow in the act with Neapolitan dances.

"If there is an automobile wreck, instead of having a still camera there to take the scene while it is being enacted, the characters are brought back to pose for the stills all in a bunch after that particular scene has been shot by the motion cameras. As a result, every bit of inspired action is gone out of the picture. You and everybody else can tell a posed picture every time you see it. It hasn't one-thousandth the value of an action picture.

"A real action photograph showing some big climax or some tense dramatic scene or some highly emotional action, when reproduced in the newspaper, might be worth five hundred dollars in business to the exhibitor who prints it, and yet such pictures are almost wholly lacking in every set of stills. It seems like after a picture producer pays $50,000 for a story, and then $100,000 on acting and production, he spends but an indifferent sum on a set of stills of that picture and turns the work over to some one of limited experience. Whereas stills are absolutely the only medium of putting his picture before all the millions of readers of newspapers in America.

"It seems to me the stills are just as important as the story itself. What is the use of losing the opportunity, after making a $150,000 picture, of showing the exhibitors and film patrons, in advance, what you have?

"Three-quarters of the pictures in any set of stills are just like three-quarters of the pictures in any other set of still, using just a man or woman, or two or three characters standing around. These pictures don't express any action, tell any story, or excite any curiosity or bring any money to the box office if reproduced.

"Some day some film company is going to wake up to the importance of stills and employ an expert to make them, and give him credit for it the same as the company now gives credit to its producer and assistant producer, camera man, scenarist, and every helper on the lot, and that company is simply going to mop up with the exhibitor."

McCormick Serves Free Ice Cream

T. Bidwell McCormick, managing director of the Isis theatre, Kansas City, recently put over an exploitation stunt in connection with the showing of "The Love Expert" that carried a publicity value in several ways.

He began with newspaper stories about "The Love Expert" in which it was stated that the star, Constance Talmadge, had been obliged to live almost entirely during the filming of the picture, on ice cream. This planted, Mr. Bidwell announced that ice cream and cake would be served free each day during the run of the picture. This was largely an inducement to attend the Isis during the prevailing hot weather rather than an especial reason to see "The Love Expert," but the tie-up was an excuse for pulling the ice cream stunt and served its purpose as a business booster without calling attention to the fact that the day was warm.

Mr. Bidwell was able to get the cooperation of a Kansas City ice cream company at reduced prices in exchange for the advertising the cream manufacturer received, and the cake was supplied by a local baking company who also recognized the advertising value it would receive, and the spoons, paper plates and napkins were also gratis.

The serving was done under contract by a catering concern at a cent and a half a head. The ice cream cost two cents a dish. The ice cream and cake were passed through the audience after slides announcing the event had been run. Boys were employed to collect the empty receptacles.

One of the anticipated objections to the scheme, that the patrons would throw the plates and spoons on the floor after using them, turned out very differently than had been expected. Most of the people waited for the boys' and the Isis was not littered up at all.

The novelty of the affair created quite a sensation and the refreshment served to break up a rather hot two hours in the theatre.

There is no reason why this scheme should not be used regularly, no matter how small the town in which your theatre is located.

How Robinson Makes Scene Stills Do Double Duty

Peoria Showman Finds Method of Assuring Mercantile Co-operation

JOINTLY conceiving and executing an exploitation stunt that has worked wonders for his own box office receipts and increased the percentage of women patrons to a marked degree and offering a suggestion that holds good for exhibitors regardless of the size of the city in which they operate, Dee Robinson, manager of the Apollo theatre, Peoria, Ill., has accomplished an inexpensive stunt that looks like a good bet to the brotherhood of showmen.

The chief item of expense in applying the suggestion made by Mr. Robinson is an extra set of press stills and the cost of having a local artist frame individual stills on a piece of sign board. The other ingredient needed for the accomplishing of this stunt is to tie-up with a progressive ladies' ready-to-wear shop—a store that will be glad to have its merchandise boosted by virtue of its being related to the tastes and whims of a famous picture star.

To illustrate: Mr. Robinson finds that certain stars are looked upon by the majority of the women patrons of the Apollo as being criterions insofar as costumes are concerned. He claims that the majority of exhibitors' audiences are either made up or brought about by women. For this reason it is his contention that an ad which reaches the women is the ad that fits the theatre. Following out Mr. Robinson's line of figuring it follows that the best and cheapest way for an exhibitor to reach women is through the medium of the ladies'-ready-to-wear shops. And Mr. Robinson has discovered that the up-to-the-minute ladies' shop realizes the value of having its feminine togs hooked up with a pretty and always well-dressed picture favorite.

Mr. Robinson has made a permanent arrangement with the Lee Shop of Peoria whereby that store will provide window displays of its most attractive gowns in return for certain attractive still-signs to be provided by the Apollo. These signs are selected by the manager of the ladies' shop on account of the fact that the stills which form the major part of every sign are chosen on account of the fact that they show the star in an attractive coat, dress, shirt-waist, skirt or what-not. Some of the rather negligee stills have formed the basis for dandy window-still-signs.

Mr. Robinson adds, however, in showing stills as suggested care should be taken to select only those who are popular, and those which are appropriate for the season.

Mr. Robinson began this sort of exploitation with his booking of "The Woman Gives" a picture in which "clothes" were identified extensively and with a popular star, Norma Talmadge heading the cast.

"Sextette from Lucia" Capitol Opera Number

ONE of the most pleasing numbers on the Capitol program this week is the rendition of the "Sextette from Lucia" by a company of real artists and the staging of the number in first class style.

The singers are attired in the correct costumes, as the roles were played on the grand opera stage. The stage setting furnished by Artist Wenger is simple but artistic.

One half of the backing is black velvet relieved by fluted columns of white cloth. The other half is purple with colored floods blended upon it. The white cloth columns are also used on this side. The singers are brought into silhouette by spots. No foots or borders are used.

The artists who present the selection are: Irene Williams and Gladys Martell, alternating as "Lucy," Melanie Verbouwen as "Alice," Sudworth Frasier as "Arthur," Le Roy Duffield as "Henry" and Betram Peacock as "Bide-the-Bent."

He selected stills that struck him as being up to the minute in new styles and took them to a local artist.

The stills were set in a mount board frame about eighteen inches square and on the mount board was artistically lettered a neat suggestion about clothes, linked up with the showing of the picture at the Apollo.

The results obtained for this method of advertising were so satisfactory that Mr. Robinson uses it every time a picture suitable plays his house.

The suggestion is one which other theatres can well copy.

"I've tried a number of exploitation methods," said Mr. Robinson. "But I have never found one which gets the results for such a small expense as the one I use as a tie-up with the stores. The beauty about this sort of exploitation is the fact that you can use it with practically any picture.

"Also, there is another argument in favor of an exhibitor getting started on this sort of promotion. If you can once get the merchants of your town in a spirit of co-operation with your theatre, you've gained a big thing. When one merchant agrees to come across with a window-tie-up it isn't hard to get other merchants to do so. The time is coming when certain big pictures are going to enable the live-wire exhibitor to tie up with anywhere from five to a dozen local shops.

"The ambition of the exhibitor should be to devise, originate, beg or borrow exploitation that will put his picture on the business streets. Your theatre can not be everywhere, but your exploitation can. Any time you cultivate enough interest on the part of a dozen leading merchants to allow you to use their windows for exploitation that will have a mutual benefit, you are achieving success. It can be done. And it's up to the live wire to get out and do it."

Austin Mixes the Letters on Purpose

S. A. AUSTIN, manager of the Strand theatre, Jacksonville, managed to get the Southern city quite excited recently in spite of the summer heat which is radiating about Florida these days, by his exploitation stunts in connection with the showing of "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives."

The versatile manager of the Strand drew up two sets of circular letters—one addressed to the wives, and the other addressed to the husbands. The letter to the wives informed them in substance that a protest meeting of the spouses of Jacksonville would be held July 10th at the Strand theatre, the subjects to be discussed being: "Shall the wife share equally in the privileges of the family, or shall the husband have all authority in the matter of domestic finance?" "Is it fair for women to dress economically, and often poorly, while the husband, on the plea of business position and standing, clothes himself in the latest fashion?" "Should the wife make herself attractive to other men, or should she spurn all interest in others?" These and a few more knotty problems were outlined as the order of the meeting.

The letter to the husband was similar in form, except that the questions related to masculine affairs. "Should your wife be kept in ignorance of your business affairs—should she spend as much as her heart desires for clothes, on the plea that she wants to be attractive?" etc.

The fun began when the ingenious manager addressed the wives' letters to the husbands and vice versa. Each side wanted to know about the picture which was being specially recommended to the opposite sex. The wives suspected that a "for men only" show was going to be staged and the husbands thought that the picture was propaganda for some new "ism" that was going the rounds, so each side determined to see the show, saying nothing to his or her partner about the letter.

Things were finally straightened out at the theatre where husbands and wives met each to the other's surprise and both learned that they had been the victims of a good press agent's good joke.

New Converts to Exploitation Decorate Their Lobbies

Freeport, Pa., Has Live Wire Showman

In "The Lost City" cut to be found on the opposite page is a lesson for the small-town exhibitor who is not as yet alive to the value of exploitation and an example of what may be done at small expense by the exercise of a little ingenuity and some labor.

You see in the illustration referred to a very effective stage setting for "The Lost City," the work of Clyde D. Klieger, manager of the Refrowich theatre at Freeland, Pa. This is how the stage setting was constructed. The regular house wood wings were set up close to the theatre tormentoes. The woods drop to match was hung in one. Cut-out from "The Lost City" paper which features the animals were sent in front of the drop. The signs as shown, the most inartistic part of the display, are of course the work of a local sign painter. "The Lost City" banner came from the exchange.

The airplane is home-made and suspended from the flies.

With the mechanical part of the job done, Manager Klieger became Electrician Klieger. The Refrowich is not equipped with a very elaborate lighting system, but with the aid of tungstens and colored gelatine sheets he built some "baby spots" and blended the rays from each on his stage setting. Then, being wise in the art of stage craft, he dimmed all his regular stage lights and with his floods lighted up the setting. The result was a distinct novelty for the little town of Freeland and some mighty good advertising for the serial he was to run. The whole display didn't cost ten dollars, and it paid a hundred fold on the investment.

Shoe Tie-up Gets Results for Mitchell

A show window is usually looked upon by exhibitors as a pretty barren spot in which to attempt a successful advertising tieup, but W. Griffith Mitchell, manager of the Majestic Gardens theatre, Kalamazoo, Mich., upset the order of things and got himself a lot of extra business through this medium on a Constance Talmadge production, "In Search of a Sinner."

Mitchell heard that the leading shoe store in Kalamazoo had just received a consignment of fashionable new spring pumps for ladies and that they were to be given a full window display. Mitchell had just booked "In Search of a Sinner," so he hoofed it down to the shoe store, demanded the manager, and after a few minutes' earnest conversation had succeeded in convincing him that the new pump should be called the "Constance Talmadge pump" and that it should be played up big in the window with a large portrait of Constance in the foreground.

The shoe store manager became almost as enthused as Mitchell over the proposition and the result was a cooperative window display that sold both shoes and tickets to the Majestic Gardens.

Montreal Theatre Gives Free Picnic to Children

Following is a recital of the manner in which the Lord Nelson theatre, Montreal, went about its exploitation campaign for "The Vanishing Dagger," the serial production in which Eddie Polo is starred.

The management of the Lord Nelson theatre, who also runs the Alhambra and Napoleon theatres, Montreal, advertised that each child under the age of sixteen attending any of the first three presentations of "The Vanishing Dagger," which serial is run three days of each week, would be given a free ticket to a picnic that the management had arranged.

Over 800 children from the surrounding district turned up promptly at 8 o'clock in the morning of the 21st of July in the lobby of the Lord Nelson. Special cars had been chartered for the occasion, and on each of them was a big banner on each side, one bearing the notice that "The Vanishing Dagger" would be shown at the Lord Nelson theatre each Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and the other stated that this was the Lord Nelson theatre Picnic. On arrival at Tetreauville, a definite campaign had been carefully arranged to give the kiddies a right royal reception and a good time in general. All kinds of sports were organized and prizes given for the different events. A baseball match was arranged, one team for the Lord Nelson theatre and another team for the Napoleon theatre.

Condemns Broadway's "Signs of Insanity"

What an Arizona Showman Thinks of New York's Film Sign Epidemic

ONCE upon a time a fellow made a lot of money selling something. Maybe it was prunes or pistols or something, but he made it by advertising "Jones, he pays the Freight."

Of course Jones added the freight to his cost price, but he was honest and said he paid the freight and the boob who bought knew he was paying the freight, but Jones was getting the credit and incidentally Jones became famous overnight.

All of which leads to the Sign Insanity on Upper Broadway, New York, where "Jones" is getting a world of personal advertising while your boob exhibitor is paying the freight, and paying for it copious gobs.

If one wants to get a line on the "cost of production" he has but to take a slant at the "hog wild" sign mania that has taken possession of the "Jones" of the film business.

No matter which way one turns on upper Broadway and Seventh Avenue, he is dazzled by flashing signs that represent millions of hard exhibitor dollars, and the best that the "eighty percenter" can hope to get from this lavish light expenditure is that some stray patrons may stop while in New York and gap at the signs which

Introducing Jo. Rickards of Phoenix, Arizona

JO RICKARDS of Rickards and Nace, who own and operate four theatres and an amusement park at Phoenix, Ariz., has recently returned to his home city after spending some time in New York, where among other things he viewed the many and varied signs announcing current and forthcoming motion pictures that grace (?) our fair city.

On his return to Phoenix, Mr. Rickards sat down at his trusty Remington and pounded out for the News an epistle that epitomizes his opinion of said signs.

From the article published on this page may be gained an idea of what Rickards and Nace think of the current vogue. Editorial comment is not needed on this subject. We introduce Mr. Rickards to our readers and extend an invitation to other exhibitors to express their views on this matter of signs for which Mr. Rickards claims "Jones Pays the Freight."

There are some fifteen thousand exhibitors in the United States. We wonder how many of these exhibitors know about the signs concerning which Mr. Rickards protests. Now that they do know, how many exhibitors are interested enough to express their opinion on the subject?

for the most part attempt to exploit some embryonic star, but never fail to emblazon

the name of the "Jones" who "present."

If this money, wasted as it is, on Broadway where the vanity of the mushroom presenter is the only excuse for the expenditure, were put into production there would not be half the poor pictures the provincial has to apologize for every week on his program.

To the layman it seems a crime, that should suggest some remedy, for by the farthest stretch of imagination the "presenter" cannot hope to make even the simplest minded exhibitor believe that it serves him in any shape on Broadway.

It is a riot of extravagance that must soon lead to a cropper for the man who persists in throwing away the exhibitor's money to satisfy his own vanity. That is what it amounts to pure and simple, for the continual cry of the salesman in the rural district is "our increased cost of production" and what per cent of it goes into vanity signs on Broadway would probably startle even the "presenter" if he were to get it handed him to as a lump sum. This is an observation of one of the eighty-percenters and he would like to see an editorial in the same style that has characterized the News attacks on some of the weak spots in a strong business.

Western Exploitation Novelties Bring Great Results

Full Rigged Ship as Exploitation Medium

A glance at the cut on the left will convince anyone that the efforts of C. C. Chelley, manager of the Kinema theatre, Salt Lake City, and his publicity manager Claude Gray, to provide something new, novel and different in the way of exploitation for "Under Crimson Skies" were not wasted.

The ship on top of the marquee is a full-rigged sailing vessel, eighteen feet long, and the masts are twenty-five feet high. The vessel in itself is perfect in every detail. A wireless telegraph apparatus was used in connection with the same, which attracted considerable attention. Twenty-four miniature sailing vessels were also used with inserts in the shape of steering wheels bearing attractive catch lines.

The inside of the lobby was decorated with miniature ships and other marine articles furnished by the local United States Naval Recruiting Station. This lobby display was pronounced by Salt Lakers as being the most original that has ever been seen in Salt Lake.

During the presentation of the picture organist Henry Pyle furnished special music and electrical effects.

In spite of an outside temperature hovering around the century mark the picture did a great business for the full week's run and Manager Chelley is satisfied that no one thing contributed to this fact as much as did the exploitation.

Huck's Pockets Emptied to Fill Exhibitors' Pockets

Here is a little different angle on the usual book-store tie-up with a moving picture. The Stewart book store, leading place of its kind in Indianapolis, never loses an opportunity to tie up with a picture because Manager Bickford has found that the tie-ups are very profitable. He made an especially attractive window on "Huckleberry Finn" when it played the English theatre, Indianapolis, aided by the cooperation of Oscar A. Doob, exploitation representative at the Chicago Exchange of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Of course, the book was emphasized in the window, with stills from the picture, etc. The novel part of the display was a splendid human touch provided by an assortment of the things that would be found in Huck Finn's pockets. With a card explaining that "These are the articles in Huck's pockets" a display was made of a baseball, fishing line, jack knife, bits of string, a few nails, a pipe, a screw hook and other "important" articles in boy-life. The display attracted much more attention than would the ordinary book store window. Incidentally "Huckleberry Finn" had a big week at the English theatre.

First Run Theatres—Pages 1337-1340

Good Exploitation for "The Silver Horde"

THE manager of the Paramount theatre, Lewiston, Idaho, tried something out of the beaten path in the way of exploitation when he played "The Silver Horde," and as a result the engagement started off to big business and maintained the pace through the engagement.

Working upon the always sound idea of giving the people something cool to think about during the hot days of summer, the manager of the Paramount secured a typical Alaskan outfit, dogs and sled, guided by a man fully protected by furs against the cold of the "snowy spaces." During the hottest days of the early summer, this strange procession traversed the streets of Lewiston, much to the astonishment of the natives. Curious adults, as well as small boys, formed a procession in its wake and gathered in a crowd around the entrance to the theatre.

Without going to any great expense, the manager succeeded in giving his lobby a sufficiently northern atmosphere to carry out the idea, using snow shoes and furs as a basis for the lobby decoration. This worth-while exploitation was backed by display advertising in the local paper, before and during the showing of "The Silver Horde," which went over as one of the biggest successes ever shown in Lewiston.

Exploitation Like Any Salable Quantity

Attempt to Sell Your Wares Only to Those Who Will Listen, Says Schrader

"IS your exploitation failing to register?" T. H. Schrader, manager of the Columbia theatre at Pittsburgh, Pa., asks exhibitors. As manager of the Columbia, Mr. Schrader has labored through many seasons when exploitation seems to bring only a part of the response that it should. In prescribing remedies for failing box-office receipts he is locally regarded as a specialist.

"Exploitation is like any other salable quantity," declares Mr. Schrader. "It has an ultimate consumer. If it had none, there would be no such thing as putting over a picture by advertising. The ultimate consumer in the case of exploitation, is 'patronage.' He can get nowhere by trying to sell his wares to some one who will not listen. The ultimate consumer of exploitation, exactly like the ultimate consumer of any other commodity, can soon tire of it, if it is being administered lavishly. You can't feed a person choice tenderloin steak three times a day for two weeks without having a complaint registered. It is merely natural that the breaking point is reached somewhere. Now the question with exhibitors is: WHERE IS THE BREAKING POINT? And everyone will have to answer it for himself. In my opinion the breaking point is right where you put it. It is something that can be absolutely controlled by the exhibitor, just as he controls his sale of tickets, and his house policies. He can ward off the breaking point if he is foresighted enough to see it coming. The effects of it can be felt long before it makes its advent. The idea is to be on the lookout for it. Anticipate it. Then hand it the kayo. When you see the breaking-point coming, cancel the tenderloin and feed 'em corned beef.

"Most exhibitor ailments come about through absolutely conscientious efforts on the part of the exhibitor to put attractions over."

"My intention is to point out the reasons for lack of business in general—which, I believe, can usually be credited to either the wrong kind of exploitation, not enough exploitation, OR TOO MUCH EXPLOITATION. Of the three evils, the last is perhaps the hardest taskmaster. For it is indeed difficult to distinguish just where to put on the brakes when it comes to exploitation of big attractions. I am of the opinion—and I do not think it is extensively original with me—that most exhibitors do not exploit enough. On the other hand there are a few that exploit too much. First, because, with so great an amount of exploitation being hurled broadcast at the motion picture public all the time, it is easy to see that this public is bound to grow more or less weary. And when weariness sets in it is difficult to create any great amount of enthusiasm over any commodity, the advertising of which has caused the weariness.

"Second, a great many pictures are being over-exploited. By this I mean, that many unmeritorious, unworthy, mediocre films are being given big splashes of advertising in the vain hope that they may be broadsided past the public. This is one of the big set-backs the exhibiting field has had to contend with recently. Every exhibitor, upon booking an attraction, makes up his mind that he will put it over at all costs. You can't blame him for that. But when the picture is only mediocre and he launches an exploitation campaign worthy of an excellent special feature attraction, he usually does so to the disaster of himself and other exhibitors in his community. This practice of over-advertising a worthless commodity should be discouraged.

"When your exploitation begins to show effects of non-appeal chop down on it. This I have found to be good counsel. It has saved me many a dollar at the Columbia, and I believe it will save many other exhibitors the same if they should act upon it."

"Buried Treasure" Scheme Successful Again

A GLANCE at the middle cut on the opposite page illustrates how happy Wayland H. Taylor, Seattle exploitation man for F. P. Lasky, and Fred Walton, manager of the American theatre, made two of Bellingham, Washington's, children, when a treasure hunt was staged in Bellingham in connection with the exploitation campaign for "Treasure Island" at the American. Following is told in details of the treasure hunting stunt:

Bellingham, Wash., is a comparatively small town; ruggedly beautiful but somewhat removed from the more adventurous things of life. An event like an honest to goodness treasure hunt never made its appearance there before. Wayland Taylor capitalized upon the fact to put over "Treasure Island."

He got a five dollar order blank from a local department store, which caught the fragrant aroma of good publicity, and put it inside the buried chest. The stunt was given extensive publicity through broad, artistic advertising in the papers. It was, the notice states "106 yards from the Whatcom High School, 75 yards from the football goal posts and 70 yards from the little green fruit tree." A better location to interest youngsters could not have been selected.

In addition to the order supplied by Montague and McHugh's department store the management of the American theatre offered five dollars to the prize winner. Local windows advertised "All our treasures are not buried. Come in. They are here for you to see," and added that "Treasure Island" at the American theatre was one of them, providing a touch a little out of the ordinary in publicizing treasures that were unburied.

All the kids came in hard for the contest and the American theatre benefited. The burying ground for the treasure had been pretty accurately described and it wasn't long after before "Lizzie and Robert"—they look happy enough to be given those names—blew in to claim the additional five.

You can't beat the small town for getting on the job quickly, Mr. Taylor declared afterwards.

New Pantages House Opens Soon

Toronto's new million-dollar Pantages theatre will open on Saturday, August 28th, playing a six-act bill and feature photoplays. A large delegation of prominent New York managers and representatives will attend the opening, which will embrace one performance only. The initial bill will be held over for the following week.

With a seating capacity of 3,500, the new Pantages is the last word in theatrical construction, in comfort, elegance, convenience, equipment and beauty. N. K. Miller of New York is to be the manager.

Des Moines Theatre and Big Store Work Together

The Harris-Emery Company of Des Moines, Ia., is the Marshall Field and Macy's of the Middle West. When that firm consented to a cooperative window display for "Why Change Your Wife?" Des Moines sat up and gasped. It was the first time such a thing had been done by that exclusive and particular store.

But the window was such a beauty, it had such dignity and it attracted so much attention that it not only boosted the attendance at the theatre where the production was being shown, but aided the store to no small extent.

The fundamental idea of the display was, as is shown in the cut at the top of the opposite page, to illustrate as in the picture the difference clothes, etc., make in personal appearance.

One of the wax figures was dressed to represent Gloria Swanson as the prudish wife of the first part of "Why Change Your Wife?" and the other figure to show the change in her after she had learned her lesson in what constitutes the art of being a successful wife.

The fact that a business firm of the class of the Harris-Emery Company had lent its name and prestige to the exploitation of a picture is being considered as an indication that the last barrier has been removed to successful cooperation between the theatre and mercantile establishments in Des Moines.

Wiggins Strong for Newspaper Advertising

"As long as the newspapers are running there's no excuse for poor business."

This, from Sherman Wiggins, manager of the Princess theatre, Aurora, Mo., who supplements his assertion with the further contention that: "There are so many ways that the English language can be used to interest people that it's an exhibitor's fault when the local theatregoers aren't interested in what's doing at the picture show."

Mr. Wiggins has demonstrated his beliefs with a number of exploitation campaigns that called upon local newspapers for almost as much space as they would sell him. In his effort to make his advertising carry a meaning to the newspaper public of Aurora, he has resorted to the methods employed by popular columnists, blending local events with exploitation in a way that usually brings a smile of appreciation to the face of the reader.

For instance, in his exploitation of "Back to God's Country," Mr. Wiggins brought a new angle to bear on the "Wapi, the Killer," stunt by boosting Wapi and advising dog-owners of Aurora to watch out for the dog-catcher. Mr. Wiggins possesses the faculty of putting a good-natured punch in all his word-matter. And so far as he's concerned there's no excuse for poor business as long as the newspapers are publishing.

Smith, Small Town Showman, Believes in Exploitation

IN the southern part of Ohio there is a town named Rockford. It boasts a population of 1,050 people. Naturally no gay white ways grace or disgrace the village. Rockford is typically rural but it does possess a motion picture theatre, the Princess, managed by J. D. Smith.

Inasmuch as the town itself is small, likewise the shrine where Rockfordians worship filmdom's brightest luminaries is of meager dimensions. The Princess, when filled to capacity, holds 168 people.

One cannot judge a book by its cover, and the mere fact that the Princess theatre of Rockford boasts of a man who has shown himself to be a showman of no mean ability. Smith's efforts could well be copied by other managers in cities many times larger than Rockford, for Smith believes in and practices exploitation.

One would think that exploitation in a town of 1,050 people and only one theatre in the town, would be wasted effort by virtue of the fact that the good people of Rockford must naturally turn to Smith's theatre if they desire to appease their picture appetites. Smith is a live-wire manager and as long as he is the guiding spirit behind the Princess playhouse, Rockford folks can rest assured that they are being treated to some exploitation stunts that few towns of their size can boast.

The best thing in the way of exploitation that Smith has done recently occurred in connection with the showing of "Back to God's Country" were put to excellent use by Smith together with other stunts. A big bird dog, familiar to probably three-fourths of the inhabitants of the town, roved about the streets covered with a white blanket on which bright red letters emblazoned, "I am Wapi, the Walrus, at the Princess Tonight." Villagers were quick to gossip about Smith's idea.

To secure the needed atmosphere for the exterior and interior of his theatre during the showing of the film, Smith hit upon the plan of decorating his house with evergreen. Fine, but he reckoned without thought as to the difficulty of securing evergreen in the vicinity of Rockford. However, he had determined that it must be evergreen and so it was, but before he accomplished his purpose it required a twenty-mile drive across the county.

Twenty miles of country driving, probably in a "fliv," too, for evergreen to decorate a theatre!

That's the spirit and progressiveness behind the little Princess theatre of Rockford, Ohio, but how many managers would have gone to the trouble that Smith did?

Do the Rockford folks appreciate his efforts? You bet they do, and any time he puts forth an extra effort they realize something extraordinary is to be shown, and people from all over the countryside come into the town with the Princess as the magnet.

"Dog Day" at San Antonio Pulls Like a Plaster

Full Details Concerning a Stunt Matinee That Proved an Exploitation Hit

THE Majestic theatre of San Antonio, Texas, was going to play "Down on the Farm" and wanted to do something out of the ordinary in the way of exploitation so a letter was dispatched to Charlie Mayer, United Artists exploitation manager, asking for advice.

Mr. Moyer gave the communication personal attention and came through with something that appealed to the Majestic management.

The plan mapped out by Mr. Moyer was followed to the letter. The result is fully explained in the following account of the stunt as told by Mary Carter of the San Antonio Evening News, one of the papers which devoted columns of space to the idea.

Every dog has his day—and this is it.

Anyway, that's the way the youngsters who thronged the Majestic theatre this morning felt about it.

They were there by the dozens, scores, and finally hundreds before the appointed hour—11 o'clock—the time when each child accompanied by a dog would be given a complimentary ticket to the master production "Down on the Farm" at the Majestic theatre tonight.

They were honest-to-goodness youngsters who loved dogs. The dogs were honest-to-goodness dogs of every kind—from the pedigreed to the cur—they were dogs and somebody loved them.

Fashionable folk in limousines told James or Williams to pause a minute in front of the Majestic, which looked as if every circuit in the country was holding forth by the number of kids who were overflowing into the street, holding up traffic and filling the air with lusty sounds of childish glee and approval. But nobody cared in the least. There was not a single grown-up that passed within hearing distance of this pandemonium of wholesome youth—which is synonymous with dogs—that did not smile and quicken his step. Who does not love children—and dogs?

There was one group of four youngsters from the same family, each child holding (proudly) to the rope that held his dog. One of the children had an Airedale, another a bulldog, another a Spitz and the fourth child said he had just a "plain dog." When questioned about how on earth their mother stood for so many dogs, the youngsters replied: "Pshaw, mother's a good fellow, and likes dogs and we didn't bring all we got." Then it developed that one of the dogs, the Spitz, had a little family who were too small to be brought out into the summer heat.

About that time, the fight started. A huge bulldog and an immense collie had been firing glances back and forth that were far from friendly. The owner of the bulldog, said, "Hey, Colby, cut that out—quit wallin' your eyes—you know that the last fight you had you killed that dog, an' I don't want to be disgraced by a murder this morning."

The owner of the collie dog, gave him a tug and admonished him for his lack of manners on such an auspicious occasion.

And then the real fight started. The little fox terrier who was being snarled at by the black cur, started a riot of barking and growling that caused the little Pomeranian to wonder what it is all about.

The bulldog gave a gigantic plunge at things in general and a growl that made the fox terrier and the black cur sit up and take notice. But the collie was right there with an answer to Mister Bulldog—by going him one better in a growl and a bark.

"Hold your bulldog!" shouted the owner of the collie. "My dog's a bad dog. He's cleaned up in more fights than I can tell you—he's naturally mean in hot weather anyhow, and he's not used to so many strange dogs."

"Looky here, at my dog," called out a voice, "he's never been anywhere before in his life an' look how good he's be-havin'."

The dog was one of the brindle variety that one always associates with the "stray dog type." He was lying on the side-walk as contented as if he had been accustomed to "dog days" and all kinds of theatrical stunts.

"Ain't it nearly time to go?" shouted voices in chorus.

"Where?" came the quick reply from across the street, where the overflow had gathered to allow anxious motorists to be on their way.

"Why, paradin', you big boobs! Didn't you know we was all goin' to parade up Houston street with a band, before we got our tickets, so we can show off our dogs?"

The sound of the band silenced the controversy. Like mad, wild, glorious childhood, they scampered into line, with high hearts, "ready to go."

Two mounted police led the procession of happy youngsters. Then the band came next playing just the right tunes to fit in with the occasion—a good time, your dog with you, and a show later.

Bringing up the rear was the faithful "moo-cow and calf," famous in child lore.

Banners, carried high by the youngsters and bearing messages which said: "We're goin' to see 'Down on the Farm' tonight at the Majestic. Are you?"

floated in the jovial breeze.

People, sordid and oldish, stopped perfectly still as this line of march, 200 strong, transported them to childhood days when the dogs in the old home were almost forgotten.

"Don't this take you back, John?" asked one old man of another, as he adjusted his glasses so he wouldn't miss a single thing. "Remember the circus and the yellow dog of Bill Simpson's?"

"Hey, hold that banner so everybody can see who we are," shot through the air.

When they filed back as proudly as warriors, to the Majestic, where the "tickets to show" awaited them, they were jubilant to the point of ecstasy. When they left the theatre the look in their eyes as they gave gentle tugs at the ropes holding their dogs, would have convinced any jury that the morning was a success and that the show tonight was going to be right in the same class.

Heralds Get Best Results for Carroll

Heralds are the most successful form of advertising, for the summer months, says Cliff A. Carroll, manager of the Carroll theatre, Rome, N. Y. Some of the advantages, he states, arise through the fact that on account of the heat in many cases, people are inclined to not care to walk about as little as possible. Moreover, the heat dries up the paste on the billboard posters, which soon wrinkle. During the showing of Constance Talmadge's production "The Virtuous Vamp" Mr. Carroll says he found that the sight of pictures on smooth paper and the lack of weight would be attractive. So three days before the showing he had 4,000 mailed out to his patrons. As a result the three days showing at the Carroll theatre was satisfactory.

Jacobson Gets Results with Window Displays

Joseph J. Jacobson, manager of the Strand theatre, Marshalltown, Iowa, in playing "Sick Abed" recently obtained great exploitation results through co-operative window displays with drug stores.

The store windows were filled with surgical supplies, bandages, absorbant cotton, etc., and stills and signs announcing the engagement of "Sick Abed" at the Strand.

The signs used gave personal endorsement to the feature and recommended the sick room supplies of the drug stores who cooperated with the Strand.

Fox Showings Continue at Palace Theatre

The decision of William Fox to give a trade showing at the Palace theatre of each big special production that Fox Film Corporation will release during the coming season is an expression of confidence in the worth of the pictures shown under the Fox auspices. Through the courtesy of E. F. Albee, the Palace theatre has been put at the disposal of Mr. Fox on Tuesday mornings for these trade showings. The first, three weeks ago, was "If I Were King," with Farnum. The next was Pearl White in "The White Moll." "White New York Steps" was shown on the 27th.

Original Locations in "The Foreigner"

Realism, it is announced, will be the keynote of "The Foreigner," the first of the Ralph Connor productions to be made under the supervision of Henry MacRae. The entire feature will be shot upon the original locations used by the author in the writing of his story. Henry MacRae, the director, will utilize the old Galician Village in Northern Winnipeg and follow the track of the old Edmonton Trail in getting authentic realism in connection with "The Foreigner."

The company will leave on the 18th inst., arriving in Winnipeg in time to commence shooting scenes by July 25th.

Fox Serial Made With Help of Navy

"Bride 13" is a William Fox serial picture in fifteen episodes, made possible through the co-operation of the United States Navy, but is not a war picture; neither is it a propaganda picture. The story revolves about the machinations of a band of Tripolitan pirates that captures a submarine and cruises about the coast of the United States kidnapping wealthy brides and holding them for ransom.

The story was written by E. Lloyd Sheldon and the scenario by Edward Sedgwick. An all-star cast, headed by John O'Brien and Marguerite Clayton, was directed by Richard Stanton, who staged the famous William Fox feature picture, "Checkers."

Winnipeg Greet First Picture Company

Mayor Charles Gray, Premier Norris, and President Carter of the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce, welcomed the first motion picture company into Winnipeg on July 20th. The company is to make Ralph Comors' "The Foreigner" for First National. The company was headed by Wilton Lackaye, Nan Sutherland, Caston Glass, Gladys Coburn, Robert Haines, William Colvin, and twenty-two others.

In the evening they were entertained at dinner by the City Council and the following day started on location.

Two More Additions to Cast of Ibanez Film

Rex Ingram, selected by Metro to direct the forthcoming screen production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" from the sensational novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, this week announced the addition of two players for the all-star cast. They are Rudolph Valentino who will play the leading juvenile role, that of Julio Desnoyers, and Pomeroy Cannon, who is to enact the impressive character of Madariaga, "the Centaur," who looms so large a figure in the Ibanez master work. Alice Terry, as has already been announced, will also appear in this cast.

Live News From The Producers

Uncle Sam to Aid in Drive Community Motion-Picture Bureau to Take Part in "Paramount Week"

ACCORDING to information received from the Chicago exchange of Famous Players-Lasky, National Paramount Week, Sept. 5-11, has been given official recognition by the United States Government. In fact, Uncle Sam will celebrate Paramount Week just like other wide-awake showmen, says Famous Players-Lasky.

C. E. Seibert, director of the central division, community motion picture bureau, with headquarters in Chicago, having supervision over government camp theatres throughout the Middle West, has completed arrangements with District Manager Harris P. Wolfberg and Salesmanager Steve Montgomery of the Chicago office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, to have every government theatre under his jurisdiction observe Paramount Week. About 60 camp theatres are included in Director Seibert's territory, from Denver to Cleveland to Atlanta.

Going further in his recognition of the value of Paramount's third annual national "drive for better pictures," the government authorities also have arranged to celebrate Paramount Week at all the theatres of the big Great Lakes Naval Training Station, near Chicago, it is stated.

Arrangements are now afoot whereby the government will make its Paramount Week nationwide, the national headquarters having taken up the matter of including every camp theatre in the country in the movement.

G. T. Adams, supervisor, inspector and broker of the Community Motion Picture Bureau's theatres in the Middle West, is making big plans for "jazzing" Paramount Week. He has doubled all his accessory orders for the week, planning big advertising campaigns within the camps. In co-operation with the exploitation department of the Chicago Paramount office, Mr. Adams is preparing to "pull" a lot of exploitation stunts to help him put over Paramount Week with a "bang."

Melodrama on Broadway

"Under Crimson Skies" is Given Week's Run at the Astor Theatre

"UNDER CRIMSON SKIES," the Universal-Jewel production, starring Elmo Lincoln, the strong man of many Universal serials, was presented to Broadway last week in the Astor Theatre, and conclusively proved that Broadway has not lost its taste for spirited melodrama and strong-arm heroes, says Universal Film.

In "Under Crimson Skies" Lincoln plays the role of a sea-captain, who does not hesitate to rule his ship with a powerful fist. The picture contains striking scenes of a storm at sea, followed by a lively mutiny.

From these thrills the characters are transplanted into the stirring incidents of a Central American revolution and in which Elmo again is called upon to demonstrate the prowess of his good right arm.

"Under Crimson Skies" contains one of the most realistic fistic battles ever waged for the screen. Lincoln and Noble Johnson, also a giant in stature, "slug" each other for many feet of film.

The picture was adapted from the story "The Beach Comber," by J. G. Hawkes, whose stories of gun-running and sea-life rival Jack London and the immortal Richard Harding Davis.

For the week of the showing at the Astor Theatre, attention was attracted from all parts of upper Times Square, by colorful transom panels of life size oil painting of the aere. These and elaborate door panels of life size oil painting of the various characters combined to make an unusual and attractive "front" for the Broadway house.

New Titling Methods in Sunshine Comedy

In keeping with the general novelty of the whole production of "Skirts" the Sunshine Comedy special in six acts presented by William Fox and written and directed by Hampton Del Ruth, supervisor of all Fox Sunshine Comedies, the sub-title effects are one of its outstanding features.

Designed and executed by Ralph Spence, well known for his unusual title work, they come under the general description of "animated titles" and are said to convey the thought desired far more effectively than under the old method. The titles are flashed upon the screen by the "build-up" method, that is each word is built up letter by letter in a fantastic, humorous way designed to carry out the spirit of the whole production.

"Long Distance Hero" Guy Empey's Next

Just preceding his departure for the South to select locations for forthcoming releases of Guy Empey Productions, Arthur Guy Empey, its president, announced the second of the series of comedy-dramas to be released under the banner of the organization will be "A Long Distance Hero," by Templar Saxc.

Miss Florence Martin, who played opposite Mr. Empey in "The Undercurrent" and "Oil" will have the feminine lead in "A Long Distance Hero" and Mr. Saxc himself will have the chief character part.

Morosco to Start on "The Humming Bird"

Announcement is made this week that the Oliver Morosco Productions will first film the Maud Fulton subject, "The Humming Bird," which is having its initial production at the Little Theatre, Los Angeles, with Henry Walthall, Miss Fulton and Harlan Tucker in the principal roles. Following this it is the intention of the company to film "Linger Longer Letty," with Charlotte Greenwood, and later to put in production "The Clam Digger," which started an indefinite run at Morosco's theatre, Los Angeles, this week.

Al Tuchman, appointed purchasing agent of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

New Method of Presentation

THE usual methods of presenting a new motion picture have been discarded by Goldwyn in the case of "Earthbound," the Basil King film which has been a year in the making, in favor of a new method, said to be warranted by the unusualness and importance of the photoplay. Goldwyn has leased a New York and a Chicago legitimate theatre where the picture will open simultaneously on Wednesday, August 11, for indefinite runs.

The decision to open in legitimate theatres in the two cities was based upon the belief that "Earthbound" is big enough to compete with the best the legitimate theatre can offer. Being unique in its dramatic story, the strength of its underlying idea and in its methods of production, it will be given an unusual presentation.

The theatres obtained for the first public showings of "Earthbound" are the Astor in New York, where "East Is West" ran for two years, and the Playhouse, Chicago's artistic Michigan avenue theatre, which housed the successful "Greenwich Village Follies." "Earthbound" will run as long as the average spoken play, making it a full evening's entertainment, and it will be presented with just as much care.

Motion picture technique at its highest point of development has gone into the making of "Earthbound." Trick photography for its own sake has not been used. Double exposure was employed as a legitimate compelling means of recording happenings on both the earth and the spirit planes in the story. Every device of motion picture photography which could aid in getting the story across more effectively has been employed—all others discarded. Its great message to humanity, its dramatic, emotional story and appeal to the heart miss not a single point because story and motion picture technique are so harmoniously blended.

Basil King, author of the story and one of the country's foremost novelists, T. Hayes Hunter, the director, and Edfrid Bingham, the continuity writer, worked together for an entire year adapting the material to the highest possibilities of screen expression. Nothing was neglected or overlooked to make the story a piece of art.

Little has been said about the making of this picture because the producers believing that it represents the most ambitious step forward ever attempted in photoplay production, wanted the picture to speak for itself. In order that it may be presented to the public in such a manner as to convey every idea and every entertainment value adequately to the public, Goldwyn has arranged with S. L. Rothapfel, presentation manager of the Capitol Theatre, to make the presentation of "Earthbound."

Metro Buys Control of Its Boston Exchange

Metro Pictures Corporation this week acquired by purchase the sole control of its Boston exchange, according to an announcement of W. E. Atkinson, Metro general manager. The franchise and goodwill were bought outright from the American Feature Film Company. As a result of the transaction Metro assumes entire ownership of one of the most important of its branch offices throughout the United States, Boston being especially valuable as the distribution center for New England, with its numerous population.

E. A. Golden, familiarly known by his host of friends as "Doc" Golden, will remain in charge of the Boston center for Metro.

Seitz in Gibraltar; to Issue Serial Aug. 15

George Seitz in a cablegram just received announces the safe arrival of his company in Gibraltar on July 19th. The action for the next feature, co-starring Mr. Seitz and June Caprice, will be filmed in Spain. Some scenes have already been taken in the historic island of Ponta Delgada in the Azores.

Pathe announces that August 15th has been set as the date of release for the first episode of Seitz's latest serial, "Pirate Gold," which co-stars Mr. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot.

"Pathe Messenger" Is Well Commended

As one of the many aids published by Pathe in the interest of the exhibitor, the distributing organization inaugurated the "Pathe Messenger." This exploitation organ, which is forwarded free to every exhibitor in the United States, has just completed the sixth month of its publication, edited by J. Irving Greene, of the Exploitation Department, and has met with the fullest success from its inception. Hundreds of letters of commendation have been received by the publication from exhibitor readers, states Pathe.

Anita Stewart Comes East for a Rest

Anita Stewart has left Los Angeles Saturday for the East, where she plans spending two months at her summer home in Bayshore, Long Island. Her stay at the Coast, dating from last October, has been an extremely strenuous one, and the little star certainly deserves the rest she contemplates. While in the East Miss Stewart will spend some little time in the selection of suitable vehicles for the coming year.

Pathe Making Propaganda Picture

Franklin F. Lane, lately Secretary of the Interior, now one of the guiding lights of the Americanism Committee of the Motion Picture Industry of the United States, was in New York last week to discuss with officials of Pathe Exchange, Inc., details of a propaganda film this organization is now preparing.

For several months, Pathe has been gathering material for a picture it will contribute to the work of the Americanism Committee. Much of this material was assembled in France and abroad, and is now being made into a story.

Naval Officers See Fox Serial, "Bride 13"

Many officers of the United States Navy and others prominent in the public life of the Nation, State and city attended a screening of "Bride 13," William Fox's first serial, at the Palace theatre, New York, on August 3. It was peculiarly fitting that among the large audience present there was a large representation of Navy men because the serial was made with the co-operation of the Navy, an entire fleet of warships and aircraft having contributed to the action of the picture.

Former members of the Army and Navy—all employees of Fox Film Corporation and members of the S. Rankin Drew Post of the American Legion—were at the theatre to meet the officers.

Houdini Returns From European Tour

Houdini has returned from a six months' tour of Scotland, England and France, during which, he reports, he had the most successful time of his stage career. He declared upon his arrival in New York that it is his intention to remain in the movies. He brings back with him twenty-thousand feet of exterior "shots" taken at various places in the three countries he visited. Some of this footage, it is said, shows scenes of considerable action. The camera was concealed in most instances, and at several places during the filming of the action, the police, not aware of the purpose of the wizard's antics, took an active hand in the scenes that were being "shot."

Charles E. Russell to Write for Screen

Charles Edward Russell, famous sociologist, economist and journalist, visited Los Angeles recently to confer with Benjamin B. Hampton, the picture producer, on making photoplays. Mr. Russell is the author of a large number of books on social and economic subjects, and has recently been in the public eye as a member of the Industrial Relations Commission with ex-President C. W. Elliott of Harvard University. Mr. Russell, it is stated, will write directly for the screen.

"Dinty" Finished in 'Frisco

Neilan Completes His Picture Starring Wesley Barry

THE aeroplane played an important part in the activities of the Marshall Neilan company last week. After finishing the exterior scenes for "Dinty," the new Neilan picture starring Wesley Barry, Mr. Neilan flew from San Francisco to Los Angeles to attend an important meeting of the Associated Producers. The flight was made in a little less than four hours.

Earl Cooper, western auto racer and air man, acted as pilot to Mr. Neilan on this trip with Dan Davison, well known flyer, as his assistant. The journey was made in a new Curtiss plane from the Durant field outside of Frisco to the Chaplin field in Hollywood. Soon after Mr. Neilan left for Hollywood in the Curtiss plane, Wesley Barry, Marjorie Daw and Agnes Ayres, three Neilan stars who had been working in Frisco the past week, boarded another aeroplane and flew from San Francisco to Oakland to take part in the First National Day activities there. On the field they were welcomed by Major John L. Davie of Oakland, and Eugene Perry, manager of the Turner & Dahknen theatre there.

In San Francisco, during the production of a number of scenes for "Dinty," which in order of release follows "Go and Get It,"

Wesley Barry, the freckle-faced star, stopped traffic in the centre of the town in front of the St. Francis hotel when he appeared in the part of a Frisco newsboy. Attired in ragged clothes, Wesley began selling evening papers while the cameras clicked in the hands of Charles Rosher and David Kesson, photographers for Mr. Neilan.

Among the notable persons who purchased papers from Wesley as they entered the St. Francis hotel were Martin Green, Hugh Wiley, famous writers, Jimmy Cruze, motion picture director, Thomas Geraghty, scenario writer, Earl Cooper, prominent auto racer and flyer, George Klein, the Chinese importer, G. E. Benedict, secretary to the Mayor of San Francisco, Sam Edwards, manager of the local First National Exhibitors Circuit Exchange, and Curran Swint, dramatic editor of the San Francisco Call.

Thousands of persons in this section of the city blocked traffic and crowded around the St. Francis to watch the freckle-faced youngster tackle everyone that entered the hotel. The highest price for a paper from Wesley was paid by Earl Cooper, who handed over $100 for a copy of the Evening Call.

Another event for San Francisco sponsored by the Neilan organization was the filming of the estate of A. B. Spreckles, multi-millionaire and considered the richest man in the Northwest. This beautiful home was used as a background for "Dinty" with special permission from Mr. Spreckles. The taking of these views marks the first time that this residence has ever been filmed, with its priceless statuary and artistic gardens, famous throughout this part of the country. Situated on the highest point in the city, it overlooks the metropolis and the bay, offering one of the most beautiful locations of its kind ever screened.

Written by Mr. Neilan himself and scenarioized by Marion Fairfax, "Dinty" offers still another type of story for First National release from the Neilan studios. A plot of deep heart interest with many highlights of comedy brought out effectively by the star, Wesley Barry, is promised. Others in the cast are Marjorie Daw, Colleen Moore, Pat O'Malley, J. Barney Sherry and Newton Hall.

Islington Plant in Operation

Famous Players' London Studio Is Said to Be Best in Britain

THE complete details of the construction of the new Islington studio now being operated by the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., are set forth in a statement just issued from the New York headquarters of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The statement follows:

"Those who know the London of war days remember the old abandoned power station in Poole Street, onetime the home of the Metropolitan Electric Supply Company, Ltd. It was nothing much more than four towering bare walls then. Today these walls house the most complete and perfectly equipped producing studios in the British Empire.

"The building, which measures some 200 feet by 150 feet, has been transformed in a few months under the direction of Milton E. Hoffman, the general manager, who is soon to return to this country.

"Major Charles H. Bell, O. B. E., who served as assistant manager, is now at Hollywood studying the methods at the Lasky Studio; and after an inspection of the Famous Players studio at Long Island City, he will return to Islington to relieve Mr. Hoffman.

"On the ground floor is the No. 1 studio, measuring about 102 feet in length and 65 feet in width. It contains a large water tank, 50 feet long by 17 broad and 12 feet deep, which offers exceptional opportunity for water acts. It is fitted with a sliding cover, and has windows let in to the ends of the tank, for the taking of under-water scenes.

"Alongside this studio is a lofty scene-dock, from which scenes can be dispatched as painted, either direct to No. 1 studio or by elevator to No. 2 studio on the floor above. This second is a well-lit room so large that six scene acts can be accommodated at a time.

"At the top of one end of this studio is a boxed-in gallery with overlooking windows, accommodating the art directors' room, and on the same floor and above are some 30 dressing rooms, all comfortably furnished. They are heated with hot water and electricity. The rooms of the wardrobe mistress are within easy access of the dressing rooms.

"Below the No. 2 studio on the ground floor is a large carpenter shop, complete with the best and most up-to-date wood-working machinery. These bandaws, planning and moulding machines, mechanical morticing are all electrically driven. All the finished woodwork in this great building emanates from this highly efficient quarter, including the mahogany and walnut paneling of some of the suite of offices in the building. In the basement are a projection theatre, dark rooms and paint rooms.

"In the rear is a garage for some half dozen motors, and accommodation for the unloading of all incoming goods, furniture, properties, and so forth.

"Above the garage a large restaurant is being added, accommodating sixty persons. Meals as good as can be had in the West End will be served at cost.

"A special cable a mile and a half long brings electric current from the Shoreditch Power Station. The current is received at 60 volts and transformed down through two K. V. A. static transformers to 220 volts which feed four motor generators, and is then capable of giving 800 amperes at 125 volts.

"The lighting equipment comprises 24 Kleiglights, 24 spotlights, 6 Meyer-Wohl double arcs, 12 low bank Cooper-Hewitts and 12 low bank Cooper-Hewitt Mercury vapor lamps. In addition there is one Sunlight Arc with a capacity of 3,000,000 candle power. For night locations a dynamo is mounted on a lorry, and provides an output of 800 amperes at 120 volts and from this can be used the Sunlight Arc, 6 spot lights and 4 Kleiglights."

"Humoresque" Breaking House Records

All records for attendance at the Criterion theatre, where "Humoresque," Cosmopolitan Productions photoplay of mother love is now in its tenth week, were shattered for the week ending Saturday, July 31st, the ninth of "Humoresque's" indefinite engagement at the Criterion.

During the week 16,165 persons paid to see "Humoresque" at the Criterion. The best previous record was for the second week of "Humoresque's" engagement ending on June 12th when 15,934 persons paid to enter the theatre. These figures are all the more remarkable when it is taken into consideration that the last three days of last week were excessively hot, and that the total seating capacity of the Criterion theatre is 650.

Maigne Is Signed For Paramount Specials

As a result of the success of his recent pictures, Charles Maigne has signed a long-term contract with the famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a producer of special productions, it was announced this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production. Mr. Maigne's new pictures will be known as "Charles Maigne Productions."

In addition to staging "The Copperhead" and "The Fighting Chance," Mr. Maigne also directed Irene Castle in "The Firing Line" and "The Invisible Bond," and has made big special productions for Select and other motion picture companies. He is now engaged in making "The Frontier of the Stars," starring Thomas Meighan.

Big Building Movement in Pittsburgh Zone

Increasing business in the Pittsburgh territory has led exhibitors there to inaugurate one of the biggest building movements in theatre-history in the section, according to Frank C. Bonistall, manager of the Pathe Exchange, in Pittsburgh. Mr. Bonistall has just spent a week in New York, discussing Pathe affairs with Director of Exchanges Elmer R. Pearson, and others of the home-office officials.

"There are not only new theatres building," Mr. Bonistall reports, "but hundreds of exhibitors are increasing the seating capacity of their houses. They are adding bleachers and balconies, and in many instances more than doubling their seating capacities."

Clarence Burton Signed for DeMille Picture

Another veteran actor has been added to the rapidly growing cast of Cecil B. DeMille's forthcoming Caramount special production in the person of Clarence Burton, who has just signed a contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear under the direction of the famous producer.

Burton will appear in the next Cecil B. DeMille production from the original story of Jeanie Macpherson. Production work scheduled to start at the Lasky studio in the near future. No title has been selected as yet for this special.

"The Best Ray Has Ever Done," Says Lesser

Sol Lesser was invited the other day to attend a private showing of Charles Ray's new starring vehicle, "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway." Following is a telegram sent by Mr. Lesser to Arthur S. Kane after the showing:

"I consider this the finest thing that Charles Ray has ever done. It is clean, wholesome and wonderful entertainment. All First National franchise-holders I am sure will welcome this production, and it should make a lot of money and friends for every exhibitor who is fortunate enough to show this picture. Congratulations."

Zane Grey Novel Ready Hewlings Mumper to Arrange Release of Hampton's "U. P. Trail"

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON'S special, "The U. P. Trail," from the novel of Zane Grey, will be taken to New York this week by Hewlings Mumper, Mr. Hampton's partner, who will in person arrange for its national release. When the novel was published a few years ago, it established itself in the minds of the picture producers as "the ideal motion picture," and Mr. Grey is said to have received offers as high as $75,000 for the film rights.

Mr. Grey entrusted the production to Ben Hampton, who had made "Desert Gold" and "Riders of the Dawn" into photoplays that won the author's heart. More than a year of careful work was devoted to making the picture, with a notable all-star cast. When shown at a preview in Los Angeles "The U. P. Trail" was acclaimed by an audience of professionals, writers and critics to be one of the most powerful special pictures ever made.

Kathlyn Williams, the beautiful emotional actress, created "Beauty Stanton"; Joseph J. Dowling plays "Place Hough"; Roy Stewart gives a powerful portrayal of "Warren Neale"; dainty pretty Marguerite De La Motte is "Allie Lee"; Robert McKim, noted screen villain, plays the handsome "Durade," and Frederick Starr is the coarse, brutal "Fresno." "Mrs. Durade" is done exquisitely by Mabel Van Buren, former Lasky star. Charles B. Murphy plays "Larry Red King" and the famous Irishman, "Casey" is splendidly done by Walter Perry. George Berrell gives a fine portrayal of "Slingerland," and beautiful Virginia Caldwell does the best work of her career as "Ruby."

The scenario of "The U. P. Trail" was written by Mr. Hampton and the chief of his editorial staff, William Henry Clifford. The direction was by Jack Conway, who places himself in the front rank of great directors by his work in this picture.

Zane Grey, who saw the picture at a private showing, wrote that it satisfied him absolutely and was technically perfect.

"Up in Mary's Attic" Opens "Philly"

"Up in Mary's Attic" the comedy-drama being distributed through state right exchanges by Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., opens in Philadelphia, Pa., Monday in the Metropolitan Opera House. Preceding the opening at the Metropolitan a number of unique exploitation stunts were arranged for, including cooperative advertising with the United States Navy Recruiting Service. In return for a slide on the screen in the theatre the Navy offered the use of a naval aeroplane for exploitation purposes.

Guy Empey Inspecting Southern Locations

Arthur Guy Empey, president of Guy Empey Productions, departed on August 1 for the South to choose locations for forthcoming productions under the banner of the organization he heads. Mr. Empey's departure at this time indicates immediate activity in the production of pictures to fill the series of which "Oil" was the first.

Motion Picture Aiding Internationalism

Internationalism of the motion-picture is an event of the moment, according to Edward Small. Mr. Small maintains that in the very near future photoplayers, directors, cameramen and managers will be going back and forth between this country and the other side with the same ease with which they now travel between California and New York. The result of this would inevitably be a greater realism in the production of picture plays, a larger opportunity for choice in selecting the right types, and greater facility in obtaining that co-operation between producers, authors and actors which will make far better pictures.

Add to these artistic benefits the even more significant commercial results bound to ensue, and there has been effected through the agency of the motion-picture a kind of internationalism which is far more practical than any League of Nations. America and Europe would be by this procedure brought into a closer understanding and accord than by any method or scheme proposed by the most sanguine theorist.

Noah Berry Engaged for Doraldina's Cast

Noah Berry, well-known for his convincing characterizations, has signed a contract to appear in Doraldina's first Metro picture, "The Passion Fruit," which is about to be put into production at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, California.

The work of casting, seeking locations for Hawaiian scenes and the erection of the picturesque interiors to be used in the initial Doraldina production is being rushed at Metro's Hollywood studios. It is probable that the company will go to the Hawaiian Islands for several of the big scenes that can be filmed more readily there than could be done if reproduced in Southern California.

Harry Carey Introduces New "Find" to Screen

Universal announces that "Sundown Slim," Harry Carey's current production, will introduce a new young actress to the screen who is expected to develop into a player of unusual ability. She is said to be of a family already prominent on the legitimate stage and to show remarkable aptitude for acting before the camera. The identity of Carey's new "find" is being kept a secret for the present. She will take the part of Anita, the little ranch-girl, in "Sundown Slim."

Victor Kremer Books for Busy Season

Indications of unusual activities at the Victor Kremer, Inc., office in the near future are contained in the reports emanating from that source. "Voices," Chester De Vonde's great six-reel production, will be simultaneously released in New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Washington, Detroit and Cleveland by the end of this month.

The first of the monthly five-reel Western releases are now ready and have arrived in New York where they will be cut and titled, and the release date should not be later than the first of October. The new Kremer Klever Komedies are expected to be ready for release on or about the first of October also.

"The Devil's Passkey" at Capitol Aug. 8

The first public showing of "The Devil's Passkey," the second big Universal-Jewel picture produced by Erich Von Stroheim, will be held simultaneously in the Capitol Theatre, New York, and the La Salle Theatre, Chicago, beginning Sunday, August 8. This much heralded film of Parisian love and intrigue will occupy the screen of the Capitol for a week. It has been booked for an indefinite run in the Chicago playhouse.

Cazeneuve Working on Special Production

Paul Cazeneuve, who recently finished work on "Her Honor, The Mayor," is working on an original story which will be the basis for an elaborate special production to be made under his direction.

Harry L. Keepers with Empey

HARRY L. KEEPERS has been appointed manager of negative production for Guy Empey Productions, according to an announcement by Arthur Guy Empey made just prior to his departure for Louisiana to select a number of locations for use in the filming of the second of the series of comedy-dramas being produced under his direction.

Mr. Keepers, who has just returned from an eight months' tour of India, China and Japan, is one of the best known cinematographers in the industry, and his addition to the staff of Empey officials is considered an event of considerable interest.

In the course of his tour of the Orient he filmed a series of educational, scenic and industrial pictures which covered more than 50,000 feet of raw stock, all of which he developed as it was taken and shipped back to the United States as opportunity presented. Included in the pictures are many scenes and events never before recorded, it is claimed, in motion pictures.

In India he was fortunate enough to persuade a Rajah of one of the political divisions to allow him to photograph the beauties of his harem and included in the views he obtained were a number showing the intricacies of the native dances as performed for the Rajah by his favorite wives. Another unusual set of picture shows were filmed inside the walls of the "Forbidden City" of China, a spot visited by few white men under any circumstances and upon which he turned for the first time the lens of a camera of any kind.

Mr. Keepers dates his motion picture experience back to the first rehearsed motion picture ever made, to the best of his knowledge. Twenty-two years ago he watched from the window of the office he occupied as secretary to Thomas A. Edison, the taking of fifty feet of film depicting a kiss and performed by a vaudeville team. Later he watched it run off in a dark box which was the sole means of projection in those days. The novelty and ingenuity of the thing fascinated him and he asked to be transferred to the laboratory, where he watched and aided in the development of every one of the first steps in the progress of motion picture making. From the laboratory he began experimenting with cameras and soon was away from the Edison establishment and responsible for the photography of hundreds of pictures.

In 1913 he was selected to accompany Clara Kimball Young, Maurice Costello and their company on their famous trip around the world, making three-reel productions, then considered of proper length for profitable exhibition. On this trip, too, he developed his film as he finished exposing it, thus making possible retakes when necessary without the necessity of keeping the company on or near location while it was sent to strange laboratories and returned.

"A Long Distance Hero," by Templar Sax, will be the first of the Guy Empey productions made with Mr. Keepers in charge of the camera and laboratory work.

Goldwyn Has Four Big Dramas

Company Executives Expect Results from Pictures

FOUR new dramatic photoplays which Samuel Goldwyn and his advisory staff believe will equal, and in many respects surpass, the highest achievement in screen drama yet reached by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation are ready for distribution. It is asserted that the four screen dramas will successfully withstand the keenest criticism as regards acting, story, producing and directing. It is predicted that new standards of dramatic production will be established by them.

The four pictures in question are "Madame X," in which Pauline Frederick is starred; "The Penalty" from Gouverneur Morris' novel, featuring Lon Chaney of "Miracle Man" fame; Katherine Newlin Burt's western novel, "The Branding Iron," with an all-star cast, and a picturization of Rex Beach's novel, "The North Wind's Malice," also with an all-star cast.

Each picture received the highest reach of writing, production, directing and acting that the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation could bestow upon it. The directors were selected for their especial fitness to have charge of the individual picture—the selection being based upon their past performances. In each case the Goldwyn advisory staff feels that the director has made good and more than made good—has advanced his own reputation as a director and beaten out new paths in the development of the motion picture as an art.

Frank Lloyd was selected to direct the screen version of Alexandre Bisson's "Madame X," the French emotional drama which scored the biggest dramatic success of the new century, because of his success with previous Goldwyn dramatic productions, notably "The World and Its Woman," starring Geraldine Farrar, and Rex Beach's throbbing drama of Alaska, "The Silver Horde." In the cast are William Courtleigh, Hardee Kirkland, Casson Ferguson, Sydney Ainsworth, Lionel Belmore, Willard Lewis, Albert Roscoe and Corraan Kirkham.

Gouverneur Morris' sensational story of San Francisco's underworld and its maimed and tortured tyrant-king was prepared for the screen by Charles Kenyon, dramatist, now a member of the Goldwyn scenario staff, author of "Kindling" and other spoken dramas, assisted by Philip Lonergan who has had years of experience in writing original scenarios and adapting plays and novels.

Next comes a new Reginald Barker Production in "The Branding Iron," taken from the successful western drama by Katherine Newlin Burt. It was adapted for the screen by J. G. Hawks, head of the Goldwyn scenario staff at the Culver City studios. Reginald Barker, the director of the film, is now in his third year with the Goldwyn organization, and is said to be one of the greatest directors of motion pictures in the country.

The fourth picture of the four-drama series is a new Rex Beach screen story made from his novel, "The North Wind's Malice." It is a story of Alaska and was adapted for the screen by the author himself, who has supervised the film adaptation of all of his fictional narratives, aided by his wife, Greta Beach. The story deals with human passions unabashed and in violent conflict.

Strike Does Not Hold Back Fox News

The strike of film laboratory workers, called on July 19th, effected a general tie-up of printing and developing on every kind of film, which began to assume serious proportions. This was especially true in the case of news reels with their twice-a-week releases.

Fox News was among those affected, and as "service to the exhibitor" is a hard and fast axiom of this news reel's policy, drastic action was required. The supervising director of Fox News called his staff of cameramen together and inquired for those who had had laboratory experience. There were four such, and to them he assigned other cameramen and assistants. These men do not belong to any union, and have never been asked to join an organization, so the supervising director did not feel that he was violating any labor ethics, in asking them to pitch in. They were joined by the entire staff of editors and clerical force. This body of workers developed and printed, cut and assembled, the entire news reel.

"Strangers, Beware" in Cutting Room

"Strangers, Beware!" the first of a series of patriotic productions to be made by Metro in the Americanization campaign of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, is now ready for cutting.

Miscredit of Authorship by Producers

Anita Loos and Albert Parker are the adapters of "The Branded Woman," Norma Talmadge's forthcoming release through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., contrary to a statement in an advertisement issued by First National. The advertisement miscredited authorship as a result of a stenographic error. "The Branded Woman" is from the play by Oliver D. Bailey and entitled "Branded."

Pauline Frederick in "Iris"

AFTER a period of preparation, during which absolute secrecy was maintained, Robertson-Cole announces that its initial production starring Pauline Frederick will be a screen version of Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's play, "Iris."

It is planned to release the production the last week in September, so that exhibitors may have the benefit of this super-special picture as an early fall booking. This picture is the first results of the contract which was entered into by Miss Frederick and Robertson-Cole last spring, which contract was one of the most important of the many recent forward steps taken by this distributing organization.

The screen version of "Iris" starring Miss Frederick will be given the trade under the understanding into which Robertson-Cole is entering with all its stars, that they shall not make more than four productions a year, in order that the highest possible standard of merit may prevail. Miss Frederick has been working on "Iris" for a sufficient period, so that her first Robertson-Cole release will be one which will surpass all her past successes by reason of the time and money she has been able to devote to it.

The screen rights to "Iris" were purchased by Robertson-Cole from A. H. Woods. "Iris" as a stage play had a long and successful American run, and the price which was paid Mr. Woods for the screen rights to the story is among the largest which ever changed hands in a similar transaction.

The calibre of the story given. Miss Frederick in the first of her Robertson-Cole series is to be maintained throughout. Each picture will be based on a story selected with such deliberation and bought at such a price as assure her appearance in the most fitting and appropriate vehicles which are available.

"Iris" was picked as Miss Frederick's first Robertson-Cole production because it has a central role which fits her exactly. In this part she is being directed by Henry Otto, who has shown a master hand in many recent screen productions of the class into which the first Frederick picture will fall. Mr. Otto has had a training of years which has given him directorial sway over a number of distinguished artists.

The central situation of "Iris" will unquestionably give Miss Frederick the greatest dramatic opportunity of her career, as it holds a situation and a characterization which are among the most powerful in the whole range of English spoken drama. The story places her in the role of a beautiful girl of the English leisure class, who has been brought up to know every luxury and comfort.

The cast which will support Miss Frederick in "Iris" has been selected with the greatest of care from the best available actors. Nigel Barrie, an English actor, who has supported the greatest stars on both sides of the Atlantic is a prominent member. Howard Gaye is another of the cast who was born in England, and trained on the British stage. Others of the cast are Willard Lewis, Arthur Hoyt, Daisy Robinson, and Jean Crosby and Maude Lewis.

"Foolish Wives" Under Way

"FOOLISH WIVES," the new Von Stroheim Jewel production, which this director not only wrote and will produce, but in which he will play one of the chief roles, is well under way at Universal City.

Since the success scored by Von Stroheim with his initial creation, "Blind Husbands," and the praise bestowed on his second production, "The Devil's Passkey" on its preview, Universal announces it has determined to give the director carte blanche in his work, regardless of expense. It is estimated that the actual cost of producing the first print of "Foolish Wives" will cost $300,000.

For the first sequence of scenes in "Foolish Wives" Von Stroheim took his entire company of seventy-five people to San Diego, where the Exposition grounds were used for several days. The technical department discovered that with a few changes these buildings can be made into a duplicate of a certain popular resort on the Riviera and permission was secured to make the temporary alterations.

A dozen elaborate sets are now being built for "Foolish Wives." On Catalina, the magic isle off the California coast, is being erected duplicate of the Casino at Monte Carlo, while at Universal City are being reproduced the ornate interiors of this Palace of Chance. At Laguna Beach, on the rockbound coast of Southern California, another large structure, a castle is being erected, while on the spacious studio grounds is now being built a French street four blocks long.

Every background for the picture is being made in exact duplicate of the original, and an idea of the careful attention being paid to the smallest detail may be had from the fact that the special lighting fixtures for the Casino are being reproduced at a cost of $26,000.

As in "Blind Husbands" Erich Von Stroheim will play the heavy in "Foolish Wives," this time a Russian prince. Rudolph Christians will play the leading male role.

Four Scripts Needed by Madlaine Traverse

The selection of not one but four stories for screen production is proving a most perplexing problem just now to Madlaine Travers, who plans to produce four big specials during the coming season with her own producing organization, the Madlaine Travers Productions Company.

Miss Travers recently returned to New York from a vacation at Camp Perry, Greensboro, Vermont, and since that time, in addition to giving her attention to countless other details, has examined nearly a score of scripts. As yet, however, she has not found one that possesses the necessary appeal.

As soon as the stories for her first four pictures are chosen, casting will be begun at once and work will be commenced on the first of the quattrain early in the fall. Arrangements are now being concluded for a studio near New York City.

Two Paramount Stars Begin New Pictures

Filming of the first scenes of the new Paramount-Ince comedy, starring Douglas MacLean under the working title of "When Johnny Came Marching Home," was started this week at the Thomas H. Ince Studios, under the direction of Jack Nelson.

"When Johnny Came Marching Home," is by Charles Belmont Davis. MacLean is supported by Beatrice Burnham, Margaret Livingston, Wade Boteler, Charles Niles and Mollie McConnell.

Thomas Meighan has also started a new picture. Following the completion of "The Frontier of the Stars" under the direction of Charles Maigne, the star left August 2 for the Lasky studio, Hollywood, to commence work on "Easy Street."

Film Shelved to Play Pathe's "Passers By"

H. M. Thomas, managing director of the Rialto Theatre in Omaha, had to shelve another picture to play J. Stuart Blackton's "Passers By," and his success with it evoked the following telegram, dated July 21:

"In spite of the fact that this house is booked solid until September first, your Mr. Graham (Manager of the Pathe Exchange in Omaha) convinced me that it was worth while to shelve a picture to play the Blackton release, 'Passers By.' I am pleased to advise that, after completing a run of this really excellent picture and after the additional expense to which I was put in paying for the film, as well as the other film I had booked, it showed me a nice margin of profit."

King Baggot to Play in Hampton Picture

King Baggot plays a prominent part in "The Dwelling Place of Light," the Winston Churchill story pictured by Benjamin B. Hampton which Hodgkinson has scheduled for release in September.

Has Strong Array of Features

WITH hundreds of exhibitors taking the season by the forelock and already booking their attractions for the early fall, Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that it is prepared with the most imposing array of features it has ever issued. For a year Pathe has been consistently building up its feature department, and now that the fall season is at hand, the result of this steady progress will be made apparent to exhibitors in the high-class type of picture that will be released.

The following statement has been issued by Pathe Exchange in connection with its forthcoming feature releases:

"Pathe proposes to be first in the feature field. Its rapid growth in this department has been particularly marked during the last six months, and its every aim points to the attainment of the superior standing. In rapid succession, Pathe has released and scheduled, twelve features, the excellence of which is high above the average and which comprise an impressive array of attractions for any exhibitor.

"Included in this list are 'Lahoma,' 'Felix O'Day,' 'Help Wanted: Male,' 'The House of the Tolling Bell,' 'One Hour Before Dawn,' 'The Girl in the Web,' 'A Broadway Cowboy,' 'Passers By,' 'Man and His Woman,' 'Simple Souls,' 'Sherry' and 'Rio Grande.' 'Lahoma' is the latest Edgar Lewis production for Pathe, being successor to 'Sherry' and 'Other Men's Shoes.' It is a story of Oklahoma, in the days when this vast territory was thrown open by the United States Government to the hardy pioneers who braved grim dangers in their quests of homelands.

"'Felix O'Day,' is second of the H. B. Warner series produced for Pathe distribution by Jesse D. Hampton. 'One Hour Before Dawn' is the first of the Warner series, and is probably the greatest mystery picture of its type ever issued. 'Felix O'Day' is an adaptation of the novel of the same name, F. Hopkinson Smith, and is one of the most impelling human pictures in which Warner has ever appeared. It was directed by Robert Thornby.

"'The House of the Tolling Bell' is the work of J. Stuart Blackton. It is an adaptation of one of the Edith Tupper Sessions stories of the Creole country in Louisiana, starring beautiful little May McAvoy and Bruce Gordon.

"Blanche Sweet is the star of 'Help Wanted: Male,' which originally was known as 'Leona Goes Hunting,' a magazine story by Edwina Levin. 'The Girl in the Web' is another Blanche Sweet picture. 'Rio Grande' is a great film story of the passionate love and hate that rule the border country. It was made by Edwin Carewe from the stage play by Augustus Thomas. 'A Broadway Cowboy,' standing as William Desmond's supreme screen achievement, also came from the studios of Jesse D. Hampton.

"'Man and His Woman' represents J. Stuart Blackton at his best as a producer. A strong cast interprets this story by Shannon Fife, with Herbert Rawlinson, May McAvoy, Warren Chandler, and Eulalie Jensen enacting the principal roles. Commodore Blackton has never made a more successful production than 'Passers By' which also appears on the Pathe schedule. This picture was adapted from C. Hadron Chambers' internationally celebrated drama, and stars Herbert Rawlinson.

"'Sherry,' typical of George Barr McCutcheon, is an Edgar Lewis picture, which has hit the public fancy, judging by the great booking returns recorded on the production."

To Produce Cooper Classic

Maurice Tournour Will Adapt "The Last of the Mohicans" for Screen

THE announcement is made that Maurice Tournour is to picture James Fenimore Cooper's story, "The Last of the Mohicans." An all-star cast has been engaged for the production. This will mark Mr. Tournour's initial feature under the auspices of the Associated Producers. Following is the statement issued in connection with the prospective filming of the Cooper classic:

"When motion pictures first appeared they were mere chases, a few hundred feet in length, rainy, lumpy, and of no deep-holding interest. As the little industry crept into the real theatres the three-reel feature film came with its famous old western Indian and cowboy-tales, always denoted in a plain lobby by gaudy posters and placards.

"Today the photoplay has nearly reached perfection, and is fast edging the drama from big theatres. It offers drama, sex plays, and classic adaptations together with original stories, but it remained for Maurice Tournour to retrace a few steps to the absorbing tales of early days in America; to strike a new note in advanced presentation of the film story by his decision to screen that popular American story of the strenuous days of 1757, 'The Last of the Mohicans,' by James Fenimore Cooper.

"This interesting book is to have an exceptionally beautiful filming. With modern studio equipment, lighting effects, better actors and more experienced principal players and an excellent continuity, this subject will cause tremendous interest among old and young alike everywhere, for the book has long been recognized as a standard subject throughout the civilized world.

"The all-star cast is headed by Barbara Bedford, Henry Woodward and Albert Roscoe, Lillian Hall with Wallace Berry, Jack McDonald, Omar Whitehead and others. Over five hundred extras will be used as Indians, settlers and soldiers. Mr. Tournour is to take his company to mountain and lake country for the beautiful exterior scenes. He will spend about two months on production."

Lytell Unit in Adirondacks

To Shoot Forest Scenes for Metro Production, "The Misleading Lady"

BERT LYTELL and his supporting company in the forthcoming Metro production, "The Misleading Lady," left New York City last Monday for Lake Placid, where they will remain for two weeks on location. Among those who went beside Mr. Lytell on the trip north were his director, George W. Terwilliger, and Lucy Cotton, the leading woman.

"The Misleading Lady" was adapted for the screen by Lois Zellner from the stage comedy by Charles Goddard and Paul Dickey. Star, company and director have been at work upon the production for some time at the Metro studios in West Sixty-first Street, doing interior sets, but the trip to northern New York is for the purpose of obtaining exteriors of the desired atmospheric quality. The original stage play, "The Misleading Lady," was laid in part in the country near Lake Placid, and the purpose of the Metro company in going to the same location was to preserve the character and key of the original story.

This story called for a forest setting with a mountain background such as exists in the Adirondacks in which the heroine is taken by the modern cave-man and detained in a forest cabin. There, in a gorgeous evening gown she is chained to the cabin floor, while her cave-man lover strives to win her heart. No location nearer to the New York studios offered anything comparable to the original setting of the story, states Metro, so it was decided to send the Lytell company to the scene of the play itself. There they will remain for a period of about two weeks, while all of the action that in the play occupied an entire act is photographed for the screen.

Fox Special Gets Bookings

Wm. Farnum in "If I Were King" in Great Demand by Exhibitors

THE William Fox Special Production, "If I Were King," starring William Farnum, which is to be released shortly, is said to be sweeping the country with an avalanche of bookings and daily reports from exchange managers all over the United States, being received at the home-office of Fox Film Corporation, testify, says Fox, that exhibitors, realizing the possibilities of this production, are booking it like wildfire with early playing dates.

This is undoubtedly partly due to the fact that "If I Were King" is a screen adaptation of the celebrated novel and stage play of Justin Huntly McCarthy, which has been read and seen on the speaking stage by millions of people. In the next place it has in the leading role, one of the really great stars of the screen—

William Farnum. Third, it has been most sumptuously and lavishly produced, the massive and elaborate scenes and beautiful exteriors, pictorially, placing it in a class by itself. Exhibitors realize also the enormous advertising and exploitation possibilities that this production contains. It was directed by J. Gordon Edwards, a director who has always kept faith with the exhibitor, in giving the best that is possible to obtain in picture production.

So great has become the demand for "If I Were King," that it is no longer a question with exchange managers of booking the production, but rather one of playing dates, and in a large number of cases showmen want to play the picture during the hot weather, realizing its great drawing power.

Edgar Lewis in New York

Has Plans for Another Big Film Which May Be Produced in East

AFTER nearly six months spent in California in the production of two big specials for Pathe distribution, Edgar Lewis, accompanied by his wife, returned last week to New York with plans for another big picture which may be made in the East. With Mr. Lewis came a print of "The Beggar in Purple," which he completed just before he left Los Angeles. This production is a version of Andrew Soutar's famous novel. Mr. Lewis's first picture for Pathe, "Other Men's Shoes," also, was adapted from one of Mr. Soutar's popular creations.

When he first went to the West Coast, Mr. Lewis made "Lahoma," a picture of the West dealing with the days when Oklahoma was opened for settlement by the United States Government. John Breckenridge Ellis wrote the story. The producer considers "Lahoma" his best picture in years. In discussing the picture with Elmer R. Pearson, Director of Exchanges of Pathe, upon his arrival from California,

Mr. Lewis said he believed it would far surpass the record of "The Barrier," and more recently his "Other Men's Shoes" and "Sherry."

"I have attempted faithfully to depict life as it was in those trying days of Oklahoma—days I shall never forget. I was but a mere youngster when I started from Arkansas City, right at the line, with thousands of others seeking fame and fortune in the newly opened land. Men took the law in their own hands in those days, and the quicker his trigger pulled, the safer the man. John Breckenridge Ellis knew this country, the romance and the adventure of it. In his book, he vividly described scenes I had actually witnessed. He inveigled a pretty love affair, and it was my purpose to transcribe this as truly as possible to the screen. I called upon my own actual experiences for some parts of the play, and then only when it added to the dramatic effect or suspense."

Lloyd Directs New Special

Completes "Madame X" and Starts Immediately on "The Great Lover"

DIRECTOR FRANK LLOYD is one of the busiest men at the Goldwyn Culver City studios. After completing the Pauline Frederick special picture, "Madame X," and directing her in the film version of "Roads of Destiny," based on Channing Pollock's stage adaptation of an O. Henry short story, he immediately began producing another big Goldwyn special, "The Great Lover," from the stage success in which Leo Ditrichstein appeared for two seasons, written by himself in collaboration with Frederick and Fanny Locke Hatton.

Mr. Lloyd's direction of "Madame X," made of that masterpiece of French twentieth century drama a perfect vehicle for Pauline Frederick's powerful and matured emotional acting. "Scene runs into scene with the smoothness and the veracity of life itself until one forgets that he is looking at an artistic presentation of life itself instead of the reality," says Goldwyn in a statement just issued by that organization.

The director had material in this picture in keeping with the largeness and scope which characterized his first production for Goldwyn, "The World and Its Woman," in which Geraldine Farrar was starred. He is now directing the photographing of the Ditrichstein-Hatton play, "The Great Lover," which will require every atom of skill and finesse at Mr. Lloyd's command to translate its big scenes to the silver screen.

Mr. Goldwyn and the studio staff have expressed themselves as more than satisfied with the parts that have already been taken. They are of the belief that "Madame X" and "The Great Lover" will prove bigger than anything that Mr. Lloyd has hitherto directed. One is drama of the highest type and the other a first-water comedy of the kind that is difficult to "get over" on the screen, but which, when it does succeed, proves the biggest kind of a box-office attraction.

Lehrman's Second Comedy Completed

Marking an advance in two-reel comedy production, "The Kick in High Life," Henry Lehrman's second independent production, to be distributed through Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is declared by pre-reviewers to be one of the greatest laugh-getters. Abandoning his effort to draw the elusive laugh as a result of satire on romance and the present-day film, Mr. Lehrman has brought forth a picture that is built only for laughing purposes and stops at no clean ends to get the applause of the audience.

"The Kick in High Life" follows Mr. Lehrman's success, "A Twilight Baby," his initial production to be distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Will Rogers Scores in His New Production

The picking of Will Rogers, lariat-throwing cowboy who formerly adorned the Ziegfeld "Follies," for screen stardom by Samuel Goldwyn, is vindicated anew by each picture in which Rogers appears. The New York critics had all sorts of good things to say about him after his latest Goldwyn screen comedy, "Cupid, the Cowpuncher," was shown at the Capitol theatre, for the week of July 25.

Three thrilling scenes from "Bride 13," Fox's new fifteen-act serial

Saenger Co. Tells Why "Sex" Was Shifted

In an article published in the News issue of July 31, under the caption, "Saenger Changes its Policy with 'Sex,'" announcement was made that the Hodkinson release, "Sex," had been changed from the Strand theatre, New Orleans, to the Liberty of the same city. The reason for the change in engagement as described in the article was the reason given by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in the story submitted by that organization to the News; namely, that the Saenger Company had "decided to change the policy of their Liberty theatre and cater to the nicest element in town."

To correct any erroneous impressions, the Saenger Amusement Co., Inc., has addressed a letter to the News in which it points out that the Strand is not only the leading theatre of New Orleans but of the entire South. The Saenger letter continues, "Both houses cater to the best people in New Orleans, and we assure you that the shifting of 'Sex' from the Strand to the Liberty was not to 'cater to the nicest element,' but due to the fact that we invariably run a 50-cent picture in a de luxe presentation once a month at the Liberty theatre."

Strand Manager Lauds Warner's Picture

Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Strand theatre, Brooklyn, has written Director of Exchanges Elmer R. Pearson at Pathe headquarters after running H. B. Warner's starring vehicle, "One Hour Before Dawn," released by the Pathe organization.

"In regard to your production, 'One Hour Before Dawn,' which is playing at the Strand this week, wish to state that it is one of the best pictures of its kind that has ever played this theatre. This is a story that appeals to all classes of people, and, to my mind, is the best work that H. B. Warner has done in pictures. I have seen very few pictures that were as intense and mystifying as this production, and it is causing a wild sensation at this theatre. Mr. Warner has established himself as a star of the first calibre by his work in the production."

New York Sees Fox Special

Many Attend Preview of "While New York Sleeps"

THE public got its first glimpse of another of the Fox Film Corporation's big specials scheduled for release this fall, when representatives of all the motion picture trade journals in New York territory, New York Police Department heads, society folk, and people in all other walks of life gathered at the Palace theatre last Tuesday morning for a pre-release viewing of "While New York Sleeps," an eight-reel melodrama staged by Charles J. Brabin, featuring an all-star cast composed of Estelle Taylor, Marc MacDermott, Harry Southern, Earl Metcalfe and William Locke.

"While New York Sleeps" is essentially a photodrama of New York City. It is told in three acts, each independent of the other. The first is a story of the suburbs and concerns a strange entanglement in the lives of a millionaire, his wife, a burglar and the former husband of the wife. The second story is laid in the atmosphere of "The Gay White Way" and depicts a version of the notorious "badger game." In this episode are seen a dancing number from Florenz Ziegfeld's big show, "The Midnight Frolic," and scenes taken amidst the revelry at the Cafe Palais Royal. The third act relates to a tragedy of the East Side in which the pawns are a tempestuous girl, her puny husband, the paralytic father of the husband, and the leader of a band of gangster thieves.

Rarely, it is said, does a picture possess such a wealth of interesting points to recommend it to lovers of the screen drama. People who know New York—its delight, its anguish, its peace and heartaches, its lights and shadows—are numbered by millions. Besides these are countless thousands whose ambition it is to visit the great Metropolis and learn to know about the things they have read in their short stories and novels and have seen in their stage plays and pictures.

To see "While New York Sleeps" is like a visit to New York—only infinitely more satisfactory, much more alluring, for the spectator sees not alone the many points of interest which have made this metropolis universally famous, but he also sees the absorbingly exciting underworkings of the great city, which but few, even among New Yorkers, have seen.

The stories were written by Director Brabin, assisted by Thomas F. Fallon, and are for the most part taken from actual happenings as recorded in the records of the New York Police Department and the files of Metropolitan newspapers. The director has succeeded in building up remarkably tense situations which apparently defy logical unraveling. With a few bold strokes he clears up each situation adroitly and satisfactorily.

From time immemorial in the history of New York, the so-called "badger game" has been one of the prime favorites of the criminally inclined as a means of fleecing unsuspecting people of their money. There are as many variations of the game as there are wits to carry them out. The version told in "While New York Sleeps" is told so cunningly and absorbingly that the spectator fails to realize that he himself is being beautifully "badgered."

The cast of principals of "While New York Sleeps," though small for the immense work required of it, is memorable. Although no player has been featured, the accomplishment of Marc MacDermott and Estelle Taylor predominates all three episodes.

Anticipating a demand for this production on and after its release date, scheduled for September 12, the Fox concern have prepared a comprehensive exhibitors' plan book, containing press stories, exploitation aids, catchlines, advertising cuts, scene cuts and display of the large line of posters which are now ready for distribution.

Jose to Start Special Soon

Engaged by Associated Exhibitors to Make Big All-Star Production

EDWARD JOSE, who has just completed the production of "The Riddle: Woman," with Geraldine Farrar, the first Associated Exhibitors picture for distribution through Pathe, has joined the ranks of director-producers. Delighted with the success attending his efforts with "The Riddle: Woman," the Associated Exhibitors, immediately following his completion of the picture, engaged the noted director to make an "Edward Jose Special."

Mr. Jose is to begin work shortly on his "Special." He has not yet announced the story from which he will produce, but he is said by Pathe to have purchased the rights to a famous literary work and is now engaged in the selection of a cast. "An all-star" aggregation of players, in the truest meaning of this abused term, will be selected for the first "Edward Jose Production," states Pathe.

The director of "The Riddle: Woman" will continue to work in the old Thanhouser studio in New Rochelle, where he produced the Farrar vehicle.

One of the motives which impelled the Associated Exhibitors to sign Mr. Jose for a production of his own, is the belief of its entire membership that the public today demands "productions" as well as "stars."

In the last year independent producers who have depended upon their own skill, good stories, and strong casts to make high-class pictures, have proved that the public doesn't miss stars if they are given good entertainment.

"Mr. Jose knows story value, and has an insight into the box-office merit of pictures that gives him added prestige from the exhibitors viewpoint," declares the statement from Pathe's headquarters.

Vignola Production Has Critics' Approval

The first special Robert G. Vignola production, "The World and His Wife," made for Cosmopolitan, and released by Paramount, has been well received by the critics, according to the reviews published in the several trade papers. Here-with are a few brief excerpts:

Wid's Daily: "This story has been given treatment that for the most part is minutely skilful while the production with which it is invested is little short of splendid."

Exhibitor's Herald: "The World and His Wife" will enjoy the screen play of that title. There is much to offer the patron in this production, including equal amounts of entertainment, dramatic, spectacular, moral, and educational value."

Exhibitor's Trade Review: "Handsome interiors with elaborate sets predominate, the exteriors are beautifully filmed, the close-ups effective, and the lighting excellent."

Motion Picture News: "The beautiful backgrounds, the tinted photography, the rich and effective settings, certainly give tone to the story. It is to the credit of Robert G. Vignola. Some of his scenes are mighty effective in establishing the curse of babbling tongues."

"Fortune Teller" Bring Good Reports

"The Fortune Teller," the screen version of the stage success of the same name with Marjorie Rambeau, the emotional actress, playing the leading role as she did during the Broadway run of the play, is meeting with success, according to letters and telegrams being received at the branch offices of Robertson-Cole which released the picture.

Albert Capellani as director and producer was responsible for the screen adaptation of the play. The strong sentimentality of the plot and the gripping, soul-stirring merit of Miss Rambeau's characterization of the much-abused mother who succeeds in saving herself as well as her son from disgrace and ruin, combine to make it a splendid "mother" story.

Paramount Enlists Press Advertising and Publicity Drive Is Arranged for "Paramount Week"

"MOTION-PICTURE" exhibitors throughout the country are evincing the keenest interest in the Third Annual National Paramount Week and are falling in line with the movement in unprecedented numbers," says a statement issued by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. "Quick to recognize the benefits accruing to their theatres from the biggest advertising campaign which has ever been executed by a motion-picture producing organization in the history of the screen, the exhibitors are more than doubling the totals recorded last year for solid booking of Paramount productions during Paramount Week," continues the Famous Players-Lasky statement.

"So enthusiastic has been the decision of theatres in contracting for Paramount productions from September 5 to 11 inclusive that the total of Paramount pictures exhibited during the week will top the million dollar mark, if the present exhibitors' enthusiasm is maintained," Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution for the corporation announced recently.

"That exhibitors will find added incentive for Paramount bookings during the week is practically asured as soon as details of the advertising and publicity campaign have been completed and announced. Approximately 868 papers in towns of 10,000 circulation or over will be used to advertise Paramount during the week, concentrating especially upon the towns in which theatres are using Paramount productions during that time. Every advertisement will specifically mention such theatres in the territory covered by the paper in which each advertisement appears and will detail the theatre's bookings for each day of the week.

"In addition to newspaper advertising Paramount Week will be advertised through magazines of national circulation and by one sheets and banners. Two styles of handsome lithographs will be available to exhibitors for posting and advertising. One will carry the calendar trade mark of Paramount week, and the other will read: 'It's Paramount Week—Come,' ready to use for sniping a twenty-four sheet. Handsome banners advertising, 'Come In. It's Paramount Week' will also be given free to exhibitors to display in front of their theatres."

To Exploit "Big Happiness" Elaborate Campaign Arranged by Robertson-Cole for New Picture

SPECIAL care is being taken by Robertson-Cole with the exploitation campaign which is to accompany, "Big Happiness," starring Dustin Farnum, shortly to be released, by reason of the fact that this is the first of the Robertson-Cole super special attractions named in its full announcement.

"Big Happiness," first of the Dustin Farnum productions to be made under the new contract of Farnum with Robertson-Cole, which provides for not more than four pictures a year of the best possible grade, is said to give Mr. Farnum the strongest role of his career. The story is one which lends itself particularly to exploitation, and the careful study of the exploitation experts of Robertson-Cole have given it for a number of weeks.

Many opportunities for the exhibitor to successfully exploit "Big Happiness" are offered in the nature of ingenious stunts, which can be put over without difficulty, the simplicity of the ideas serving to make them only the more effective.

Exchange Sends Prints in Record Time

WITHIN six hours after Branch Manager Joseph H. Seidelman of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, received word from General Manager Al Lichtman and General Service Manager F. V. Chamberlin of the fire which wiped out the entire film stock of the Kansas City Exchange, and instructions to ship all film in the Albany Exchange to Kansas City with the least possible delay, the complete stock of inspected prints was recorded, packed in cases, labeled, transported to the special express car provided by the American Express Company, loaded and started on the way. The shipment included also the entire stock of shipping cases.

The Exchange shipper, Howard Annis, accompanied the shipment and carried with him complete bills of lading, which were made in duplicate, and film room record cards so as to enable Kansas City to make immediate shipments right from the car if it would be found necessary. Through the courtesy and co-operation of the American Express Company wires were sent to their agents at Buffalo and St. Louis to rush the special car and give it preference in forwarding.

Although almost stunned by the news and order, Mr. Seidelman and Special Representative Thomas A. Kilfoil started with the pistol and in less time than it takes to tell it they had the entire working force of the Exchange busy with the big job. Without a moment's let-up, even for lunch or refreshment, except for a few sandwiches that were passed around, the work continued until every print and every shipping case was out of the Exchange, packed in the car and on the way westward.

Hodkinson Pictures in Kansas City Theatre

Hodkinson pictures filled up the week's bill recently at the Warwick theatre, Kansas City. On Tuesday and Wednesday "The Sagebrusher" was shown; on Thursday "King Spruce" on Friday "$30,000" and on Saturday "The Harvest Moon." All of these pictures won high praise in the column entitled "In Kansas City this Week," a weekly guide book.

Geo. Mooser in Charge of Eastern Studios

George Mooser, eastern production manager for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, has been placed in charge of Goldwyn's eastern studio in New York, succeeding Robert McIntyre, who has been studio manager since Goldwyn started producing in the East last fall.

Harry Raver to Film Hope's "Sophia"

Signaling the entry of another famous author to the ranks of picturedom, Harry Raver announces the completion of arrangements whereby Anthony Hope's "Best seller" will shortly reach the screen. Following the success of "The Prisoner of Zenda," "Rupert of Hentzau," "The Adventure of Lady Ursula," and other plays of Anthony Hope, their popularity extending back over many years, the author's subsequent book, "Sophia," after enjoying a circulation covering printings in seventeen languages and running well into six editions, was finally secured for picture adaptation under the title of "The Virgin of Paris."

An elaborate production of the popular Hope story is well under way by Harry Raver's staff organization, which includes Gerald Fontaine, director, with Harry Melville, assistant. Franklyn Morel and George Constantine are the photographers. Agnes Fletcher Bain prepared the adaptation. Harry Raver will release "The Virgin of Paris" in the early fall season.

Mayflower Chief Goes West on Business

Benjamin A. Prager, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, left New York last week bound for the Brunton studios, California, the company's producing headquarters in the West. It is understood that his visit is linked with Mayflower's current and future program of production.

Prior to his departure for the Coast, the Mayflower president announced himself as thoroughly satisfied with the progress being made by the organization's eastern producing unit, the R. A. Walsh company which is now filming its second independent production to follow "The Deep Purple."

One of the purposes of Mr. Prager's journey to Hollywood is to confer with George Loane Tucker with a view to shaping a future production policy. Mr. Tucker is now editing "Ladies Must Live" and will start shortly on the third of the series of six productions called for under his contract with Mayflower.

Comedy Plays Rivalto After Rivoli

For the first time in the history of the two houses, Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld is giving a two-reel comedy a place on the bill of the Rivalto theatre after having been shown at the Rivoli during the immediately preceding week. "An Overall Hero," the second of the Chester Comedies distributed through Educational Exchanges is the picture to receive this honor. "Four Times Foiled," first of the Chester Comedies, was shown at both the Rivoli and Rialto, but in this case a couple of weeks intervened between the two showings. "Old Buddha's Maze," a Chester-Outlet, is being given a pre-release showing at the Strand theatre this week where Managing Director Jos. Plunkett is according it a special musical setting.

Cody Picture Excites Interest

"Occasionally Yours" Causes Exhibitor Comment

THE initial announcement by Robertson-Cole of the next super-special starring Lew Cody, has aroused interest among exhibitors, for they see in this picture exploitation possibilities as well as a story which provides Mr. Cody with a good opportunity to portray the unique character he is putting on the screen. "Occasionally Yours" is the name of this new Lew Cody vehicle. It was produced by Gasnier, as one of the series which Mr. Cody is making for Robertson-Cole under contract entered into a few months ago, which provides for four productions during the forthcoming year.

The studio atmosphere of the picture, its irresistibly humorous and whimsical phases, and its unusual love triangles are counted upon by Robertson-Cole to make "Occasionally Yours" one of its big pictures of the year. Opening in a studio, "Occasionally Yours" tells the story of Bruce Sands, an artist who pays a great deal more attention to various girls and women than he does to his art. The unfolding of the several love themes which are centered around Cody's personality is done with humorous and satirical touches, for which James W. Horne, who directed the picture, and H. Tipton Stack, the scenarioist, are responsible.

While the general atmosphere is one of delightful frivolity and the picture is carried forward in a light spirit, this does not prevent its developing a very dramatic climax, which makes "Occasionally Yours" impress itself favorably upon the mind of the spectator.

Mr. Cody is said to present a

new and delightful phase of his personality in "Occasionally Yours," one which should hold the attention of the spectator. Foremost in Mr. Cody's supporting cast is Elinor Fair, who has the role of a young and unsophisticated girl, daughter of a financier. Betty Blythe plays the part of a plotting widow, who is determined that she will win the love of the dashing bachelor, Bruce Sands.

Barney Sherry is the financier, who is caught in the net of the widow merely that she may be near the man she loves. Lillian Rambeau has a deliciously humorous part, playing the part of the puritanical aunt of Bruce Sands, who is very much put out at the scene discovered in his studio, where "Father Time" plays ragtime on an accordion while the models shimmy.

There are a number of beautiful backgrounds, which tend to make this picture one that will readily recommend itself to the exhibitor. Not the least of Mr. Cody's supporting cast is the celebrated bull terrier, "Boots," who is ably assisted by the mouse, "Julius."

In a succession of the most clever novelty scenes which have been put on the screen this season, "Occasionally Yours" is a picture which will, it is said, make money for the exhibitor whose clientele is of a sophisticated and wide-awake nature, demanding the newest ideas and vogues that are being given the screen today.

Vitagraph Buys "Cousin Kate"

Alice Joyce to Play Barrymore Role in Stage Success

CROWNING his recent efforts to secure powerful plays and stories for Vitagraph stars, regardless of price, Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, has purchased the Charles Frohman play, "Cousin Kate," by Hubert Henry Davies, as a special production for Alice Joyce.

The production will be on a lavish scale as befitting the prominence of the star and the play, the screen rights of which cost Mr. Smith a figure on a plane with the top photograph rights prices of the past year.

The star role in "Cousin Kate" was created on the stage by no less a figure in the stage world than Ethel Barrymore with Bruce McRae as her leading man, and a notable cast. It had its premiere at the Empire theatre, Charles Frohman's production house, and immediately was launched into a memorable run. After New York finally had its fill of "Cousin Kate," the production was taken on tour, and today it is said that there are playgoers in some of the middle-sized towns who have seen Miss Barrymore only in this one delightful play. For years the name "Ethel Barrymore" and the title "Cousin Kate" presented one idea in the minds of millions.

Miss Barrymore eventually started rehearsals in a new play, but so highly did she and Mr. Frohman regard "Cousin Kate" that the play was revived a few years later and enjoyed another success. Leslie Fayer, a well known English actor, was Miss Barrymore's leading man in the revival of the play.

Hubert Henry Davies, who wrote "Cousin Kate," also wrote "Outcast," in which Elsie Ferguson was starred; "Cynthia," one of Elsie De Wolfe's most successful plays; "Mrs. Corringe's Necklace," with Charles Wyndham in the stellar role, and "The Mollusc," starring Alexander Carlisle.

Of all the triumphant successes from his pen "Cousin Kate" was regarded not only as the most popular but the best adapted for an impressive motion picture play. Furthermore, the star role is one which calls for the display of human emotion in unusual degree. It provides Alice Joyce with remarkable opportunities for the display of her dramatic power and that rare charm of manner which has done so much to make her a prime favorite with motion picture patrons throughout the world.

Vitagraph is prepared to put forth unusual efforts and go to any expense whatsoever to make the visualization of "Cousin Kate" an extraordinary production.

Much of the "off-stage action" of the stage presentation will be filmed as part of this big Vitagraph special production, and the opportunities are reported as filled with possibilities for new business of a sort never seen on the screen. As a result of this, Mr. Smith is selecting a director with meticulous care. The proper direction of "Cousin Kate" will make it an even bigger picture, it is believed, than it was a play. It is said that the dialogue in "Cousin Kate" has seldom been equalled on the English-speaking stage, and not only will much of the bright dialogue be retained as titles but as visualized titles.

Big Hayakawa Press Book

Robertson-Cole Issues Special
Aid for Star's New Production

THE most "different" Sessue Hayakawa picture produced for distribution by Robertson-Cole in many months is said to be "An Arabian Knight," soon to be released. It has been given by the publicity and exploitation department of this company a distinctive press book. This has just been published, and is now being issued to exhibitors through the Robertson-Cole branches, as a guide and advertising aid to accompany the production.

"An Arabian Knight," which was written by E. Richard Schayer, after a story by Gene Wright, tells of the adventures of Ahmel, a donkey boy of modern Egypt, who becomes a part of the household of an English scientist, because of the strange fancy of the scientist's sister that the donkey boy is the reincarnation of an Egyptian prince whom she loved centuries ago. This story gives Hayakawa opportunities for humorous and whimsical acting in a much greater share than he has had in earlier pictures.

The cover of "An Arabian Knight" press book is done in yellow and white, showing Hayakawa in three poses before a background which includes the pyramids, palm trees and setting sun. The back cover of the book reproduces the paper which has been issued by Robertson-Cole for outdoor advertising of the production. Early pages in the book are devoted to lobby display photographs showing varied scenes in the picture and to a selling talk by A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation.

To Publish Scenarios in Book Form

It will soon be possible to read the scenarios of one's favorite motion picture, according to a statement made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who recently announced that the scenarios of the principal Paramount pictures are to be published in book form. Mr. Lasky's announcement means that many of the future works of Sir James M. Barrie, H. G. Wells, Arnold Bennett and other famous authors and playwrights who have contracted to write directly for the Paramount screen, will also be available in printed form.

Mr. Lasky's decision to publish the scenarios of Paramount Pictures followed his recent visit to England, during which he was in conference with the leading writers of Great Britain and during which he acquired the first scenario from Barrie's pen.

One Million in First Month

New Exchange System of Educational Does Heavy Business

PRACTICALLY one million dollars in exhibitor contracts, obtained in the first active month of operations by only nine of its exchanges, is reported by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., distributing organization of Educational Films Corporation.

This represents bookings of only the Los Angeles, San Francisco, Des Moines, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Indianapolis and New York branches. In their reports to President E. W. Hammons the various managers insist that this is only a preliminary report before actual canvasses of their territories have started.

Educational now has in operation exchanges in New York, Boston, New Haven, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Washington, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Louisville, Atlanta, Indianapolis, Chicago, Detroit, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle. This leaves only Dallas-New Orleans territory not actively engaged, these offices to be opened in a few weeks.

An exchange system throughout Canada, with branches in St. John, Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver will be announced within the next week.

"Work of opening any new exchange system naturally requires time," said Mr. Hammons in commenting on the showing, "and it is to be expected that the first exclusively short subject exchange system, would find many new problems. Another thirty days will find us with a complete system covering this country and Canada that will compare in service and efficiency with companies that have maintained branches for years.

"Our record for contracts signed by nine exchanges is a remarkable one. Although we have been giving the branches time to get started we feel sure that all of the offices will show a proportionate success. Our various managers report that almost without exception they are able to book our product as soon as the exhibitors see the pictures. We believe that we already have a list of first run accounts that will compare favorably with those of any other film company and this is just a start.

"Our own success with scenic, travel, nature and other short subjects convinced us long ago that theatres wanted this superior product. We are certain, too, that our own distribution system would increase this demand. We entered the two-reel comedy field because we were convinced that there was the same demand for the highest quality there. We have not been deceived and the dollars and cents records prove that.

"We have invested a large sum in establishing what we believe to be the ideal system of distribution. In the various territories we have associated with us some of the most successful exhibitor interests. We are working together to supply the best in product and the most efficient method in its distribution. In advertising and exploitation helps we have gone much further than any company in this field. In brief, we have aimed to be specialists in short subjects.

"This we will continue to do and I predict that by the first of the year we will be able to report a showing that will be staggering to those who do not appreciate the importance of the short subject field."

Two Goldwyn Pictures Finished This Week

The picturization of "Head Over Heels," starring Mabel Normand, under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, will be completed this week. Another production scheduled for completion this week is "Just Out of College," starring Jack Pickford, which is directed by Al Green.

Friars Honor "Mary and Doug"

NO more sincere demonstration of the affection and esteem in which "Mary and Doug" are held has ever been given the film stars than that which greeted them when they entered the grand ball room of the Astor Hotel, New York, Sunday evening, August 1st, as the guests of honor at a dinner tendered them by the Friars Club.

More than a half thousand people who had been invited, many of them acquaintances of the days when "Doug and Mary" had not yet reached the pinnacle of fame, paid tribute by enthusiastic applause which would have warmed the heart of a king and his queen.

Among the speakers was William A. Brady, "Doug's" former manager, who told of the time when he hired "Doug" at $35.00 a week; Tom Wise, with whom Fairbanks appeared in "The Gentleman from Mississippi"; Raymond Hitchcock, also an old-time associate of the screen star; and Royal A. Copeland, Health Commissioner of New York, who testified to the ovation that was given "Doug and Mary" in London. A number of other lesser lights, members of the Friars, also spoke, and "Doug and Mary" both made appropriate addresses in which was expressed their pleasure at the reception tendered them.

Following the dinner and before the speechmaking, a one-reel picture, "The Stronger Love," an Imp production of 1914 in which Mary played the leading role, was shown with "interpretational comments" of a comedy nature by a member of the Friars as each scene and title flashed on the screen. Then came a set of comedy stereopticon slides concerning "Doug," showing his alleged evolution from a baby to his present position.

The dinner was attended by many of the most famous people of New York, professional, business, of the stage and in political circles, and is a real tribute to the popularity and esteem in which Mr. and Mrs. Fairbanks are held. John J. Gleason of the Friars was toastmaster. Those who were honored by seats at the guests' table were: S. Jay Kaufman, Miss Tessa Kosta, Daniel Frohman, Miss Anna Fitzgib, Dr. Royal S. Copeland, Miss Mae Murray, Rennold Wolf, William A. Brady, Douglas Fairbanks, John J. Gleason, Miss Mary Pickford, D. H. Griffith, Frank Bacon, Mrs. Frank Bacon, Raymond Hitchcock, Dennis F. O'Brien, Miss Florence Farbury, Hiram Abrams, Hon. William Edwards.

LAHOMA

A Story of the Early Days in Oklahoma
From the well known book by John Breckinridge Ellis
Directed by Edgar Lewis

Savage and outlaw fought on the last frontier to keep back civilization in the days just before the old Indian Territory became lost in the name "Oklahoma."

It was the day of the prairie schooner, the hardy squatter, little law, hard living and quick and violent deaths. It was vivid and adventurous to the last degree. Of such material has Edgar Lewis made this fine picture.

Edgar Lewis' next Pathe production, "Lahoma," is a story of the American frontier days. Three scenes are herewith shown

Mrs. Morgan Belmont in Griffith Cast

MRS. MORGAN BELMONT of New York and Newport, the first American society woman to appear in motion pictures, will be seen in D. W. Griffith's production of "Way Down East," which will open at the Forty-fourth Street theatre, New York, this month and will be released throughout the country in the fall.

Mrs. Belmont plays the part of a Boston society matron in the earlier scenes in the production. Her action is similar to that of Lady Diana Manners (now Lady Duff Cooper of London), who wished to enter motion pictures and cabled Mr. Griffith for work in his organization. The contract for her appearance had been signed when she met with an injury to her spine through a fall while watching one of the parades of returned British soldiers.

Mrs. Belmont, like Lady Manners, is very tall and slender. Several years ago she appeared in society theatricals with considerable success. When Mr. Griffith was casting the society scenes for "Way Down East" Mrs. Belmont was one of eleven members of the social set who applied for an engagement. Her personality was considered most suitable to the role.

Louise Lovely Starts Picture for Fox

Louise Lovely, the latest leading lady to be elevated to stardom by William Fox, has started her first picture at the Fox West Coast Studios. Great care and judgment was used by Fox Film Corporation officials in the selection of the story to be used as the first starring vehicle for Miss Lovely. This story is entitled "The Little Grey Mouse," comes from the pen of Barbara LeMarr Deely. The authoress is an old contributor to Fox entertainments, and many of her delightful tales have been enjoyed during this past season. "The Little Grey Mouse" will be released early in the Fall.

Pathe Serial Drive Under Way

George Seitz and Ruth Roland Serials Due in Early Fall

AN intensive sales drive on two big serials with which Pathe will inaugurate its fall season, is under way. "Pirate Gold," another George B. Seitz serial, in which Marguerite Courtot again plays opposite the producer and star, will be released on August 15. Ruth Roland, in her second independent chapter-play, "Ruth of the Rockies," another Western drama, considered by Pathe one of the most thrilling pictures it has ever released, will follow two weeks after "Pirate Gold," its issue being set for August 29. The Seitz production is in ten episodes, following the example he set with his first success, "Bound and Gagged," while Miss Roland's "Ruth of the Rockies" will be distributed in fifteen installments.

The following statement has been issued from the Pathe headquarters in connection with its serial releases for the fall:

"For the opening-of-the-season schedule, the present one is undoubtedly the strongest Pathe has ever presented. Both 'Pirate Gold' and 'Ruth of the Rockies' represent the highest in the advanced art of motion picture serials. Each production is designed to have the strongest appeal for patrons of every class of house. Many of the finest theatres in the country which never before played serials, until Pathe booked them 'Bound and Gagged' and 'The Black Secret' have already taken 'Pirate Gold' and 'Ruth of the Rockies.'

"That the demand for serials this fall will be greater than ever is made apparent by the preliminary bookings recorded on each of the Pathe's fall inaugural productions. Both Seitz and Miss Roland won tremendous popularity through their work in their last serials, respectively 'Bound and Gagged' and 'The Adventures of Ruth,' which is responsible for the strong appeal they have in their new productions. "Pirate Gold," adapted from a story by Frank Leon Smith, was prepared for the screen by Bertram Millhauser. In addition to starring in the picture, with Marguerite Courtot, Mr. Seitz also produced and directed it. His efforts along this line have established him in the front ranks of serial makers.

"Ruth Roland in 'Ruth of the Rockies' goes back to the country of her great triumph, 'Hands Up' and in more thrilling fashion dashes through a series of adventures calculated to keep any audience on edge through every episode of the fifteen. She has a remarkable plot in the adaptation of Johnston McCulley's widely read magazine story, 'Broadway Bab.' George Marshall is the director, and he has surrounded Miss Roland with a cast of exceptionally competent players, including Herbert Heyes, Thomas Lingham, Jack Rollens, Edward D. O'Hennes, Norma Nichols, and Madeline Fairschild.

"Electric thrills have been staged in every episode. Time and again Miss Roland was obliged to risk life and limb for the benefit of the camera, and, upon the completion of the picture, she had to 'lay-off' to recuperate. The titles of the first six episodes of this serial are: 'The Mysterious Trunk,' 'The Inner Circle,' 'The Tower of Danger,' 'Between Two Fires,' 'Double Crossed' and 'The Eagle's Nest.'

Consistent Merit Will Win

Charles Weeks Discusses 100 Per Cent Producer

"THE day when a motion picture producer may turn out one successful picture after a lot of bad ones, then go back to the bad ones again and get by for a while on the fame of that one good picture is past," says Charles A. Weeks, vice-president of Benjamin B. Hampton's organization, which includes the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., of New York and Federal Photoplays, Inc., of California. "Traditional greatness won in a few successful pictures will no longer carry a producer through to the extent of selling poor pictures for him on the merits of accidental successes. Consistent performance will add value to the connection of any man's name, or to any brand, which is attached to picture productions."

"Yet 100 per cent successful production is as rare in motion picture as is the 1000 per cent batting average in baseball. That is why Benjamin B. Hampton who is making photoplays of famous novels, is an exception in the field. Starting with his first personal production of a novel, 'The Westerners,' from the novel of Stewart Edward White, the next 'Desert Gold,' from Zane Grey's work. 'The Sagebrusher,' Emerson Hough's story, followed. Every one has proved a success.

"These productions have stood the test of the box-office. Completed but not yet released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is Winston Churchill's 'The Dwelling Place of Light.' The crest of this producer's power has not yet been reached, but behind him when it is reached will be an unbroken line of successes.

"These productions are specials which are slowly and carefully made, costing a great deal of money and requiring six months to complete. Fine casts are assembled, so that it is quite within truth to call them 'all star' pictures. In other words, the very best of conditions obtain for the production of successful pictures. The touch of Mr. Hampton is present from the time he himself writes the detailed scenario of the novel in a manuscript of almost novel length, to be turned over to his continuity writers, until the final tinting, titling and selection of the musical score. In order to be free from the details of these departments, he takes over no function to himself personally, such as directing or continuity writing or cutting and assembling the film. These details are in the hands of the best talent obtainable in the motion picture field."

Mayflower Managers Meet

Heads of Field Exploitation Force Plan Big Campaign for Productions

THE divisional heads of Mayflower's field exploitation force arrived in New York this week for a series of important conferences to last one week and to be presided over by John W. McKay, general manager of the producing organization. The conference, it is declared, will be one of the most important in Mayflower's history and will lay the foundation for an exploitation campaign on behalf of forthcoming Mayflower productions that will give to exhibitors the most complete and productive promotional service ever afforded by a production organization.

Those who will attend the series of conferences, in addition to General Manager McKay, are J. A. Pegler of the Eastern Division, Ace Berry, head of the Central Division, Edward Holland, in charge of the Western territory, Mark Larkin, director of publicity and advertising, and Albert W. Sobler, in charge of trade paper and general news exploitation. The conference plans arranged by Mr. McKay call for daily sessions of three hours each, at which will be discussed several new and practical plans for aiding exhibitors in the promotion of productions presented by Mayflower.

Mr. Pegler, who attracted considerable attention in publicity circles recently by arranging for the appearance of Anna Q. Nilsson on Sir Thomas Lipton's private yacht, Victoria, during the international regatta, landing the story on the front page of the New York dailies, is responsible for a cooperative exploitation plan that is expected to bring about a substantial saving of advertising costs for the exhibitor. During the course of the conference, Pegler's plan will be perfected after which it will be put to practical use for the promotion of Allart Dwan's "In the Heart of a Fool" which will inaugurate First National's Fall program.

Legion Posts Booking "The Wonder Man"

Throughout the country the Robertson-Cole release, "The Wonder Man," starring Georges Carpentier, has been shown by exhibitors with endorsement and co-operation of American Legion posts. This national understanding began at the premier showing at the Hotel Astor, and has extended to every corner of the country.

Now comes the report of a legion post which booked the picture, and financed and managed its showing of its own volition. This post is in Muskogee, Oklahoma.

Reelcraft Has Second Billy Van Comedy

The sales department of the Reelcraft Corporation has received the second comedy featuring Billy B Van, the vaudevillian, and Tom Bret has titled it "Lucky Hoodoo."

Leon Errol in a two reel comedy production titled "Buggins" was the first release of the new series, followed by the two-reel comedy titled "Snakes," featuring Billy B. Van.

Buckingham to Direct Third Comedy

Thomas Buckingham is directing his third comedy for the L-Ko Company, at the L-Ko studios in Hollywood, Cal. It will be a Century Comedy, and besides affording the usual display of Century Bathing girls, also will feature "Brownie" the Century wonder dog. Charles Dorety, Bud Jamison, Peggy Prevost and Harry Sweet are in the cast.

Releases Available by Jans Service Soon

An announcement will soon be forthcoming in a few days from Jans Service, the recently organized exchanges for New York and New Jersey that absorbed the New Jersey-Rolle company, as to several new feature pictures that they will have available for exhibitors in the territory covered.

Critics Praise Nazimova

Ohio Reviewer Calls Metro Star Russia's Contribution to Art

CRITICS of the silent drama quite without exception are inspired to superlatives in commenting upon the art of Nazimova. Metro Pictures Corporation, which sponsors the productions of Nazimova, quotes with more than ordinary satisfaction from a recent review of Nazimova's production of "The Red Lantern," written expressly for the Hamilton Daily News, Hamilton, Ohio, by Stella Weiler Taylor.

"The Red Lantern" was shown at the Palace theatre, Hamilton's newest and most beautiful temple of the cinema, and Mrs. Taylor, commenting on the picture, designated Nazimova as a "super-star." Among other things she wrote: "This review of 'The Red Lantern,' the Metro classic now on view at the Palace theatre, is in no sense an advertisement.

"Nazimova, glorious goddess of the screen, needs no publicity beyond the conjuring magic of her name. So great a favorite has the fair Russian become in Hamilton that last night hundreds patiently waited in the lobby for their chance to see her, many standing in line for an hour.

"Russia has given us many wonderful things—sables, caviar, tea, violettes du Czar, enchanting ballets, the music of Tchaikowsky and Rachmaninoff, Tolstoy's novels, Tchaikovsky's plays—but, after all, Russia's finest contribution to beauty and art is the incomparable Nazimova. She is to pictures what grand opera is to music or Greek sculpture to art."

Carey in Van Loan Story

Universal Star Appears in "Blue Streak McCoy," by Famous Author

LEADING screen writers are beginning to regard Harry Carey as an apt object for their pen, and as a result he is getting many first class stories written especially for him by authors of national repute. One of the most recent to turn out a typical Harry Carey film story is H. H. Van Loan, one of the foremost screen authors of the day and the author of the Priscilla Dean vehicle, "The Virgin of Stamboul."

"Blue Streak McCoy" concerns a young man who deems himself worthy of a great love and who tries to atone for his past by service and self-sacrifice. How a two-fisted man disguises his feelings so that he may bring happiness to a pal is told through Harry Carey's emotional acting.

Reeves Eason, who directed Carey in "Blue Streak McCoy," is responsible for the idea of taking the actors a few thousand feet below the surface of the earth and for what is said to be the first time in the history of motion pictures filmed scenes in a mine in actual operation.

In the cast with Carey are Ruth Golden Fuller, Ray Ripley, Breezy Eason, Charles LeMoine, Ruth Royce, Lila Leslie and Bennie Alexander. The picture will be released August 23rd.

Used Motion Pictures in Sunday-School

Another instance of the church utilizing the screen for service purposes was furnished on Sunday, June 25th, at Memphis, Tenn., when Dr. William E. Clark, pastor of the Unitarian congregation of that city, used a motion-picture for his Sunday-school class during the regular church hour. The picture shown at the Majestic theatre, where the services were held, was "The Teacher's Pet," one of Goldwyn's "Edgar" series based on stories written by Booth Tarkington. The minister used the picture to convey a lesson to his audience, and after the showing addressed those present on the value of depending on oneself for success. "Salvation is an individual matter," declared the preacher. "It must be earned by the individual."

Greenwich Village Is Reproduced in West

"Greenwich Village," celebrated in the Bohemian folk-lore of ye old New York, has been transplanted to Hollywood, Cal., according to a statement from the Metro offices, and the reason for this transposition is that the rendezvous of "long-haired men and short-haired women" plays an important part in May Allison's starring vehicle for Metro, "Are All Men Alike?" which is now being filmed at the West Coast Studios. "The Pirate's Den," which is the goal of many visitors frequenting New York's well-known Latin quarter, is said to have been reproduced down to the finest detail.

Zane Grey Stories Continue to Draw

The Hodgkinson organization has been the recipient of a great deal of flattering comment on both the Zane Grey Pictures produced by Benj. B. Hampton, of which "Desert Gold" is one. The other, "Riders of the Dawn," continues to play to capacity business wherever shown, despite the hot weather. They are said to be just the sort of pictures that the public want to see.

Masao Inouye, Japanese Star, in New York

Massao Inouye, a prominent actor of the legitimate stage in Japan, is now in New York. From the New York office of the International Motion Picture Company, the largest film manufacturing corporation in Japan, comes the announcement that Mr. Inouye will probably appear in a screen production of Japanese life in the near future, incorporating with one of the large producing companies in this country. Mr. Inouye is here to study the film industry in the United States and to select an American actress to play opposite him in his next picture.

Mr. Inouye, reputed to be the "John Barrymore" of Japan, has scored successes in the leading parts of Gorgor's "The Inspector General," Echogaray's "The Son of Dorjuan," Hoffmannstahl's "The Food and Death" and "The Bells." While in America, his manager will be A. Suzuki, the New York representative of the International Motion Picture Company with offices at 159 West 47th street, New York City.

Jack London Story to Run at Capitol

"The Mutiny of the Elsinore," a Metro special release of the C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., production of Jack London's stirring story of the sea, will appear the week beginning August 14 at the world's largest picture palace, The Capitol Theatre, New York. This exhibition is a pre-release run; the production will not be issued generally until the first part of October.

Metro officials are inclined to ascribe the demand for this second of Metro's Jack London series to the showing of the first release, "Burning Daylight," issued about a month ago.

Journalist in Charge of Schwab Sales

Joseph Klein, general manager for the D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., announces the appointment of Dimitri Stephon as supervisor of sales and publicity for that organization. The latter has left the field of journalism for the new enterprise, this being his first affiliation in the motion-picture industry. Mr. Stephon will leave for an extended trip embracing the District of Columbia, Pennsylvania, Cleveland, Michigan and Illinois before returning East.

"A Splendid Hazard" Has Good Sales Reports

"The most successful Allan Dwan production yet presented by Mayflower," is the way John W. McKay, general manager, characterized "A Splendid Hazard," after studying First National's sales reports covering the first two months of the production's release.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

Two scenes from May Allison's next Metro picture, "Held in Trust"

Metro Coast Plant Busy Spot

METRO'S west coast studios in Hollywood just now present a scene of great activity, with five producing units at work and two more companies preparing to start within two weeks' time at the latest. The three enclosed stages of the California plant are covered with sets of every size and description, while the lots adjoining are filled with street and other exterior settings.

Viola Dana is about half through with her new picture, "Blackmail," a story written by Lucia Chamberlain and adapted for the screen by Albert Shelby Levino. The story was published in the Saturday Evening Post. For the past week the company has been on location at Pasadena filming scenes about the exterior of one of the palatial Southern California homes. Dallas M. Fitzgerald is directing the dainty star in this crook melodrama, while Wyndham Standing, Edward Cecil, Florence Turner, Alfred Allen, Lydia Knott and Jack Roi make up a most notable supporting cast.

The interior of an artist's studio in Paris has been furnishing the setting for scenes of Alice Lake's newest picture, "Body and Soul" in which she is featured at the head of a good cast. Miss Lake has a most difficult role to enact in this stage drama, which was written by William Hurlburt and adapted for the screen by Hayden Talbot and Marc Robbins. However, it is a part which gives the little Metro featured player an opportunity to display her real dramatic ability, as did "Should a Woman Tell?" her first picture, and "Shore Acres" her second. Charles Swickard is directing "Body and Soul" and Stuart Holmes, Fontaine LaRue, Hugh Saxon, Carl Gerard and William Orlamond complete the supporting personnel.

Metro states that May Allison has been doing so many thrilling stunts for her new starring vehicle, "Are All Men Alike?" that she declares she is on the verge of being a nervous wreck. "Are All Men Alike?" is being directed by Phillip Rosen. It was adapted by A. P. Younger from Arthur Stringer's story, "The Waffle Iron," published serially in McClure's magazine. Wallace MacDonald is Miss Allison's leading man, and Lester Cuneo, Ruth Stonehouse, John Elliott, Winifred Greenwood and Emmanuel Turner have important parts in the supporting cast.

Five Units Now at Work and Two More Start Filming Shortly

John E. Ince is progressing rapidly in the direction of the all-star production of "Someone in the House," which was adapted for the screen from Larry Evans's stage play by Marc Robbins and Lois Zellner. Edmund Lowe and Vol Vale are the featured players in this crook melodrama, while Edward Connelly, Edward Jobson, Lawrence Grant, Cara Lee, Howard Crampton, Henry Miller, Jr. and William Irving complete the all-star cast.

The third Jack London story to be produced by C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., for release by Metro, "The Star Rover," will be completed in a short time. Edward Sloman is directing this picture, the script for which was prepared by Albert Shelby LeVino, Courtenay Foote, Thelma Percy, Marcella Daley and "Doc" Cannon head the all-star cast for this production.

The filming of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" will be started in a few days. June Mathis has nearly completed the script for Vicente Blasco Ibañez's widely read novel and Rex Ingram, who is to direct, is busy selecting the locations for the many elaborate exterior scenes. Mme. Doralina will also start work on her first Metro starring vehicle, "The Passion Fruit," in about a week.

Best Seller Is Released Chambers' "Fighting Chance" on Paramount Schedule for Aug. 1

"THE FIGHTING CHANCE," a photoplay of society life adapted from the best seller of several years ago from the pen of Robert W. Chambers, is the Paramount release for August 1. All the ingredients of a high society drama with the essentially Chantresque touch have been retained in the adaptation of the story.

Director Charles Maigne, who, in "The Fighting Chance," comes to the direction of Paramount productions again for the first time since his stupendous success "The Copperhead" has hit the high spots in interior decorations and artistic outdoor atmosphere. Particularly effective is a night scene during a severe thunderstorm with the lightning leaving the sumptuously appointed alcove alternately in light and darkness.

An all-star cast contributes to the success of the production. Conrad Nagle and Anna Q. Nilsson in the leading roles have been declared by critics to be the exact types of the average society circle. Miss Nilsson recently played leading woman for William S. Hart in his Paramount special "The Toll Gate" while Mr. Nagle has had an extensive stage experience as lead in several musical comedies, having appeared recently with Alice Brady in "Forever After." Others who are prominent in the cast of "The Fighting Chance" are Clarence Burton, Dorothy Davenport, Herbert Pryor, Ruth Helms, Bertram Grassby, Maude Wayne, Frederick Stanton and William H. Brown.

Will M. Richey, who has prepared the script for some of the most successful screen productions, did the scenario of "The Fighting Chance."

Schwab Co. Moves to New Quarters

Announcement is made of the removal of the office of the D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., to 1600 Broadway, New York. The Schwab organization will occupy the suite formerly held by Sol Lesser. The D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., is now "state-righting" "Fickle Women," which stars David Butler. This picture is an adaptation of Sophie Kerr's "Sitting on the World," which was published in the Saturday Evening Post.

NEW JERSEY

A News representative travelling through New Jersey reports that Auto Shusterman, now operating the Strand and Empire theatres, New Brunswick, New Jersey, has under construction a new two thousand seat house, the Victoria.

The representative met a real "regular fellow" in Camden, New Jersey, in the person of Frank Jordan, manager of the Grand theatre in that city. Jordan's record with the Grand also shows him one of the most successful managers on the Stanley roster. Hardly ten months have passed since the Stanley Company took over the Grand and in that time the receipts have doubled, both the interior and exterior have been decorated, and a ventilating system second to none addition the entire building has been re-wired. Whereas the Grand formerly had a dingy appearance it is now the brightest spot in Camden. The display advertising of the Grand is along original and attractive lines.

Benjamin Shindler is the live-wire manager of the Victoria theatre, 26th and Federal streets, Camden. Mr. Shindler has been in the picture business for many years and has managed some of the best known playhouses in Philadelphia. The Victoria runs all first class attractions, and features the organ recitals by Robert Crest. The equipment and cooling system are most modern. Particular pride is in the well-ventilated projection room where Peter Devine officiates.

One of the year's new houses, the Apollo at Gloucester City, New Jersey, is now running all pictures, having eliminated vaudeville after twenty months. The Apollo, one of the most modern, and early this year costs a thousand, and was erected at a cost of $200,000. Frank Lancaster is the manager. Both Mr. Lancaster and his wife are well known in yourville.

At Freehold, New Jersey, the representative found an attractive home in the Main Street theatre, owned by the Freehold Amusement Co., of which Joseph L. Donahy is president, Edward Simonson, treasurer, and James McMinnie, secretary.

PHILADELPHIA

Two years under the management of A. D. Resnick has made a considerable change in the appearance of the Grand theatre, 7th and Snyder Avenues, Philadelphia. The appearance of the front has been improved, a new lighting system installed, new machines, and a Typhoon cooling system.

The Grand is owned by the Steel Amusement Co., which controls a circuit including the Jackson, also managed by Mr. Resnick and two theatres managed by Milton Honig. The Steel organization is a new two thousand seat section of a new two thousand-seat house on Jackson and Winton streets, Philadelphia.

Frederick Leopold, manager of the Colonial theatre, at 530 Chestnut Avenue, Philadelphia, was a Y. M. C. A. entertainment manager during the war, serving with the Wildcat Division on the Voeges front. After the armistice he handled six theatres. The Colonial is one of the most modern of the Stanley chain, seating 2,600. It is a first run house.

KANSAS CITY

Motion pictures of an oil well being shot and detail pictures of the refining and gasoline plants taken at Neodesha, Kas., last week by representatives of the Kansas state good roads association, which will exhibit the pictures throughout the state this fall. Detail pictures taken at the Standard Oil Company refinery there show the oil from the time it comes into the plant through the pipe line to the finished product being turned out. Pictures of the extensive road work in the county surrounding Neodesha also were taken for the state film.

and Main streets, Kansas City, Mo., after a lengthy legal fight over a city ordinance which prohibits a motion picture theatre within 150 feet of a residence. The Westport Baptist church disrupted plans by filing a suit, under the city ordinance, because a corner of the air-drome almost touched the church. The pastor and congregation further declared that the air-drome's music would interfere with church services. To appease them on this point, the theatre owners agreed to bar all music containing even a semblance of "jazz." Only classical and religious music is played at the air-drome during church services. It is subdued.

CINCINNATI

The Lyric theatre, under the management of the C. C. Hite Attractions Company, has booked "Sex" for showing in the near future, and plans to run a big fashion show with living models to exploit the picture.

Edmund Fischer of the Standard Film Service Company, has been promoted from the office force to the road, and will handle Eastern Kentucky.

Early developments are expected in the plans of the Fountain Theatres Company for trading the size of the entrance of the playhouse from the Fifth street side, tentative negotiations being under way for the purchase of approximately 66 feet immediately east of Wiggins Block, southeast corner of Fifth and Vine streets.

It became known this week that H. H. D. Connick, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, was in town, and through the Frederick H. Schumacher Company, real estate dealers, met Max Goldstone, owner of the Fifth street realty. Mr. Goldstone originally controlled the property south of Wiggins Block on Vine street, which was taken over by the Fountain Theatres Company, the latter being a subsidiary of the Famous Players-Lasky Company, it is said. One of the principal objects of Mr. Connick's visit was to make a study of the site and also secure material for use by the architects who are now at work on the addition.

Christian Phister, manager of the Jewel and Colonial theatres, Troy, Ohio, is making extensive remodelings in both houses.

It is reported that on August 15th the first-run houses in Louisville, Kentucky, will go to 20 cents and 30 cents, instead of 10 cents and 20 cents, their present prices.

ATLANTA

The Tarheel Mica Co., of Plumtree, N. C., has just finished the construction of a small theatre, intended solely for the amusement of their employees.

Crawford Bros., of Buena Vista, Ga., will open a new theatre, seating capacity six hundred, in the near future.

Troupe Howard and S. A. Lynch, of Atlanta, will open one of the most beautiful theatres in the South, about October 1st. The theatre is to be known as the Howard, and will have a seating capacity of twenty-seven hundred. A fine pipe-organ is now being installed, and the theatre will have one of the best orchestras in the South. The program will, doubtless, be composed of the Paramount-Artcraft holdings.

R. E. Martin, Columbus, Ga., was in Atlanta last week purchasing equipment for a theatre which he is now building in Columbus. Two Powers machines, type 6-b, were purchased, as well as many other things necessary to the establishment of a first-class theatre.

Ralph H. DeBrullier, one of the best-known showmen in the South, was another visitor for the purpose of buying equipment for a new theatre—the Capitol, Macon, Ga. Mr. DeBrullier's purchases included two Power 6-b machines.

S. T. White, Greenville, N. C., has just placed an order for a complete equipment, including a Monsoon ventilator, for a new theatre he is building in Greenville.

Sig Samuels, owner of the Criterion theatre, Atlanta, is highly elated over the progress being made on the construction of his new theatre, the Metropolitan, in this city. Ground was broken only six weeks ago for this theatre, and yet the work is going forward at a tremendous pace. The opening date has been set—January 1st. The theatre will seat twenty-five hundred, will be decorated by one of the best-known decorators in the South, and will have a splendid orchestra.

W. P. Axson, of the Alpha theatre, Loganville, Ga., is by way of becoming a "theatre magnate." On September 1, he will open a new theatre at Crawfordville, Ga., and on January 1st, another at Madison, Ga. Neither of the two theatres have been named as yet.

C. G. Zirbes of the Strand theatre, Washington, Ga., used to be a jeweler. Time after time he saw the Strand change hands, each manager passing the house up as a failure. Finally he bought it, and now in less than three months has succeeded in making it a well-paying proposition. "Ordinary business tactics applied to the picture game," is his explanation.

DETROIT

W. S. Butterfield added his eighteenth Michigan theatre to his string, he announced this week, through the acquisition of a 10-year lease on the Arcade theatre, are president, Mr. Butterfield has extensive plans for the further enlargement of his Michigan circuit.

Re-election of the present officers of the Detroit Board of Film Exchange Managers took place at the annual meeting of the organization last week. The officers are: president, Mr. B. Duncan (Vitagraph); vice-president, W. D. Ward (Universal); treasurer, Jess Fishman (Standards); W. E. Wilkinson, of the Board of Commerce, is permanent secretary of the organization.

"Neptune's Daughter," starring Annette Kellerman, is being presented for the twenty-second week at the Shubert-Detroit Opera House, by Will M. Eliot. The return engagement, which opened last week has been extended another week because of the excellent audiences.

The Lyric theatre, Alpena, has been leased by Fitzpatrick & McElroy, according to Mr. Louis McElroy, giving the firm control of two theatres in the city, the other being the New Malt.

The state-rights for "A Trip to Mars" were secured by Joe Horwitz in a 10-day trip to New York City.

Frank Drew, formerly with Special Pictures, has connected with Fox as city salesman in Detroit; and Hal Smith, former manager of the Ferry Field theatre, succeeds Mr. Drew as Detroit manager of Special Pictures.

T. A. Dowd, connected for some time with the Fox's Detroit branch, has been promoted to assistant manager of this branch, succeeding W. C. Gehring, who has been transferred to the Albany office.

The Lyric theatre, Mr. Clemens, containing 288 seats, opened for business last Saturday, with Joe Optner, formerly of Detroit, as lessee.

Through an arrangement closed last week by Frank G. Hall, president of the Hallmark Picture Corporation, and A. L. Zacherl, W. B. Hurlbut and J. L. Saxe, of Minneapolis, Minn., the latter three have secured a long term contract for the distribution rights in Detroit territory of all the Triangle classics.

D. C. Shook, manager of the Strand theatre, Detroit, since its opening, is now also managing the Lindwood-Lasalle. The Strand theatre recently underwent extensive repairs and renovation.

Joe Bloom, who has been in charge of the Detroit territory for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation since May 10, has been promoted from supervisor of the Detroit, Cleveland, and Pittsburgh offices to general supervisor of all the Hodkinson exchanges in the country.

A. J. Moeller, who recently resigned as manager of the DeLuxe theatre, Detroit, has been appointed manager of the Michigan Motion Picture Exhibitors' League to succeed Frank Gehbart, who has become Detroit branch manager of the Robertson-Cole organization.

BUFFALO

The General Theatres Corporation has purchased the Circle theatre at Connecticut and Fifteenth streets from the Morton Amusement Company. "Billy West, formerly connected with the Regent, will be manager. This makes the fifth house under the control of the company, which now operates the Hallmark, the Regent, Terry and Marlowe. The Arcadia is being redecorated and renovated and will be reopened as the Star. Harry Marsey is president of the General Theatres Company.

Buffalo is to have a third new exchange building. Local financial interests are planning to build a new structure in Franklin street, near the Pathe office.

The new Marcus Loew theatre at Niagara Falls will be a $1,000,000 proposition, according to papers filed with the county clerk at Lockport. The company will erect the theatre on the west side of Little Fourth street, extending from Little Fourth street to the alley between the Third street stores, with the main entrance in third street, midway between Little Fourth and Niagara streets.

Al. Sherry it is announced, will be stage manager of the Shea Criterion, when this newly remodeled house, formerly the Star, opens September 1, under the direction of the Shea company and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Harold B. Franklin will direct the policies of the house.

Henry W. Kahn, Metro manager, held a conference with his salesmen on Monday, July 26, when he outlined the policy of the company for the coming season. Attending the conference were E. C. Markens, T. W. Joy, W. E. Weakly and O. O'Shea. Mr. Weakly has just joined the Metro staff and was formerly connected with Republic.

Manilla Marten Chosen for "Tarzan" Cast

One of the keenest competitions that was ever held for a part in a big serial production was decided last week when Manilla Marten was given the leading ingenue part in "The Son of Tarzan," the big animal serial taken from the Edgar Rice Burroughs book of the same name which is being produced by the National Film Corporation for states' rights distribution by David P. Howells.

Because of the extreme difficulty of this part, calling as it does for a girl of attractive looks, yet at the same time one strong enough to stand the enormous hardships of a life duplicating that which would be lived in the actual jungle, it was a great problem to find just the right sort of a girl, says a statement from the David P. Howells office.

Many Sales Reported on Jans Pictures

The majority of the territory available on the Jans Pictures, Inc., features "A Woman's Business," "Wings of Pride" has been sold and both pictures are reported as going over big for the exhibitors that have booked them, according to a report from Jans.

Olive Tell also plays the stellar role in "Wings of Pride" and both of the features were directed by E. A. Rolfe of the Jans organization. In "A Woman's Business," the leading role is that of a young society girl who believes that a woman's business is marriage.

Elaborate exploitation accessories and finally executed posters done by a well known artist are available on both "A Woman's Business" and "Wings of Pride."

John West Engaged by A. Lincoln Miller

A. Lincoln Miller, the popular humorist, who is producing "The Weakly Indigestion," the series of single-part burlesque news reels, now being distributed by Radin Pictures on the state-right basis, has engaged the services of John West, who will act in the capacity of co-director.

Joan Film's Big Success

"She Played and Paid," Starring Fannie Ward, Bringing Results

THE JOAN FILM SALES CO. is reported to be prospering beyond its own expectations. Organized for the purpose of offering "bigger and better" pictures to the States-rights market, the reception that its first release "She Played and Paid" has won from states-rights buyers is said to be warmer than Joan anticipated.

Those who were doubtful about the claims made by Joan as to the ability of Fanny Ward and the excellence of plot, cast and direction of "She Played and Paid" are now said to be lavish in their praise of this production, for a screening of the picture was enough to convince them that this release of Joan matches up to the standard announced by the company when it was first formed.

From all indications, it appears that "She Played and Paid" will be treated as a big feature, similar to any of those of the big producers, and that many first-run houses will book the production for several days' run. This merely substantiates the fact that "She Played and Paid" can hold its own. It was declared by states-rights men that this release of Joan's comes just in the nick of time, when the demand is for a higher grade of states-rights pictures. As one man expressed it: "A picture and a policy of the calibre such as Joan puts forth will offer keen competition to the regular releases of the big producers, either they will have to toe the mark of the new brand of states-rights releases or they will be beaten out of the field."

Special Makes Contracts

New Release Will Be Known as "Comiclassics"; Morris to Direct

SPECIAL PICTURES CORPORATION in arranging for their releases for fall and winter, have made a number of contracts with well known people. While the officers of the corporation feel that it is not good policy to make complete announcement of all of their plans at this time, the information was this week given out that they will have a new release to be known as "Comiclassics." The making of these is to be under the supervision of Reggie Morris, a director who was a member of the Mack Sennett organization for many months and whose most recent work is that of filming the "Bringing Up Father" series at the Christie studios. Morris also directed the most recent Mack Sennett comedy feature "Married Life" now being distributed by First National. No statement is made by Special Pictures officers as to the number of releases they will have during the coming season but it is definitely understood their producing organizations are continuing with the making of Comedyart releases.

Another contract made this week was for the filming of a series of comedies featuring Gale Henry which are to be distributed by Special Pictures Corporation. The series is to consist of twelve two-reelers and the first will be put in production during the coming week.

Conway Tearle Picture Brings High Bidding

It is said that never in the history of Equity Pictures has there been as much excitement and interest in the disposal of the territorial rights on any of its pictures, as on its six-reel Conway Tearle production "Whispering Devils," the latest effort of this sterling actor.

Keen enthusiasm has been evinced in the States-rights trade as to the disposition of this picture ever since Inter-Ocean paid a high price for the foreign rights to this production, and Sam Zierler of the Commonwealth Film Co. followed suit by purchasing at a high figure the rights of distribution in New York and New Jersey.

Flora Finch Comedies Are in Demand

State Right buyers have come in haste in answer to the invitation of the advance announcements of the new series of Flora Finch Comedies, according to a statement from the new Film Frohes Pictures Corporation, following the advertising campaign inaugurated during the last week of July.

Confidence in the big money-making possibilities of the new pictures is registered, by the many inquiries at the executive offices of the company at 1383 Broadway in Apollo Hall.

The title of the first release will be "His Better Half."

F. W. Salley Purchases New Territories

F. W. Salley, president of Salley Films, Inc., Marietta street, Atlanta, recently bought Robert McLaughlin's production of "The House Without Children," produced by Argus Enterprises, for Georgia, Alabama, Florida and Tennessee. His success in exploiting the picture has caused him to add the States of North and South Carolina to his original purchase, and he has engaged six salesmen to cover the territory.

Boston Firm Purchase "Fickle Women"

Joseph Klein, general manager of D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., announces that his company has disposed of the New England state rights on "Fickle Women," the company's first picture starring David Butler, to the Klein Distribution Co., 52 Church street, Boston.

"Voices" Has Fine Role for Diana Allen

"Voices" is said to be the picture that gives Diana Allen the greatest opportunity of her screen career, and that she made the best of it is evidenced by the favorite comment which has been excited in Victor Kremer offices by her work in this picture.

Miss Allen is not yet twenty-one and is handsome enough to be the cynosure of all eyes in any ballroom.

Educational Arranges Big Tie-Up with 15,000 Dealers for Display

PPROMISING a tie-up that for what is said to be the first time in film history will offer the local bookseller a certain profit and without the slightest cost to exhibitors, Educational Films Corporation announces that 15,000 dealers will this month herald in their windows that Sewell Ford's celebrated character, "Torchy," now lives in two reel comedies.

Seven "Torchy" volumes have been published by E. J. Clode and the eighth is soon to come from the press. The first six have been reprinted in popular editions by Grosset and Dunlap and it is with this firm that Educational has arranged the tie-up.

As the first step the publishers have dispatched to all their distributors in the United States and Canada 14 by 22 cards, printed in colors, which they request each bookstore to display. This card carries a reproduction of Educational's ad, on the first "Torchy" comedy which appeared in Motion Picture News, the remaining two-thirds of the space being devoted to emphasizing that "Torchy" is now in pictures and calling attention to the six volumes, "Torchy," "On With Torchy," "Trying Out Torchy," "Torchy, Private Sec.," "Wilt Thou Torchy" and "Torchy and Vee."

Accompanying these are full instructions for the tie-up and copies of the "Torchy" press books issued by Educational. This is done in order that the bookstores may know just what Educational is saying to exhibitors and that they may have the full plan before them before they are asked to order the volumes. Educational exchange managers will also distribute press books to every bookseller in their territories.

Take Scenes in San Diego

Master Pictures Uses Exposition
Grounds for Exteriors of Feature

MASTER PICTURES, INC., is now at work filming the exterior scenes of "Roman Candles," a seven-reel comedy, the third of a series of feature productions to be made by the company. Pending the completion of the new studios which Master Pictures is building in Los Angeles, the exterior scenes of "Roman Candles" are being filmed at the Exposition Grounds in San Diego which provide a suitable background for the South American atmosphere which the story calls for.

The new studios which are being erected in the heart of the film district, will, when completed, be a modernly equipped motion picture plant. They will be large enough to house fifteen separate producing units and it is planned to have that many companies working simultaneously within the next few months.

Master Pictures, Inc., was organized by a group of capable experts to handle the business affairs of the company and men of long experience in the motion picture business will supervise production activities. W. J. Conner, the president, is one of the organizers of the company and one of California's leading citizens. Assisting Mr. Conner in the financial details are B. A. Small and E. F. Wells.

W. S. Forsyth, identified with the picture industry since its birth, has been named vice president and general manager of production. As actor, director, exhibitor and distributor, Mr. Forsyth has for twenty years made a close study of conditions and is well qualified to assume the duties of his position. G. S. Mitchell has been named auditor and J. Frank Moore, business manager. As director of publicity and advertising, the company has secured the services of Edward J. O'Hara,

Willat Finishes Picture

First Independent Production
Ready for Hodkinson Release

IRVIN V. WILLAT, who directed "Behind the Door," and "Below the Surface," has completed his first independent production, "Down Home," which will be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in October.

"Down Home" is a pictured version of F. N. Westcott's book, "Dabney Todd," and to the making of the picture Mr. Willat has brought all his skill. It has been said that "Down Home," a rural screen drama, may create for itself a place in the cinema world to that which "Way Down East" occupies upon the speaking stage.

Rippling comedy, tense tragedy, swift-moving plot and counter-plot, —all are to be found in this great picture, it is claimed and it is further enriched by a strong love story. Incidentally, there is a fight the like of which it is said has rarely been seen upon the silver-sheet. Mr. Willat reports that the two principals therein were unable to respond to the call of "Camera" for four days after the screening of it.

A well balanced cast was assembled for the making of this production but as yet no information has been forthcoming as to just "Who's Who." It is said, though, that from the featured players to the lowest extra, each and every one was chosen by Mr. Willat personally.

To Make Industrial Film

Reelcraft to Use Chicago Studio for Industrials, Says R. C. Cropper

THE Reelcraft Pictures Corporation has assigned the Chicago Studio to the exclusive production of industrial films, for the present at least, according to the statement of President R. C. Cropper.

"Time was," says Mr. Cropper, "when Chicago was one of the foremost producing cities of the United States, with some of the largest companies and the best studios, all of which catered to the industrial and commercial films. With departure of these companies for the coast and the closing of their studios came the abandonment of the industrial branch of the business which they had built up. Now the two recognized companies remaining, are over-burdened with this work. Our Chicago studio has completed more industrial and commercial contracts within the past two months, than usually came to any one concern within a year, with the result that we have been forced to move all of our comedy units to the coast, and devote the entire Chicago studio and staff to the industrial films.

"Chicago has been the natural industrial center of the United States, and indications point to it remaining so, even in the matter of commercial movies. When first we ordered Reelcraft to produce the industrial films, we figured it only a temporary demand, but with each release, comes additional business until it has grown to be a tremendous item in our revenue. Therefore the Chicago studio will be devoted exclusively to this line of work for some time to come."

President Cropper has called a convention of Reelcraft exchange managers and salesmen to be held the present week at the Chicago office of Reelcraft.

Hemmer Finishes First

Studio Celebration Marks Completion of All Interior Scenes

FOR what is said to be the first time in the East, the completion of a motion picture was made the occasion of a studio celebration recently. The custom has prevailed in the West for a number of years but it is believed that this was the first one of its kind in New York.

The scene was the Benedict studios in College Point L. I., and the time the night of July 25th. The final interior scene of the first production of the Hemmer Superior Production, Inc. had just been filmed, and with the strain over, the director, technical experts and cast, proceeded to have a good time, just as if the eighteenth amendment did not exist.

In the extreme end of the studio a ballroom set had been erected that extended the width of the floor. A tiny stage housing the jazz band was correct to the smallest detail.

Streamers and bunting had been strung about and the scene resembled a gathering of the smart set in a Fifth avenue mansion.

Among those who attended were Harry Lenhardt, of Los Angeles, builder and owner of the Palace theatre of that city, Ted Hemmer, Henry Sedley and Col. Harry S. Howland. Maud Sylvester, ingenue of the company, made a pretty curtain speech in which she thanked all her well-wishers for their kindness. Thurston, the magician, entertained the assembly with some startling tricks, and ladies' stockings, lingerie, infants clothing, and live ducks were brought forth from the pockets of his victims.

H. Douglas Brown, vice-president of the company, and Secretary E. Earnest Grubb, were also in evidence.

Edna Shipman Cast for "The Foreigner"

Edna Shipman, under contract with the Legend Film Corporation to co-star with John Junior, in comedies written by Treve Collins, Jr., and to be directed by Teft Johnson, has been loaned by the Legend Film Corporation to the Winnipeg Productions, to play the part of "Irma" in "The Foreigner" by Ralph Connor.

Miss Shipman will return from Winnipeg, where "The Foreigner" is to be produced, about November 1st and will resume work for the Legend Film Company at that time. Her association with the Legend Film organization will be continuous despite her absence, as this company has arranged to keep her on its payroll in the interim.

Gibson Coming East to Sell Product

Tom Gibson producer of Eclipse Comedies on the Western Coast has left New York to arrange for the placing of his product on the market. Dan Crimmins, featured comedian in the producer's "Problems of the Potts Family," was so well liked in the role that many flattering offers for the entire fifty-two two-reelers were made by buyers on the Coast, but Mr. Gibson, who is in full charge of the production and distribution of the series desired to look over the New York market before closing.

Rights Sold on Harry Carey Westerns

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, announces that territorial rights on the series of two-reel Harry Carey Western pictures have been sold to the following concerns:

The Sterling Film Co., of Omaha, Neb.; The Standard Film Co., Kansas City, Mo.; The Standard Film Co., of St. Louis, Mo.; Strand Features of Detroit, Mich.; Savini Films, Inc., of Atlanta, Ga., and the Wilson Film Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Gibson Coming East to Release Comedies

Tom Gibson, author and producer of Eclipse Comedies featuring Dan Crimmins, left Los Angeles this week for New York with several sample prints of the comedies to negotiate for release for a series of thirteen or twenty-six. Gibson is well known in the comedy producing world of the west coast and has written stories and scripts for Christie and Universal and directed Gale Henry and other comedians, in addition to his more recent work with Eclipse.

Dead Men Tell No Tales

Fine Press Book Issued Nat Rothstein, of Joan Film, Produces Aid for "Invisible Ray"

THE cry for more and better exploitation that has been raging in the industry for years, and that has been the demand of states-rights buyers and exhibitors, is satisfied to overflowing by the Joan Film Sales Co's exploitation staff, headed by the veteran "stunt" instigator, Nat Rothstein, a man with a true showman's instinct, who is said to be responsible for some of the finest and most effective press-books and exploitation campaigns ever planned and issued on any picture.

For two months the exploitation staff of Joan has been plotting and planning. No stone was left unturned in their efforts to draw up material and ideas for the exhibitor to assure the success of "The Invisible Ray" serial—to pack his house with the least expense and effort on his part. The result, as shown in the thirty-odd stunts described and illustrated in the minutest detail are such that even the most critical and exacting of showmen will admit that the exploitation on "The Invisible Ray" is the greatest the most powerful and compelling that has ever been gotten up on any serial.

The point about the entire array of exploitation prepared on this serial is that the stunts described are remarkably inexpensive, considering the profits resulting from their use.

The press-book on "Invisible Ray" will be sent to any state-rights men who apply.

Picture Features Dancing Doraldina in "Woman Untamed" Reveals Personal Magnetism

PERHAPS few other pictures released in the past ten years has featured such dancing as is perpetuated by Doraldina in her latest production, which Elmer J. McGovern is releasing on the independent market. Her latest vehicle is "The Woman Untamed" and she is supported by such favorites as Dark Cloud, who has the wonderful part of the mysterious and savage "witch doctor," and Jay Morley, who is seen in the role of the young American sportsman who lands for a few hours of hunting on a cannibal island in the South Seas, an atmosphere made forever vivid and alluring by Robert Louis Stevenson and Jack London.

Doraldina as "Nosoni" and her manner of landing among the man-eating savages of this island and her strange influences over them paves the way to the heart of a strange romance. When a man-killing, first mate of a rum-laden death scullion ship sweeps the deck with mutiny and ruin, the one girl aboard chooses her chance with the cruel sea. While retribution stalks aboard the ship with its avenging flames, the girl makes the shores of a South Sea island where the savages at a religious feast have just been promised by their cannibal chief the appearance of Nosoni, goddess of the sea. Her arrival matches the high-pitched frenzy of the naked savages and to them she is a sacred thing, a splendid trophy of the sea, sent direct from the gods.

Lucy Cotton Filming at Stamford, Conn.

Lucy Cotton, Metro star, who will be seen in the title role of "The Misleading Lady," is in Stamford, Connecticut, on location where scenes are being shot for the production, which Metro expect to be one of the big sensations of their output the coming season.

"The Woman Untamed" Attracts Buyers

Buyers from many sections are reported to be attending the private screenings of "The Woman Untamed" at the projection room of the Joseph Miles studios, 130 West 46th street. This picture was produced by the Pyramid Photo Plays, Inc. It features Doraldina, the dancer who recently created a stir on Broadway. Her artistic dancing in this production is said to play a strong part in the logical advancement of the plot.

In connection with the advertising campaign for this picture, the announcement is made that Wm. J. Montgomery, who has been associated with the New York dailies for many years and who is a well-known newspaper artist, has been engaged to do all the art work. The Richey Lithograph Company are also reported to have turned out a list of attractive posters on this production, ranging from 1-sheet to 24. The dances, thrills and adventures of this South Sea Island picture are incorporated in these posters in an artistic manner, it is stated.

Anna Nilsson Guest of Sir Thomas Lipton

Anna Q. Nilsson was one of the fortunate ones to enjoy the distinction of a personal invitation from Sir Thomas Lipton to witness the international races from the deck of the baronet's private yacht, Victoria. According to Mayflower, the presence of the actress aboard the Victoria did much to dispel the disappointment incidental to the Shamrock's defeat on the part of the Resolute. One of the sources of diversion staged by the Mayflower player was a "mock marriage" at which Miss Nilsson was the "bride" and Lord Thomas DeWarr was the "groom." Sir Thomas officiated as "best man."

Equity Brings Returns in Oklahoma

In Oklahoma, exhibitors tell a tale of profitable summer business on Equity pictures. Mr. E. Wagner of the Quality theatre, Elk City, Okla., broke his house record with a two-day run on "For the Soul of Rafael," the "Eyes of Youth" filled the capacity of the Elk theatre at Duncan, and the biggest summer business ever done by the Glory B. theatre, Miami, came in during the run of "The Eyes of Youth" there; Hamley's theatre at Pauls Valley, reported a similar success with the same picture.

Silverman Joins 'Sales' Force of C. B. Price

Hyman Silverman has resigned his position as manager of the Public Projection Rooms, 729 Seventh avenue, to join the sales force of the C. B. Price Co., Inc., dealing in independent productions on the state right plan.

Mr. Silverman's four years in the public projection business has given him a wide acquaintance throughout the country among both producers and state right men. Also the foreign field has come in for his attention.

Ray Johnston, Arrow Film Executive

ONE of the few film executives who has had an important part to play in the building up of the independent field is W. Ray Johnston, vice-president of the Arrow Film Corporation. Mr. Johnston has been connected with Arrow practically from its inception and has probably had as much to do with the rapid growth of the independent business as any single factor in it.

Some ten years ago Ray Johnston became identified with the Thanhouser Film Company, and after a general experience in various departments of the business was appointed assistant treasurer and auditor, which position he held for several years. When Thanhouser opened up the Florida coast studio Mr. Johnston was appointed general manager and later assistant to the president. As studio manager he obtained a thorough knowledge of studio and laboratory work which experience has stood him in good stead in his present capacity with Arrow.

It is said that Mr. Johnston has had a practical experience in every branch of the motion picture industry. Thanhouser at one time appointed him general manager of theatres in order that he might learn the exhibiting end of the business. The knowledge obtained in this manner was worth much to the Thanhouser, and Mr. Johnston is using this knowledge to good advantage and for the benefit of the various exchanges now doing business with him.

As a rule, few men in the motion picture business are given the opportunity of learning more than one or two branches in the business and, therefore, it is seldom that any one man can be found who possesses a keen knowledge of practically every branch. In Mr. Johnston's case this does not exclude camera work, or even the art of make-up and posing before the camera. Although Ray Johnston is not yet thirty years of age, he has for the past seven or more years held an executive position in the film industry, and during all of this time his positions have been not only important but highly responsible ones. He has been connected with W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, all of this time, beginning at the time Mr. Shallenberger was connected with Thanhouser. He had much to do with the making and marketing of "The Million Dollars Mystery," and other productions that were fostered by Dr. Shallenberger.

In a recent interview, Mr. Shallenberger had this to say about Ray Johnston: "I don't know of a single man in the film industry that has had a more practical experience than W. Ray Johnston. I have known Mr. Johnston for over ten years when he came under my jurisdiction during the days of Thanhouser. I have watched his growth into popularity and influence and I think I can say without fear of contradiction that he is one of the most popular men in the industry. His wonderful disposition in the face of trying situations always has a salutary effect upon his client and upon our organization as a whole, and he is the most loved man, surely in the independent field, where he is better known, perhaps, than anywhere else.

"His experience, his methods of handling business and handling customers has much, indeed, to do with the rapid growth of Arrow, and there are many, many independent buyers who buy pictures repeatedly solely upon the judgment and say-so of Ray Johnston. I repeat, I don't know of a single man in this industry that knows more than Ray Johnston does about every angle of the business, which includes the making, marketing and exhibiting of pictures, laboratory work, financing, office detail and all other work that is required by a large organization in this business."

A scene from Monte Bank's comedy, "Nearly Married," distributed by Federated Film Exchanges

Federated Release Ready

Billy Rhodes and Splendid Cast Will be Seen in "Nobody's Girl"

IN order to acquaint independent exchange-men and exhibitors throughout the country with the general attractiveness of the Federated Film Exchange feature release the Federated New York office has offered for publication this week a brief outline of the story and the characters therein. As was announced Billy Rhodes is featured in "Nobody's Girl," the title of the release. Miss Rhodes will be remembered as a popular leading woman with Universal, Strand-Mutual and Christy comedies and who not so long ago made her debut as a dramatic star. In support of Miss Rhodes is Melbourne MacDowell, famous character actor of the stage and screen. Mr. MacDowell was at one time considered the most handsome man on the American stage and was the matinee idol for more than a score of years. Those of the older generation will remember him when he toured the country with Fanny Davenport, his wife, in the famous Sardou repertoire. He has been cast in leading parts in many successful screen productions in recent years.

Mary Alden and Lloyd Bacon are also cast in leading parts in "Nobody's Girl." Mary Alden has an enviable stage record, having played in several successful stock companies and with such players as Mrs. Fiske and Phillips Smalley. Her screen career is as brilliant as her stage career, having been cast in leading parts in such productions as "The Argyle Case," "The Land of Promise," "Comma Clay," "The Straight Path," "The Unpardonable Sin," "The Broken Butterfly" and in the recent Constance Binney production, "Erstwhile Susan." Lloyd Bacon has appeared in productions for Paramount, Arctcraft, Robertson-Cole and Fox.

The picture was directed by Francis Grandon and is said to contain many exceptional scenic shots. According to a statement from the Federated offices, the picture is replete with exploitation possibilities and the "Nobody's Girl" press book is said to contain complete details of these ideas. The release date has been set as the middle of August.

Arrow Film Corrects Report of Sale

Arrows Publicity Department wishes to correct a statement published in a trade journal of August 7 in regard to the purchase of "Woman's Man" "Love's Protege" in Minneapolis.

The article published stated that the First National had contracted for the two pictures, whereas the corrected statement is to the effect that the National Film Company of Minneapolis contracted for the two pictures named, in addition to the series of Hank Mann Comedies.

Pioneer Film Starts Re-Organization

The re-organization plans now under way at the headquarters of the Pioneer Film Corporation in New York will shortly be consummated and the expectations are that the results will represent one of the most rapid strides taken by this steadily growing motion picture enterprise.

New exchanges are now being established and the personnel at headquarters is being increased and experts in their respective lines are being added in an effort to give Pioneer not only increased prestige, but place it in a higher position with the leaders in the motion picture field.

Aywon Announces Some Coming Releases

The first of the several big features soon to be released by The Aywon Film Corporation will be "The Woman Above Reproach" in which the new "find" of Nathan Hirsh's, Florence Chase, will be starred, supported by a well selected cast.

Following the release of "The Woman Above Reproach" The Aywon Film Corporation will make available for exhibitors and State Rights buyers "The Evolution of Man," in which the marvelous Man-Ape, Jack, plays the leading role.

Aywon will also soon release "When Quackel Did Hide," the screaming travesty burlesque on "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." The travesty stars Charlie Joy of the Famous Joy Comedies. "The Charming Deceiver," a five-reel drama of a young girl that marries a man much older than herself, is also scheduled for early release by Aywon.

Rose Shulman Exploit "The Woman Untamed"

Miss Rose Shulman, who has been associated with Elmer J. McGovern during the past few years on such productions as "Mickey," the Wm. S. Hart features, Bessie Barriscale productions, "The Lost Battalion" and other state right features which were released on the independent market through W. H. Productions Co.; also recently on "Up in Mary's Attic," is now associated with Mr. McGovern on special publicity and exploitation on his own new super-production, "The Woman Untamed," featuring Doralinda.

Federated Announces Short Reelers

THE first announcement of any of the short reel subjects which will be handled by the Federated Film Exchanges of America is contained in the statement to the effect that Federated will distribute a series of eighteen Monte Banks comedies which are being produced by Warner Brothers. Several of the comedies have been completed and are now ready for distribution. Monte Banks is a clever comedian known for his original work. The announcement this week states that H. Raymaker is directing the comedies under the supervision of J. L. Warner. The comedies are being made on the West Coast. Monte Banks are two reels each. The first four have been titled and are announced by Federated as follows: "A Rare Bird," "His Naughty Night," "Nearly Married" and "A Bed Room Scandal."

W. E. Shallenberger, general manager of Federated, in making the announcement of the first short subject release, stated that the comedies were selected after an exhaustive study of the wants of the independent exchange-men and exhibitors in the comedy line. Monte Banks comedies, according to his statement, are the type that can be played most successfully as a series and are of exactly the type needed to balance a dramatic program.

Special attention is called, in the Federated statement, to the excellent line of lithographs prepared for the Monte Banks comedies. According to the Federated statement, an entirely new line-up of paper has been prepared and it is of a design almost entirely new in the screen comedy field.

Dana Back from Selling Trip

P. B. DANA, Arrow's sales manager, has returned from a four weeks' western trip during which time, it is said, he secured contracts for a large part of the country on many of the Arrow productions.

During his trip Mr. Dana visited all of the independent exchanges in Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Cincinnati.

In Minneapolis, Mr. Dana concluded what is said to be one of the biggest sales ever made in the independent field. This sale was closed with the National Film Company of Minneapolis of which company E. A. Kellett is manager. This sale was for the territory of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota.

In each of these cities, Mr. Dana says he found the independent exchange men all optimistic. He states that in many of the cities such as Kansas City, for instance, the various first run houses have not tied themselves up solid with any one company but are running pictures obtained from all of the various companies and that this gives the independent exchanges an opportunity of securing first runs whenever they have a picture that is big enough.

Mr. Dana is himself enthusiastic over the conditions of the film market.

"I found on my trip," he said, "that in every big city there are being built a number of new theatres which means that there is going to be a bigger and better field for the independent exchange men. With more theatres to play, the independent man has a better opportunity of selling his wares and at a good figure. I found also that the independent exchange men are using more discrimination in their buying than heretofore."

"Few of the independent exchanges," continued Mr. Dana, are handling cheap or re-issued offerings. None of the first-class independent exchanges are handling any re-issues or cheap pictures.

"The new possibilities in the motion picture field at this time is becoming more attractive every day to a large class of business men. I found on my trip no less than six new exchanges that have started up in the past few months. These men have been attracted to the independent field by the promising conditions that now hold forth. These men are all good business men who bring to the industry ability and brains that are sure to make them a success and place them in the foreground within a reasonable length of time."

While on his trip Mr. Dana disposed of a great part of the country on such pictures as "Woman's Man," "Love's Protege," "Before the White Man Came," "The Daughter of the Don," "The Chamber Mystery," "The Muriel Ostriche Comedies," "The Xlnt Comedies" and, "The Arrow Comedies," and a number of old features and short subjects.

Jack Hoxie Will Start New Serial Soon

As soon as Jack Hoxie finishes his current serial, "Thunderbolt Jack," for the Arrow Film Corporation he will commence at once on another western serial of the thriller type, according to William La Plante, studio manager for the Berwilla Film Corporation, producers of "Thunderbolt Jack."

Joe Brandt, eastern representative for Berwilla, will arrive on the west coast simultaneously with the beginning of the new serial and will personally supervise the arrangement of the production schedule, according to Mr. La Plante.

"His Pajama Girl" at Chicago Theatres

The C. B. Price Co., Inc., special production, "His Pajama Girl," starring Billie Rhodes was given a prelease presentation at the Band-box theatre, Chicago. Following this showing it appears at the Ziegfeld theatre on Michigan Boulevard, another downtown house.

Pioneer to be Represented in Milwaukee

In keeping with plans for the invasion of the important points throughout the country, the Pioneer Film Corporation will now be represented in Milwaukee, through arrangements having been completed whereby the Greater Stars Productions of Chicago will handle all the Pioneer features from now on.

BRUNTON

CONTRACTS recently made by Robert Brunton provide that this producer shall make three star productions in addition to the all star features he recently contracted to make. Dustin Farnum will be starred in the Ridgewell Cullins novel "The Trail of the Axe," under the direction of Ernest C. Warde and Fritzie Burnett will in all probability be Farnum's leading woman.

Another production will star Ruth Roland in the Arthur Preston Hawkins story "The Honey-moon Quest" which will shortly be put in production. This subject will consist of five reels and will be Miss Roland's initial subject of this character.

The third Brunton production is to be a serial starring Charles Hutchinson under the direction of W. S. Van Dyke.

E. P. Hunziker, general manager of the Dial Film company went to New York this week with negative and sample print of "The Tiger's Coat" made under the direction of Roy S. Clements. This subject features Myrtle Stedman, Lawson Butts and Tina Mendotti. While in the east Mr. Hunziker will complete plans for future productions with Dial company. The third production is shortly to be started by Director Clements.

Benjamin A. Prager, president of the Mayflower Pictures Corporation arrived at the offices of the company at Brunton studio this week for a stay of several months during which time future production plans of this company will be made. Production will be renewed shortly by all units of Mayflower.

The Betty Compson company, directed by Arthur Rosson, is working at Oxnard this week making Egyptian desert episode scenes.

The B. B. Hampton company will begin filming within a few days of "The Spenders" from the Harry Leon Wilson novel of the same name and plans made known at the Hampton offices are to the effect that this company will shortly have three producing units at work.

Charles Edward Russell, sociologist, economist and writer of a number of books on these subjects is to write original photoplays for B. B. Hampton dealing with new phases of American life including women in politics. Russell was commended by President Wilson for his fight against factions of the Socialist party who did not approve of the government's action during the recent war, and as a result was appointed to several positions by President Wilson. Recently he has been in the public eye as a member of the Industrial Relations Commission.

TOURNEUR

THE first offering of Maurice Tourneur from the newly formed Associated Producers will be "The Last of the Mohicans" adapted from the James Fenimore Cooper story that has lived for more than a century. Cast has already been selected for this production which is to be an early fall release and this is headed by Barbara Bedford. Lillian Hall is to appear in an important role, Albert Roscoe takes the title role and other players are Jack McDonald, Nelson McDowell and Omar Whitehead.

Producer Tourneur has engaged Wyndthrop Kelly to act as director of one of his companies succeeding Jack Gilbert who has gone east to direct Hope Hampton. Kelly arrived from New York this week and will begin work for Tourneur in the very near future.

The title "Seven Years Bad Luck" has been selected for the first Max Linder feature comedy which has been filmed at the Maurice Tourneur stages at Universal City.

ROBERTSON-COLE

THE first of the Pauline Fredricks productions for Robertson-Cole is nearing completion in charge of Henry Otto who is responsible for its production. This subject was filmed at the Lois Weber studio.

John G. Adolphi and Joe Farnum arrived in Los Angeles this week to produce a series of pictures for Robertson-Cole starring Mac

Marsh. Adolphi will be in charge of direction and he will have collaboration of Farnum in preparation of scripts. Production plans have not been definitely decided upon.

F. P.-LASKY

VICE PRESIDENT JESSE L. LASKY arrived at the Hollywood studios this week for a stay of several months. Mr. Lasky has held a number of conferences with heads of the production departments and is to make statements to the press within a few days concerning the producing activities of the western plant.

Thomas Melghan is on his way to the coast to play the lead in "Easy Street" which is to be directed by Tom Forman. Betty Ross Clarke who played an important role in "Romance" and is to be seen in the Arbuckle feature "The Traveling Salesman" has been engaged to play opposite the heavyweight in his coming production "Brewster's Millions."

Monte Blue has been called to the eastern Famous-Players Lasky studio where he will be featured in "The Kentuckian." Bert Daws assistant director and Flaxon Dean, who has been working with Charles Maighn at the eastern Famous-Players-Lasky studios has been brought to the coast and will be assigned to a producing unit here.

FOX

A STUNT scene requiring a rosette to be shot off of a leather wristlet while on the arm of Buck Jones caused an accident this week when the horse on which Jones was sitting moved at the instant the shot was fired. The bullet passed a quarter of an inch lower than expected burrowing through the flesh of the actor's arm and barely missing an artery. The wound will delay production for a week or more but "Sunset Sprague" will be finished on schedule time regardless of the accident. "Joan of Rainbow Springs" from the book by Frances Marion Mitchell has been selected as the next story for Shirley Mason and continuity has been prepared by Mildred Considine. Edward J. LeSaint is to direct the making of this production, Raymond McKee will be the leading man and other principals are Martha Mattox, Cecil Van Auler and Al Frenont.

Hampton Del Ruth is now selecting cast for his next comedy feature and production of this is scheduled to begin next week.

J. Gordon Edwards who has been east is expected to return to the Los Angeles Fox studio within the next few days to make plans for a big special production.

GOLDWYN

DIRECTOR CLARENCE B. BADGER is in San Francisco selecting locations for the next Will Rogers subject "The Guile of Women" and Rogers is at Cheyenne to attend the annual Rodeo at which he will take part in a number of riding and roping contests.

Sylvia Ashton has been loaned to Goldwyn to play the leading feminine role in "Canavan" which will star Tom Moore in the role of an Irish white wing.

The next of the Edgar series being directed by E. Mason Hopper has been put in production and will be titled "Edgar's Camping Out."

UNIVERSAL

THE Universal statistician sums up the activities of the U lot—three feature companies launching production this week, one in cutting room, six feature companies in production, two serials, and three short subject companies at work.

Six weeks have been required by the Tod Browning company for the filming of the interior scenes of a San Francisco apartment house setting for the Fricilla Dean feature "Outside the Law" and Director Tod Browning now has a company at work on a gigantic ball room set in which more than three hundred dancers are taking part.

Director Norman Dawn and cameraman are home after spending two weeks in New Orleans where they took a number of atmospheric scenes for "Wild Youth" from the romance of that name by Clara Barenge and Forest Hawley which Director Allan Hullubar, Dorothy Phillips (Mrs. Hullubar) and company on location while filming "Man, Woman and Marriage," in which Miss Phillips is starred and to be distributed by First National has been picturized by George C. Hull.

A big New England village set has been erected for "Out of the Sky," which is being directed by Reeves Eason with Gladys Walton and Jack Perin as co-stars.

The company producing "Sundown Slim," directed by Val Paul and starring Harry Carey is back from three weeks on the Mojave desert. While there they experienced some extremely hot weather and it was necessary to keep ice bags on the camera magazine to insure perfect film.

Three important players have been added to the cast for "Kate Plus 10" being produced by Stuart Paton and which will serve to introduce Eva Novak as Universal's newest star. The additional players are Harry Carter, George Cheesbro and Frank Clarke all of which are well known.

Not less than four big sets have been completed and are awaiting the action for exterior and interior scenes for "Foolish Wives," an all-star sequel to "Blind Husbands." A number of scenes on location have already been made for this play which is to be another Von Stroheim special.

Universal this week sent director J. P. McGowan and Eddie Polo with a number of the members of the company to Denver to secure circus scenes during the engagement of the Robinson circus in that city. These will be used for the serial "The King of the Circus."

Production was started by director Rolin Sturgeon this week on the second Carmel Myers picture "The Gilded Dream" and the entire organization for "White Youth" to be directed by Norman Dawn will be assembled this week.

Director Horace Davies is editing and titling the comedy featuring Baritone Burckett, titled "Too Many Crooks" and director Harry Edwards is at work on filming "Is Your Wife Black?" with the same star.

Gus F. Holmes, a millionaire mining man with interests in Arizona and Mexico, is serving the Universal as sub-title writer for the films made by William Stowell and director Livingston who were killed in South Africa. The scenes being edited by Holmes are those of the Johannesburg gold mine, all data for which was lost in the train wreck in which the two men met their death.

METRO

PRODUCTION work on the big Metro special "The Four Horsemen" is going forward without delays. A big historical ranch containing many acres and lying but a short distance from Los Angeles has been leased for many of the South American scenes in the big play. The ranch is ideal for these locations as the buildings on it are said to be more than a hundred years old and of the exact type of those to be seen in South America during the period of the story. The ranch is used for sheep and cattle and flocks of a thousand or more will serve in the picture. At the studio sets for this production are being built and Director Rex Ingram expects to be at work at the studio within the next two weeks after finishing the South American episodes. Alice Terry and Rudolph Valentino are the leads.

Metro is to bring out a film drama that will not have a villain, the original story and script having been prepared by Luther Reed who recently became a member of the Metro scenario staff. The Reed story will have an all-star cast and is to be directed by Philip Rosen who recently completed the making of the May Allison subject "Are All Men Alike?" Cleo Madison who played in the Bert Lytell picture "The Price of Redemption" has been selected as the heroine for this story and the only other member of the cast named to date is Helen Weer who has played with a number of western companies as well as in New York.

The Mrs. Humphrey Ward story "The Marriage of William Ashe" has been put in continuity by Ruth N. Baldwin a new member of the Metro staff and it will serve as the coming vehicle for May Allison under the direction of Edward Sloman. This story was used for a play in which Grace George was starred.

J. PARKER READ

THE J. Parker Read production from the Stuart Edward White novel "The Leopard Woman" will be the first release made by Associated Producers, according to statement issued in Los Angeles this week. "The Leopard Woman" is nearing completion under the direction of Westley Ruggles and is different from most productions in that it has but three principals, the roles being taken by Louise Glaum, House Peters and Nobel Johnson who appears as a giant nubian.

1st NATIONAL

THE Allan Holubar-Dorothy Phillips company filming "Man, Woman and Marriage" is this week working in the most expensive setting which is a reproduction of one of the most elaborate homes in Pasadena. It being impossible to secure proper lighting facilities at the Pasadena mansion Producer Holubar reproduced the interior of the home at the Hollywood studios and induced the millionaire owner to lend his furniture for the making of scenes in this setting. The action in this setting requires a banquet served in the style in vogue in biblical times but the feast lasted for several days longer than any bible time feast on record.

scenes for the new production this week in San Gabriel canyon and at the same time the "Hidden Danger" serial company co-starring Joe Ryan and Jean Page celebrated the completion of their fifteen episode work by a dinner at the Los Angeles Athletic Club when general manager W. S. Smith of western Vitagraph studios was host. Future plans for this company are to be announced shortly and it is understood that William Bertram will continue as director.

The other activities of Vitagraph this week include those of the three comedy companies and the Antonio Moreno serial organization.

Douglas Girard has been engaged by Metro to direct the first Dordalino subject "Passion Fruit" and this week left with the company for Monterey, California, where a number of the exteriors are to be made. Edward Lowe, Jr., is responsible for this scrip adapted from the story by Carey Wilson. Complete cast for this subject includes Tooty Marshall playing the role of the leper, Noah Beery as the brutal plantation overseer, Edward Earle as leading man, Florence Turner as a half-breed native woman and Edward Jobson in the character role.

Cast is being selected for the next Viola Dana picture that is to be made by Dallis Fitzgerald and in this Wallace McDonald is to be principal support. The play selected is "Cinderella's Twin," an original photoplay by Luther Reed. At the present time director Fitzgerald and Miss Dana are working on the final scenes for "Blackmail," the Lucia Chamberlain melodrama.

Alice Lake is to have a new leading man in the person of William Lawrence in her next play, "Body and Soul." Lawrence is a former leading man of the coast whose most recent engagement was with Mildred Harris Charlton in "Habit." This William Hulbert subject has been adapted for the screen by Mark Robbins and Hayden Talbot and Charles Swickard is in charge of direction.

Two new members have been added to the Nazimova cast for "Mme. Peacock" from the story by Rita Weiman. John Stepping, who has played in the three most recently made Nazimova subjects, will enact the role of stage manager and William Orlamond will play an important character role.

The first original play for the screen for Metro by Bayard Veiller has been completed and titled "He Tried to Be King," which is now being put in continuity form by Albert Shelby LeVino. Mr. Veiller has other original stories written, which are titled "To Catch a Thief" and "Twice One Is Two."

The Metro scenario staff has moved to its new quarters in the buildings specially erected which are to be the permanent home of this department. Metro now has one of the largest organizations on the coast. The continuity writers now

From Small "Bits" to Stellar Roles

Robert Gordon

THE first recognition of talent ever bestowed upon Robert Gordon was an assignment by Cecil B. DeMille, who chose the slender, unassuming boy out of the ranks of "extras," for a "bit" in "Joan, the Woman."

No one had ever taken any notice of the youngster, who, upon the surface, displayed no particular mark of talent or aptitude. Nevertheless, in the master-director's next picture "The Little American," Robert Gordon appeared among those present again, this time in a part of considerable more prominence.

Deeply impressed with the encouraging knowledge that the great director evidenced rays of hope by casting Gordon in two of his pictures, the aspirant continued to work slowly in his chosen profession.

One day a casting director sent Gordon to Mr. Morosco. The result was an engagement for the role of "Tennessee Shad" in "The Varmint." Realizing the opportunity to put his long smothered ability into action Robert Gordon worked like a Trojan. Upon the strength of it he was retained for a second Morosco production, starring Jack Pickford. That picture was the means of Bob's sudden leap to fame—screen dramatization of Mark Twain's unrepentable "Tom Sawyer" and the sequel "Huck and Tom."

In rapid succession followed "The Hired Man" with Charles Ray; "Blue Blazes Rawden" with Bill Hart; "Proxy" opposite Mildred Davis in a Mutual comedy, then "The Beast of Berlin."

About this time Robert Gordon commenced to feel an increasing respect for the ability of Mr. DeMille to "pick 'em." Three companies were bidding for his services. After "Missing" with Mary Pickford, his work having become a subject of discussion in film circles, he was again afforded the proud privilege to live up to the opinion of the first director who had introduced him to a "bit," then to a "part."

At double the money he had ever previously commanded, upon his discharge from the army, Mr. Gordon played with Bessie Love in a production for Vitagraph, followed by his contract with Commodore J. Stuart Blackton to co-star in Blackton pictures among them "The Moonshine Trail," "Dawn," "Respectable by Proxy" and "The Blood Barrier." He was then loaned to Vitagraph for a picture with their delightful star, Alice Joyce, terminating in his success in "Dollars and the Woman" and in "The Vice of Fools," soon to be released.

The gradual rise to screen fame, has, in the case of Robert Gordon, been an interesting procedure. There was no inherited dramatic instinct, no foundation for his chosen profession. He was born in a little village of Arkansas; hailing from a family who marvel at their theatrical relative.

"I have always been a follower of the screen," explained Mr. Gordon when asked how he drifted into the profession of motion picture acting. "It was not based upon anything in particular except my honest admiration for the screen. I knew little and (whisper it) cared little about individual players, 'who's who' in the silent and spoken drama, to which I devote considerable interest today, but I guess I was 'screen struck.'"

Recently Mr. Gordon was forced to jump into a car waiting for him at the Vitagraph studio, which contained a bag packed at home, and removing his make-up on the way to the train, catch the locomotive which bore him to Ithaca, New York, location of the play in which he is featured by a new producing company, the Cayuga, in their initial offering of the working title "Three Women Loved Him."

It is said, by those handling Mr. Gordon's "fan" letters that "Three Thousand" would be the more appropriate title, so rapidly has the rising young artist become a leading attraction in screen plays.

Film Advantages in England

By Leslie Goodwins

FOR an American company who is willing to put up the necessary money, there is a wonderful opening at this moment. Consider the state of the money-exchange to-day. For every pound you wish to place in England it will cost you $3.80 as against $4.80 normal. There alone you effect a saving of 20%, a goodly figure when considering the large amount to be expended. Let us assume you have your money in England at this rate of exchange. The next thing is the studio. Now the labour situation in England is bad, worse perhaps than it is here. But that should not affect you. Labor in England is much cheaper than here. To quote one instance, carpenters in England have fixed a union rate of two shillings (40c) per hour, (compare that with what you are paying), and a minimum of a 48-hour week. (Working out at $19.20 per week). Now, for three shillings an hour you can obtain all the carpenters in England, (and on the same basis that works out at $28.20 per week). So you see labor is no factor to be considered.

Next for a site. There are any number of sites around London I have noted, all within 45 minutes of the center of London, for London has a wonderful railway and subway service, better than anything you have here. The cost would probably be high, land being expensive near London, but not prohibitive, and you must always consider the money-exchange question as so much in your favor.

The next factor to be considered is staff, and for this the best method would be to take over a camera-man, director, studio-manager, art director, casting director, and head carpenter. For the rest of the staff you may rely on England having what you need, for the studio staffs there are good as regards their work, and efficient.

With regard to artists, as a general rule, I found that the position was this. The men were good, and the women fair. So therefore you may count on England for supplying artists for crowds and most of the parts. There is one agent in London, Sidney Jay, who has every artist in London on his books, and they are all artists and not merely film-struck males and females, as I found was the case in some places.

The next advantage is the number of old buildings England possesses the like of which could never be found in America, and could never be built in a studio in all their gorgeous old settings. England is full of beautiful old houses, churches, castles, country seats, and buildings of every description, set in the most wonderful surroundings, and the majority of them have never been filmed.

Film Advantages in England, by Leslie Goodwins

Next, you have the advantage of being on the spot, if you are filming stories laid in England, and there are many such stories as yet unfilmed. It is hopeless to try to film a story, laid in London, in a Los Angeles studio. I have just seen a wonderful story of a London slum child, made in America, and, as a result of its being made here, it is too humorous for words. It contains a coster's outing, (a typical London scene), London policemen, London streets, a Cockney street dance, and a London slum. Everything was incorrect! To myself, born in London, the whole thing was a farce!

Another advantage we have is our scenery. You have wonderful scenery here, but not of the same type as the English. Then again, you are only a day's journey from all the scenery of France and all Europe, which has its advantages should you be filming a French story. And that, in turn, gives you a command of the libraries of a dozen nations, all of them within a two day's trip of England, at the outside.

Well, American Producer, there is your golden opportunity. Any further thing you are interested in with regard to the same matter, I'll be glad to tell you, if you write care of "Motion Picture News."

Is Striking Popular Chord

Selection of Past Stage Success Meets Public's Demand, Says Kane

THE Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation states that unusual interest is being displayed in the production of "Twin Beds," the Carter De Havens' starring vehicle to be released through First National. This interest Mr. Kane interprets as an indication that the selection of literary and dramatic works of established reputation for screen adaptation is striking a popular chord in the public mind. The following statement has been issued in connection with the screen version of the Selwyn comedy:

"Latest reports from Los Angeles are to the effect that the production is well advanced and is progressing most encouragingly. Persons not in the motion picture industry, yet well acquainted with its great successes, who have been permitted to visit the De Haven studios during the picture-taking, are predicting that the picturization of this comedy will be one of the great successes of the winter season. Meanwhile, though the release by First National is yet months in the future, demands for exhibition rights already are being made and prospective exhibitors are even now drawing plans for ambitious exploitation projects.

"When announcement was made that Mr. and Mrs. De Haven, in the face of spirited competition, had obtained the picture rights to this play, there was general approval, in which the authors of the play joined, for everyone regarded these two great funmakers eminently equipped for the interpretation of the stage piece for film presentation. The popular approval was heightened when it became known that the De Havens had selected for their supporting cast such favorites as William Desmond, Helen Raymond, Katherine Lewis, William J. Irving and Lottie Williams."

Gaston Glass Happy at Adverse Criticism

Gaston Glass is the young French actor who was selected for the title role of "The Foreigner," the first of a series of twelve stories by Ralph Connor to be dramatized for the screen. One screen critic in a slightly adverse criticism of a recent production flattered Mr. Glass, as no other had done, by mistaking him for an American. The comment, "Gaston Glass scored in the role of the young Spanish poet, despite the fact that he is obviously an American," delighted the youthful Frenchman.

Geo. Beranger for Judicial Economics

"THERE is one subject of common interest to the producer, the director and the exhibitor, that of judicial economics," was the passing remark of George A. Beranger, when caught in a whirl of "shop talk" recently. And, what he said upon the subject in addition to the statement was indeed enlightening and verified the suspicion that the actor-Griffith-made-director learned, among other things from his tutor, to devote a great deal of serious thought to subjects, the affinities of his chosen profession.

"For the producer of motion pictures there is as much reason for sitting to the bottom what appears to him as an appalling expenditure of money, with a view to devising a way of reducing it, should his investigation prove that there is undue carelessness, as there was for that campaign of cooperation against waste of foodstuffs, prevalent during the war. Waste destroys the greatest possibilities of production in the making of motion pictures, the same as in any other industry, if the money is not spent judiciously, it is wasted!"

Mr. Beranger is the young Australian, who at one time assisted D. W. Griffith in the making of his most celebrated features, finally earning a place upon the Griffith directorial staff.

"The accepted reason for the increased cost of production is an erroneous belief that the public is altogether responsible. The public only reflects a demand created by competition among producers. One started securing players of heralded talent, spending more money to obtain realism, combining these with stories from the pens of celebrities of the literary world. In time these individual efforts of one producer to outdo another brought competition to a boiling point and unconsciously created a restless demand on the part of the public for more talented players, more beautiful photography, actual locales and directors who had sufficient dramatic instinct and training to enable them to turn out better finished products. These, in turn, increased the cost of production until now it has become a subject upon which there is a need for cooperative concentration on the part of the producer, the director and the exhibitor. One is as eager as the other to reduce the gigantic expenditures, and each looks to the other to recommend a way."

"The solution is simple and obvious. The practice of it will eventually make possible more effective pictures for a less amount of money than recent conditions have allowed, but it will require absolute cooperation between three vital consorts based upon a well founded confidence, each in the other. Without it there is no possible means of preventing waste of money and disappointing returns for funds invested."

"It is not how much a production costs as how judiciously the money invested is spent which secures the ultimate delivery of satisfactory goods," said Mr. Beranger, and bringing the subject closer to himself he said that the director should be equipped to shoulder the responsibility of judiciously distributing an appropriation, having agreed upon a sum sufficient to meet requirements, about the same way that an advertising manager selects the mediums which in his opinion, will reach the largest amount of prospective buyers. Again, Mr. Beranger believes that the result obtained rather than the amount of money invested is what depends upon judicious economics, of equal interest to the producer, the director and the exhibitor."

The career of this young and rapidly rising director was interrupted while he availed with the British Air Forces during the world war.

ants who were selected in a recent contest during the showing of the company's initial film in Los Angeles.

Sets are now being constructed for the new production at the coast studio at Santa Monica, California.

Sam Rork head of the Katharine MacDonald company has engaged Howard Gay to play one of the important roles in "The Second Latchkey," now being made under the direction of Edwin Carewe, which stars Miss MacDonald.

Ben Wilson, head of the Berwillia Film Corporation, returned here from a brief trip east this week and is to resume production activities immediately, which will consist of the making of a five reel production co-starring Wilson and Eva Gerber which is to be a vacation for the two famous serial players, as Wilson will resume the making of serials immediately following completion of the feature. The story selected is an original one by Joe Gerber which is to be a vacation for it and will appear in the film as heavy.

The Thew-Martin Film Company officers have changed the plans of the company and "Anthony Trent, Master Criminal" is to be made a five reel feature instead of a serial. This subject is being directed by Duke Warren and Billy Rhodes and Truman Van Dyke are leads.

Hugh Hoffman has been assigned to the work of preparing continuity for the remaining episodes of "Thunderbolt Jack" serial featuring Jack Hoxie and Marin Sais.

Of Mutual Interest

It has frequently happened that important business has been lost to a motion picture laboratory because its Staff Experts were apparently too busy to give proper consideration to the tentative plans of a prospective patron.

The Staff Experts of the Republic Laboratories, acting on the assumption that the business of any one seeking information is always likely to be worth while, are eager to listen attentively to its presentation and to render an opinion and assistance in accordance with their experience with modern laboratory problems in similar cases.

Heating and Ventilating the Motion Picture Theatre

Side Wall Introduction Methods

Another method which is quite common and which is less expensive than the floor introduction is shown in the accompanying diagram. This may be termed the side wall introduction method. However, about 75 per cent of the air for the first floor should be introduced through large registers at the front of the stage or screen end of the theatre wherever possible. The remainder should be admitted through the side wall register as near the stage end as possible. The same holds true for the balcony, that is, the air should be admitted as near the stage end as possible and should be removed at the back end. This insures a slight motion of air backward and a slight air motion which can be felt against the face is pleasant. Any perceptible velocity in the opposite direction, toward the stage end, would be very objectionable because it is felt on the back of the head and neck and causes immediate complaints.

The supply apparatus used for this type of installation is identical with that used on the floor introduction system, namely: tempering coils, air washer, reheating coils, fan, and motor; together with automatic temperature control.

The air should be removed at the back or entrance end of the theatre by the use of electric propeller fans that discharge through the entrance or through the short duct systems to the outside. The velocity of the air through the free area of the registers on the supply system should be about 400 feet per minute. This should be varied some with the height of the registers above the floor. The velocity through the outlet which connects to the fan should not exceed 1,500 ft. per minute. This insures against a noisy fan and duct system, which are two big trouble factors in theatre ventilation. Only in exceptional cases should these velocities be exceeded.

About the cheapest system that will give reasonably satisfactory results is one of the side-wall introduction systems, designed the same as the one which has been described but omitting the air washer and exhaust fans. The distribution is not as good and the air is neither cleaned, cooled, nor humidified, therefore some of the most important features have been omitted.

General

Advantages of Direct Radiation

The installation of sufficient steam radiators or direct radiation to warm up the vestibules and theatre building proper before a performance, is important. These radiators should be controlled automatically so that they will close-off when the building has been heated to a temperature of seventy degrees. Considerable saving in coal results where automatic control is used, since the heat given off by the occupants is sufficient to keep the building at a comfortable temperature once it is occupied. The main function of these radiators, however, is to warm the building without running the fan. The radiators, of course, can be supplied from the same boiler used for supplying the tempering and reheating coils.

Where Space Is Limited

It is not possible to install such systems as have been described in every theatre, due to the lack of space. This is particularly true of old buildings. In such cases the system must be designed as well as possible to suit the given conditions. This necessitates various combinations of supply and exhaust systems. The supply fan in such cases is usually placed under the first floor of the building near the entrance or street end, as more available space is usually found here. The supply air is admitted through side wall registers. It is difficult to install these registers near the stage, however, due to the ungainly ap-

Chandler—The new Chandler theatre is rapidly nearing completion. The total cost of the building is about $35,000 and has a seating capacity of 600 persons. Mr. Will Menhennett is owner of the theatre.

ARKANSAS

El Dorado—Plans have been announced for a new $75,000 motion picture theatre which will be erected this summer. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 750. L. B. Clark is manager of the company.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

Vancouver—Plans for the remodeling and enlargement of the Avenue theatre at the corner of Main and Georgia streets are being prepared by Mr. Franklin Cross, 415 Credit Foncier Building.

CALIFORNIA

Martinez—Bids will be received shortly by J. J. McNamara for the construction of a $100,000 theatre building to be erected on property at the corner of Ferry and Ward streets. The new theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,000 and will be constructed of reinforced concrete.

Salinas—Bids are being prepared for the construction of a new T and D theatre with a seating capacity of 1,400 persons. Total cost to be $135,000. The architect is A. W. Cornelius, San Francisco.

San Francisco—Herbert L. Rothchild of the California theatre is to wreck the Portola theatre and to put up a new theatre on the same lot. T. W. Lamb of New York is the architect.

Redondo—The Venice Investment Company is to occupy the building of the Casino Cafe and will call it "The California." The structure will be practically rebuilt in order to accommodate the theatre.

CONNECTICUT

Ansonia—Mr. B. N. Beard has purchased property on the southerly side of Bridge street for the erection of a modern fireproof motion picture theatre.

Waterbury—Plans have been prepared by F. A. Webster for alterations to the Lyric theatre on South Main street for Sirica Brothers.

Paterson is to Be Presented Soon with Fine Million Dollar Picture Theatre

W. T. Fanning, Paterson, N. J., Architect, Commissioned to Draw Up Plans for Adams Brothers' House

THE Adams Brothers, of the City of Paterson, proprietors of the U. S. theatre in that city, have completed all arrangements to erect one of the most handsome and complete moving picture theatres in Newark. The site selected is near the Four Corners, on Broad street, between the Kinney Building and the plot on which the new Globe Building is being erected at the Mechanic street corner. The site includes the Macknet and Doremus properties. Plans for the theatre have been completed by William T. Fanning, the well known Paterson architect. Its dimensions will be about 50 x 200 feet and the seating capacity about 2,000. In addition to the main floor it will have a balcony. The building will be of fireproof construction and have an ornamental front of granite, limestone and terra cotta.

Judging from the enviable record made by the Adams Brothers in Paterson, it is safe to say that they will repeat their former successes of the Silk City. To afford all readers an opportunity to fully appreciate the magnificence of this proposed structure, we show on the cover a photo reproduction taken from the plans.

The next all important question which will naturally arise in the minds of all readers is, who are the Adams Brothers? In the month of October, 1909, they first entered into the motion picture business. It was in a small way and they opened their first theatre called the "Paterson Show," with a seating capacity of 500, right opposite the Paterson City Hall.

The motion picture form of entertainment was then in its infancy. However, as each film was put on the market showing advanced improvements, the Adams Brothers were quick to grasp the opportunity to secure them for their patrons. The public began to realize that they were workers, and produced the best then on the market, hence the patronage given them.

They continued to manage this Show up until June 1, 1918. However, previous to the latter date, Peter A. Adams, always on the lookout to carry out his ambitious schemes of further advancement, got his opportunity when the Paterson Opera House on Main Street was burned down in December, 1914. He then got into touch with the owner, Mr. Frank Bell, president of the Citizens Trust Company, and succeeded in securing the ground of the once famous opera house, that during its career was honored by the greatest men and women, both theatrical, professional and political. Presidents, governors and stars of the stage appeared on its boards, and having secured it, he at once began the erection of what is now known as the United States Playhouse. It is undoubtedly the finest and best equipped theatre in Paterson.

Only the best in the film world is featured at this theatre, and with its 2,000 seating capacity is taxed to its limits at each performance. Service of the highest grade is given the public, and being ever ready to appreciate honest efforts, it reciprocates with a cordial cooperation. This brief outline in a measure gives a comprehensive insight into the activities of these brothers. The city of Newark will be happy in the possession of such representative citizens who believe in the philosophy that "progress is the law of life."

ried out. Flowers have also been placed in the lighting fixtures on the ceiling.

One of the talked of features added is the costuming of the usherettes who are wearing neat and cool-looking summer gowns, no two of which are alike. They also have attractive though inexpensive summer hats, and the only way a visitor to the theatre can tell they are employees of the house is that they carry a flash light to aid in seating the people.

Solves Problem of Shallow Stage

THE problem of stage decoration is not an exceedingly difficult one at a motion picture theatre that has a regulation size stage. In a theatre built on the order of the Butterfly, Milwaukee, however, stage decoration calls for long and serious thought. With his screen set on a stage but 15 feet deep Manager Leo Landau secured some pleasant effects in decorating the stage of the Butterfly theatre. Using light lavender, blue and gold as his color scheme, Manager Landau secured a most pleasing effect in stage draperies. The entire set with the exception of the two wall panels is of silk. On either side are placed translucent urns illuminated from within and holding imitation flowers of pink. Because of the shallowness of the Butterfly stage the screen is hung directly back of the silk curtains and entertainers give their acts in front of the closed curtains. The photograph on the opposite page gives some idea of the setting and shows the symphony orchestra of twenty-two pieces.

Loew to Build Theatre in Niagara Falls

Marcus Loew will build a new theatre in Niagara Falls. The Loew Niagara Falls Theatre, Inc., has been incorporated at Albany. Mr. Loew and J. S. Madill of Toronto will be the outside directors and Niagara Falls business men will make up the remainder of the directorate. Partly by purchase and partly by option, a site has been secured with an entrance in Third street, midway between Niagara and Little Fourth street, leading to the theatre proper in Little Fourth street. Plans for the house have been prepared by Thomas W. Lamb of New York and the contract will be awarded immediately. The house will seat 2,000 persons on one floor and the cost will be in the neighborhood of $350,000. Part of the stock will be sold in the Cataract City.

Special Orchestra, New Decorations and Usherettes Make Appearance at Victory

Remodelled Los Angeles Theatre Shows Results of Wenzel's Experience and Skill

RELIEVING the tempo of dramatic subjects or the feature of a program can be made more pleasing with an orchestra specializing on music suitable for subjects of that character has lead Arthur S. Wenzel to introduce the second orchestra at the Victory theatre, Los Angeles. One orchestra is maintained solely to play the incidental music necessary for comedies, weeklies and short subjects in which jazz music is most appropriate. The second orchestra plays the feature only. Each orchestra consists of eight people, and the program is so arranged that they alternate every hour and a quarter.

This is but one of the innovations introduced since Wenzel took over the management of the Victory about four weeks ago. Decorators have been working nights in refinishing the interior of the theatre, making it one of the coziest in Los Angeles. To properly celebrate the completion of this work, Manager Wenzel has arranged for a reopening week even though the theatre has not been closed. The new decoration scheme does away with the dark walls which he believes made the theatre gloomy. Warm lighting effects have been added, and artificial flowers, attractive drapes and novelties of a minor character have been added.

These additions are clearly shown in the full-page photographs of this theatre appearing in this issue. It is worth noting particularly the manner in which the placing of the artificial flowers has been car-

Blue and Silver for Decorations

WORK has already been started on wide-spread alterations in the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee. E. J. Weisfeldt, the new manager, has completed plans whereby he expects to make the Alhambra foremost among the mid-West theatres in providing comforts for its patrons.

A large check-room, which is expected to prove especially popular on rainy days, will be opened together with a large new ladies' rest room. Besides the rest room, corners of the foyer will be fitted out with mirrors and shelves to enable the women patrons to properly adjust their hats. A commodious reception room for the convenience of those waiting for friends, and especially for theatre parties, is being fitted out. The decorations in this room will be carried out in moire silk in some dainty color. Another feature of this room will be a row of telephone pay stations.

The decorative effects of the Alhambra nursery will be changed. At one end of the room a large scenic drop in bright colors will show an old-fashioned toy shop. Draperies in nursery patterns will cover the windows and walls.

The ushers' uniform will be in blue and silver while the orchestra will wear blue tuxedos trimmed in silver braid.

All of the lobby decorations in the Alhambra have been worked out in the blue and silver idea.

Ventilation of Theatres

pearance of the ducts that almost always have to be run inside the theatre. When the air supply is admitted in this manner the logical place for the exhaust is through the ceiling by means of electric propeller fans, multiblade fans, or ventilators.

While it is undesirable, it is sometimes necessary to install the supply registers in the ceiling and the supply fan on the roof. The chief disadvantage is that the air follows the line of least resistance and takes a short passage out of the theatre at the back or the entrance end and the result is, the occupants of the building nearest the screen or stage end get little fresh air. The same holds true to the occupants of the balcony. This can be avoided by installing an exhaust system at the floor line but is expensive considering the benefit to be derived unless the roof is designed to receive such a load it is, of course, impossible to locate a large supply apparatus there, and once it is there it receives little attention.

Who Manufacture These Systems?

The B. F. Sturtevant Co. of Boston, who have been the authorities on air-moving apparatus for sixty years, say that the ventilation of a motion picture theatre requires no different arrangement or apparatus than the theatre of the spoken drama and, until a few years ago, the mushroom method was the usual way of introducing the air. The early motion picture theatres, charging but five and ten cents admission and using a vacant store that had been remodeled, could not afford much more than desk or ceiling fans. This has resulted in a return to a method of ventilation tried many years ago with little success, namely, the introduction of air through ceiling registers from fans mounted on the roof or in an attic space. This arrangement has for its principal advantage, cheapness of first cost. It is usually designed for summer use and, as heating coils are not commonly furnished, the fans cannot be operated during the winter. The mushroom system continues to be the best system and, being the best, it costs the most. The best-built theatres today—those built with the desire to foster public good-will—are being equipped with the mushroom type of air introduction.

The above mentioned company is, however, in a position to cooperate with managers, owners, or prospective owners on any type of heating, ventilating, and cooling system. You will find them well equipped with engineering data, literature, and practical experience.

Generator Construction

IN the majority of cases the magnetic field of a generator is supplied by means of electro-magnets. However in the case of magnets, which are used to furnish only a small amount of current, permanent horseshoe magnets are used to set up the magnetic lines of force, several of which are placed side by side depending on the strength of field desired.

In the case of small machines, these are usually made with one North and one South pole and are said to be bipolar. There are numerous different forms in which the field may be made up, some of which are shown by the accompanying illustration, the most common form being that shown by type D. In the larger machines several field magnets are used, and must consist of an even number arranged alternately around the yoke.

In a generator the magnetic circuit is made up of the following parts: The yoke which connects the field cores and forms a support for the field cores and the corresponding coils. The field cores from which the magnetic lines emanate. The pole piece, the section of the magnetic circuit next to the armature which is cut to conform to the shape of the armature, and is made usually of a separate piece of metal from the field core and is fastened to the same by bolts, the surface next to the armature is known as the pole face, and the edges are known as the horns.

The air gap the space between the pole face and the armature core.

The armature core which furnishes a path for the magnetic lines from one air gap to the other.

The magnetizing current coils are in general practice placed in the form shown by illustration IV of Fig. 73. These coils are connected in series and the magnetomotive force of one coil is added to that of the corresponding opposite coil.

Illustration B, Fig. 74 shows a multipolar machine indicating the magnetic circuits. Here the poles alternate around the yoke and the flux from each pole splits and goes to each of the adjoining poles. The separate parts of a multipolar machine may be much smaller than those of a two pole machine, since the total flux required is divided among several different paths, while in a two pole machine there is only a single path thru the poles and armature core, and a double path thru the yoke. Thus the yoke, poles, and armature core of a multipolar machine require only a proportionate part of the material of a two pole machine. However due to the increased number of parts the cost of production is somewhat increased, so that in the design of a machine it is necessary to obtain a balance between size, or amount of material to be used, and the cost of production.

Fig. 74 shows a comparison between a two pole and a six pole machine of the same output with regard to size over all, and of the separate parts necessary to allow for conducting the proper magnetic flux. The diameter of the armature of the two machines is the same.

As has already been stated the voltage induced by a conductor cutting a magnetic field is equal to the lines cut per second divided by 10⁸. The voltage induced in a direct current armature is the sum of the voltage induced in the separate coils forming one circuit of the armature. Thus in order to find the voltage which any D. C. armature is generating, it is necessary to find the number of lines of force which is being cut by the conductors which lie between two adjacent brushes, as these conductors form one path thru the armature.

Example: A six pole generator is operating at 800 r.p.m. The flux per pole is 4,000,000 lines. The armature is made up of 198 active conductors. Find the E.M.F. generated?

Solution: It is first necessary to determine the number of conductors forming a single path of the armature. This is found by dividing the active conductors by the number of poles or in the above case $198/6$ equals 33 conductors in each path.

The speed in revolutions per second is then $800/60$ or 13.3.

The total flux is that of each pole by the number of poles so that the E.M.F. induced is given by the equation:

$$E = \frac{4,000,000 \times 6 \times 33 \times 13.3}{10^8} \text{ or } 105 \text{ volts.}$$

The above may be given in a single equation for determining the voltage induced in a generator which is:

Where ϕ is the useful flux per pole of the machine

p the number of poles in the magnetic circuit n the total number of conductors on the armature.

s the revolutions of the armature per second.

10^8 the number of lines which must be cut per second in order that an e.m.f. of 1 volt will be induced.

b the number of parallel paths thru the armature.

Field excitation or classification of generators.—Generators are classified according to the method in which the electromagnets are excited, which set up the magnetic lines of the field. The two classes are separate excited and self excited generators. The self excited are then classified according to the method in which the field is connected to the external circuit. Namely as shunt, series, or compound.

Questions and Answers

At the request of certain correspondents who fear that their questions may be a cause of ridicule we are omitting all names, giving only the initials and State.

E. P., Alaska: What is meant by the "aerial image"? Reply: At a point several inches in front of the revolving shutter there is a contraction of the light beam. This point of greatest contraction is known popularly as "the aerial image."

G. H. R., New Hampshire: Does any company manufacture 12" carbons pointed at one end only? Reply: Rather a peculiar question, but with a reason behind it, no doubt. We do not know of any firm putting out this style of carbon, but some of the readers may be able to help you out.

M. A. M., Kansas: Do most operators have a license? Where does the arc give best results on direct current. Reply: Although all projectionists in the larger cities have been licensed the projectionists in the smaller towns outnumber those in the cities and since few small town men have been licensed it is probable that the unlicensed men are in the great majority.

It is not possible to give a definite answer to your second question. The arc distance is determined by the voltage across the terminals. If the voltage is too great for the separation the arc stream across the gap the arc will go out. If the voltage is too great for the separation the arc will be noisy and unsteady.

In brief the arc gives best results when separated to the distance that gives the most silent operation with the most light on the screen. There is no rule, except that of "cut and try."

D. C. V., Ohio: Is the incandescent bulb better than the carbon? Reply: No. But the incandescent bulb has been developed for certain uses and has equalled the carbon in those particular installations. The advantages of the bulb

Screen Illumination and Elements of Condenser Design

A Paper by Dr. H. P. Page, of the Corning Glass Works*

THE purpose of this article is to illustrate the desirability of suitable design in order to secure a proper balance between the different parts of the optical system of the motion picture projector and to attain maximum light efficiency. Also, there is described a simple and hitherto little used method of observing the operation of the optical system which enables one to determine easily and quickly whether or not the proper balance between the different optical parts of the system exists, and whether there are any parts of the mechanism which interfere with the light.

Motion picture projection depends upon mechanical devices for moving the film, and an optical system for projecting it. The optical system is not complete until the eye of the observer is considered, but in the present discussion it will answer to stop with the screen. The optical system for motion picture projection is illustrated in Fig. 4, the optical parts being enumerated and described below.

Light Source

The light source (L) may be any lamp having suitable brilliancy for the required projection. The lights most commonly used are the arc lamp and the special Mazda projection lamps. In the case of Mazda lamps it is usual to reinforce the lamp with a concentric spherical reflector (R). As the function of the reflector is to form an image of the filaments in the immediate neighborhood of the filaments themselves, the optical system is the same with the reflector as without it. The use of the reflector increases the light thrown on the screen by about 70% when the reflector is clean and the bulb new. Figs. 7 and 8 show the glowing filament of Mazda lamps, with the spaces between the filaments illuminated by the images projected by a concentric spherical mirror.

Condenser

The condenser (C) may consist of a pair of plano-convex lenses, of a meniscus lens combined with a double convex lens, or of a single corrugated lens of the general design illustrated

Fig. 1—Design of Corrugated Condenser

- L One point of light source.
- C Corrugated Condenser.
- F (f-g) Aperture Plate.
- O Objective.

in the accompanying figure. The function of the condenser is to collect the diverging light rays emanating from the light source and to concentrate them upon the picture to be projected so as to produce an intense but evenly distributed illumination.

Aperture

The aperture is an opening in a metal plate 29/32 in. wide and three-fourths as high used to limit the edges of the picture. In immediate contact with this aperture is the strip of film on which is printed the picture to be projected. The location of the aperture plate and film is designated by F. It is generally assumed that both the picture on the film and the edges of the aperture are in focus at the same time.

Objective

The objective is made up of several lenses of suitable design which are assembled in a single mount. The design of the objective must be such that it has all the desirable qualities to be found in photographic objectives. These qualities are so fully and frequently described in photographic literature that it is unnecessary to go further into their enumeration. In the most elementary text books on Physics are to be found discussions of the "simple thin lens."

Such a lens cannot be made of a single piece of glass on account of countless "aberrations" but if such a "simple thin lens" could be made it would have all the properties required of the photographic or projection objective. In fact, in theoretical calculations which involve the objective we can substitute for it an imaginary simple thin lens which has a suitable focus position and diameter. Let us leave it to the skilled optician to design and construct this objective for us, allowing him to use any varieties of glass, any curvature and separation of the elements, any type of objective which he may deem most suitable for the purpose, but let us caution him to use no more glass-air surfaces than are necessary, for at each surface where the glass and air come in contact there is a loss of about

Modern motion picture photography has attained such a degree of perfection that "better pictures" has become largely a matter of better light.

Operating Advantages of GE Compensarcs

1. Steady, strong arc.
2. Easily operates two arcs at the same time for change-over.
3. Quiet arc strike and quick settle-down.
4. Self-regulating arc voltage.
5. Current stays at set value.
6. Current easily raised and lowered.
7. Cannot be damaged by short circuit.
8. Fading made easy.
9. Not affected by changes in current conditions.
10. Quiet in operation.

GE Compensarcs Insure Ideal Screen Illumination

Excellence in screen illumination is measured partly by the brilliancy but particularly by the constancy of the light. Steady light is dependent upon steady current. GE compensarcs maintain the current at a set value, thus eliminating flickering or variations in intensity.

To maintain this constant screen illumination, however, it is necessary to raise or lower the amount of current delivered to the projection machine, on account of the varying densities of films. A colored film, for instance, will require much heavier current than the average, while a cartoon will require much less. With the GE compensarc, the current can be set at the proper rate before the film is started by the turning of a single knob on the panel.

Compensarcs are safe, easy to operate, efficient, economical and reliable—GE offices or distributors everywhere for prompt deliveries and service

5%, i. e., a loss of 10% for each lens or cemented doublet; and let us require him to make the diameter of all lenses as large as he can in order that the objective may transmit the greatest possible amount of light. When the optician's work is completed let him tell us what the equivalent focus of the objective is, also its equivalent diameter (if that should differ from the diameter of its lenses) and we will then put in our drawing a simple theoretical lens having this focus and diameter and all our calculations will come out exactly as if we had traced each ray through the complicated lens system of the actual objective.

The purpose of the objective is to form a real image 1 (f'g, Fig. 4) of the film F (f. g.) upon the screen. In addition, the objective forms images of everything on one side of it at some place upon the other side of it. For example an image of the condenser C (a, b, c, d,) is formed by the objective O at the place C' (a' b' c' d'). If the condenser C is located too close to the film its image will lie near the film image, as in the case of stereopticon slides, and if the surface of the condenser is cracked this condenser image C' will lie so close to the picture image 1, that disturbing shadows are seen. In ordinary motion picture projection as here illustrated there is no danger of imperfections or condenser rings appearing on the screen.

President Earl Promotes Griffin

Herbert Griffin, who has just been appointed Technical Engineer of the Nicholas Power Company, by President Earl, goes on his vacation this week and at the same time receives very tangible evidence of the Company's approval of his efforts.

Continuing his policy of placing tried men in important positions and then giving them a free hand in their own work, Mr. Earl now officially confirms Mr. Griffin in a position which the latter has been unofficially holding for some time. As assistant to the General Manager, W. C. Smith, a very large part of his duties consisted in investigating and passing upon the constant stream of new ideas and inventions which came to the Nicholas Power Company in connection with their product. The varied responsibilities of the General Manager's position, of course, present his giving the proper attention to all the new ideas which are submitted, and this work was passed over to Mr. Griffin.

Many of the latest additions and improvements to Power's Projectors are the result of the preliminary investigations and tests made by Mr. Griffin. As Technical Engineer of the company his duties will be to give the fullest consideration to everything of a practical nature which will improve the Power's machine, and working in conjunction with Mr. Smith and Mr. Uhlemann, he will report to the Executive Committee, of which Mr. Earl is the head. It is obvious, of course, that motion picture machines, like most other mechanical products, require changes and improvements from time to time, and this work of Mr. Griffin is in no sense a new thing for the Nicholas Power Company. The Company has had a well equipped experimental department but the appointment of Mr. Griffin will bring the mechanical departments and executive offices into a much closer relationship.

Mr. Griffin is well fitted for his work as he has been with the Nicholas Power Company for eight years, and as traveling representative learned a great deal regarding the requirements of the exhibitor and the operator, and his work in the factory has taught him how to satisfy those requirements in the most practical manner. In addition to his work for the Nicholas Power Company, he has also been with the Y. M. C. A. in a technical capacity. He was with the latter organization nineteen months, fourteen of which were spent in Siberia. While with the Y. M. C. A. he was in charge of all electrical and mechanical equipment, including motion picture machines, in Siberia.

The promotion of Mr. Griffin by Mr. Earl is in line with the established policy of the Company to perfect and improve its product as rapidly as new inventions and modern mechanical methods made possible.

Dead Men Tell No Tales

A Real Automatic Arc Control

The Peerless Automatic Arc Control is made for use on all projectors having direct current at the arc. The device is so sensitive that less than one sixty-fourth of an inch increase in gap will start the motor and bring the carbon back to the proper position. Operation is so slow and delicate that the carbon movement is not noticeable to the eye.

Practically frees the operator from giving any attention to the arc, and enables him to attend to other duties. Durably made of best materials. Can be adjusted to maintain any desired arc gap.

are: ease of control and evenness of illumination.

A. F. H., Pennsylvania: I wish you would tell us projectionists how to keep our booths always up to date. Reply: This man from Lehigh, Pa., has indicated a desire for information that will help him make a 1920 model out of his older "boat." About the only suggestions we can make is for him to keep in touch with developments as shown in the trade papers. Without knowing the details of the ways in which his projection room lacks up-to-dateness we, nor anyone else, could not tell him how to improve his work-shop. Some projectionists have been supplied with the finest of machinery but with a small undersized room. With others it is just the reverse, they have a fine room but only second class instruments in it.

Motorized Open Air Theatre

Motion pictures on wheels is one of the latest developments designed by Messrs. De Pathy and Bergstrom, of Hartford, Connecticut, the apparatus for which is shown in the accompanying photograph. In this motorized open-air theatre bus are a motion picture machine, equipped with a 32-volt mazda lamp, a 1 k.w., 40-volt, 1700 r.p.m. direct-current Westinghouse generator and miscellaneous equipment. The generator is driven by a fabric band on the engine flywheel.

The pictures are projected through an opening in the rear of the bus on a screen 40 or 50 feet distant.

Linoleum an Insulator

In a recent issue of Electrical World an electrical engineer reported the results of tests he has made on the insulating properties of linoleum of various kinds. He found, according to this article that the break down potential varied from 20,000 to 43,000 volts. That is, it required that voltage to puncture the samples. Rubber mats, on the other hand have a break down voltage of 300 to 500 volts per thousandth inch of thickness. A rubber mat, then, $\frac{1}{4}$ " thick will stand about 100,000 volts.

The writer of the article mentioned above concluded by stating that the one adverse factor of linoleum when used as insulating mats was its absorption of moisture which is greater than in the case of rubber. Projectionists may find it advisable to use small mats of linoleum in front of switchboards and between machines. This protection would be found cheaper than rubber

A Description of the Recently Perfected Wilart Camera

An Excellent, Fully Equipped Cinema Camera for the Professional

THERE is a constant and insistent call for motion picture cameras that are fully equipped for all-round work. Amongst the cameras fulfilling this need should be most prominently mentioned the Wilart, an instrument that has become exceedingly popular with cinematographers in the short time it has been in existence.

The Wilart camera has been designed to withstand the full range of climatic conditions apt to be met with in production work of the various kinds. It is constructed of a composition aluminum alloy casting which gives lightness without sacrificing strength. There is not a single piece of wood connecting two parts.

from the film, is for the insertion of fancy masks for spyglass, keyhole and similar effects.

It often happens that the cinematographer has a desire to see the object on the film before he commences "grinding." This can be easily and quickly carried out with the Wilart, since it has an opening on the back connected on the inside with a tube which closes against the pressure plate. During the time that the view is brought into focus there is only one frame exposed and this is accomplished without fogging any adjacent portions of the film or any sections that may be free inside the camera box.

Fig. 1

Designed by practical camera experts, an examination of the instrument reveals a succession of attachments which allow for the securing of any photographic effect known to cinematography. For instance, should the cinematographer wish to obtain such effects as the double exposure or "split stage," it is made possible by a slot on the side of the camera and hidden by the finder as in C, Fig. 4. One slot is provided for contact masks used in split stage work and the other one, set 1½ inches

The footage dial on the back of the camera (Fig. 3, B) records the full 400 feet of film. A Veeder counter, also in the rear, enables the operator to keep a record of every turn of the handle (C, Fig. 3). This device is absolutely necessary for calculating double exposures and for correctly arranging much trick stuff. In addition, there is also a water level set on the camera, and illustrated at D, Fig. 3.

To enable the cinematographer to measure distances for focussing purposes the finder is equipped with a micrometer mount. This is shown at C, Fig. 1. Its method of operation is as follows: suppose an object registers a distance of six feet. Right below the finder is the focussing scale (see E, Fig. 1), which corresponds with his finder. All that is necessary to do is to set the scale at six feet and the image will be in exact focus. The camera is equipped with a pair of matched lenses to make possible the foregoing.

An automatic dissolving shutter providing for a $4\frac{1}{2}$ -foot dissolve is furnished as part of the equipment. Furthermore, the movement of this shutter is registered on the outside by means of a shutter (F, Fig. 1). The shutter is automatically operated by punching a button on the top of the camera, shown at A, in Fig. 1. Scenes can be marked by the punch at D, Fig. 1.

The magazines are fitted with automatic light traps which keep the film free from friction as it runs from the magazines. It has a $\frac{1}{4}$ -inch opening entirely free from velvet. The trap automatically opens at the closing of the door (see A and B, in Figs. 3 and 4). The magazines themselves are tightened by two screws on the top of the camera. These screws (A, Fig. 4) hold them firmly.

For stop motion effects and for speeding up scenes or for making animated subjects, a stop motion crank is supplied which is operated from the back of the mechanism (E, Fig. 3).

A set of four screws, shown at B, in

Fig. 2, control the adjustment of the frame line.

In general construction, it is rather difficult to see how a cinema camera could be built of finer materials. All parts of the mechanism are made of steel or brass. There are also three sets of ball bearings which aid greatly in making the Wilart an easy running instrument. One of these sets is on the main shaft which holds the sprocket wheel and operates the gears of the dissolving shutter. Another set is on the flywheel and is shown at A in Fig. 2, and the third set is on the main driving gear.

All the attachments on the camera are simple to operate and the outfit as a whole would seem to satisfy the exacting requirements of the profession.

Victim of Assault Is Recovering

A communication from Dudley Read, the New Orleans cameraman for Kinograms, states that he is recovering slowly from the injuries received a month ago in New York when he attempted to "shoot" some footage of a prominent New York merchant indicted for profiteering. Read was stationed with his camera in front of the Department of Justice when the gentleman and his party left the court. Becoming angry at the thought of himself appearing in news reels throughout the country, the merchant attacked Read, knocking over his camera in such a way that the points of the tripod pierced the cameraman's feet. Read is now getting about on crutches and hopes to be up and around as lively as ever within a few weeks.

Music for Your Theatre

No. 10

An Alliance with the Musicians

By Charles D. Isaacson

(Author, "Face to Face with Great Musicians")

WITHOUT any exaggeration can it be said that the persons most interested in your music development are the musicians. When you open your doors to music, you open them also to musicians.

Do not misunderstand me.

While the musical world owes you a vote of gratitude when you "see the big ideas"—of course, the benefits are purely mutual. You gain in patronage and profits for having the musicians as your allies.

But the point that I wish to present in this article is plain. The musicians being the persons most directly affected, will be the readiest to respond to your offers for an alliance of interests.

You can take it for granted, therefore, that the musicians will be delighted to help you make your theatre the musical headquarters. For the platform on which you can approach the musicians and assume their willingness to help you is this:

Your theatre when it takes up music as a regular feature is spreading an interest in the art. As the art interest spreads so does the demand for all musicians, teachers, etc.

Therefore, if you are seriously giving music or if you contemplate doing so—it is an item of value to the local musicians and music teachers and schools.

You must put into the minds of these people this thought: "The Blank theatre is arousing interest in music—that means more interest in my work. How can I use the Blank theatre's activities to develop my personal activities?" This can be done by letters to all the musicians, teachers and schools, by personal talks and even by a meeting called to discuss the idea.

Thus, here would be the central idea in a letter to the musicians, etc.:

"Dear Sir:

"You are interested in the spread of musical interest. As a newcomer is added to the list of those who can understand and appreciate good music, so is it possible for you to enlarge your own sphere of usefulness.

"A concert at the present time draws only a limited number of people in our community because only a small percentage are trained up to it.

"Now the very obvious effect of what we are doing with music is to increase the concert-going population, and train them to buy concert-entertainment.

"We cannot attempt to supply all the music for our community. We are essentially a motion picture theatre, using music for an added feature.

"With you music is everything, however.

"As we develop a music-lover, you can use him to go to your concerts and buy your songs and compositions and go to your studio for musical training.

"Therefore, we believe we are following out a very logical line of reasoning when we say that our success with music is your success. The greater the value of music in our entertainment, the greater the value of this community to you.

"Now, this letter is written to you, that you may become fully acquainted with our musical activities. Come down and follow our programs. Then go out and talk about our activities—and make it your business to send down all those with whom you come in contact.

"If you are trying to induce a person to study with you—get him enthusiastic with the greatest device in the world—that is, make him hear music at its best—in the way we are giving it. In fact, a good way to strengthen your hold on your present pupils and associates, is to keep them in an atmosphere of music—and that means they ought to hear what is to be heard. Because of our reasonable price, good music can be heard cheaply. Bring your classes to the theatre, to hear our programs. Watch what we are going to play, and there will unquestionably be something which is right in keeping with what you are trying to explain to your pupils.

"Come down and have a chat with us, when you're around, and if you have any good musical idea to offer, we'll be delighted to listen."

You see the idea—you make music-lovers and hence a public for the musicians. Therefore it is good business for the musicians to use your theatre as a medium of music-development.

If there is a musical union in your locality, go right up to the president and put your proposition before the members. Properly presented, it can be readily understood that your musical activities are doing a great deal to develop musical interest among your patronage, which amounts to thousands per year, and therefore is of considerable importance in the community. The union ought to get back of you, and use all its resources to stimulate patronage for you. Theirs is a selfish reason, too.

Further, I see alliances with individual musicians. Here is a rather good idea: Offer to give the local music teachers certain opportunities for presenting their worthy pupils in public. For instance, you could take your off-show and give half an hour to a "concert by the pupils of So-and-So." This would prove a big feature for the teacher—he would get behind the performance and all the friends of the pupils would be sure to be on hand. Also among the circle the name of your theatre and its musical advantages would be talked about. Give yourself six such days a month and you are insuring yourself a lot of advertising among a large number of people.

Then here is another thought. You probably have in your community a number of artists who are eager to procure engagements. Outside of the fact that you will no doubt wish to engage some one or more soloists for regular or occasional appearances, whom you will pay, there is something else to be done.

Offer your house for some morning concerts to your local concert aspirants. In this way: You will allow Miss Hermione

Jones to give her recital in your theatre on some morning when you are not using the house. The only thing that she must do is this: She must get behind the event and get a crowd. Of course Miss Jones will be eternally grateful to you and to the people who come, your house takes on the nature of being headquarters for music. And everything which helps to make your theatre seem musical headquarters is part of the good work which is convertible into larger attendance and profits.

No doubt there are music clubs in your community. Offer to let the ladies and gentlemen meet in your theatre—at a time when it is free. Get the music clubs interested in your work, anyway. Get their interest and make them feel the importance of what you are doing in the musical development of the community. Make them eager to go out and preach among those people with whom they come in contact the worthiness of the theatrical endeavor.

The very things they are seeking to accomplish you are doing—and if they can be made to feel this, they will back you up.

There are no doubt amateur orchestras. Link them up with you.

Get the choruses in your theatre once in a while.

Offer to permit the clubs, orchestras, choruses, etc., to post bulletins occasionally in your lobby concerning their own activities—even let them canvass for members among your public. If you get out a printed program, get in little notes about the music clubs, etc.—further defining and accentuating the musical atmosphere of your house.

Offer to permit the proponents of community singing to come once in a while to your theatre.

Put yourself in communication with the local managers of concerts. Nearly every community now has a course of concerts. Of course they do not start generally until October or November.

Here, then, is a big, unusual stunt you can put into operation. You have the time.

Tell the backers of the concerts that you believe that your audiences are among the finest people to be approached when the concert course begins. Tell the backers that the work you are doing might be considered as preliminary to the regular concerts. Make them feel that your audience contains a large percentage of prospective buyers of tickets for the concerts.

Make a deal which will connect you with the concert course. For instance, offer to carry advertisements of the concerts in your program in return for a similar courtesy in the concert program; offer to put up bulletins in your lobby in return for a similar courtesy at the concerts; suggest that special offers be made to your audience on subscriptions—in other words, work out some ideas which will succeed in closely identifying you with the regular concerts.

There is no doubt that the offer you make will bring mutual satisfaction—for you will aid the concert managers in selling their seats—and you will certainly draw from the regular music-going public for your patronage.

In brief, then—wherever there is musician, teacher, musical school, student, manager—consider that you want him for an ally, for a walking advertisement of your house. And that whatever happens musically, you want to have your theatre "with its finger in the pie."

Don't forget that your plan is to make all thinking people instinctively associate the idea of music with Your Theatre.

Next week Mr. Isaacson will print an account entitled "Utilizing the Newspapers."

Musicians— Managers—

Get your name into the list of those seeking musicians or engagements. This Musical Exchange of the News is organized without charge and, it is anticipated, will become the clearing ground for the music and pictures of the entire country.

Send your name, qualifications or requirements to Charles D. Isaacson, Motion Picture News.

Questions and Answers Discussion

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I am remodeling my house here and when completed will seat nearly 1,200 people.

Now I have been reading your articles in the News and I want your assistance and advice in selecting my music; to that end I will try and give you an insight as to conditions here.

This is strictly a Southern cotton mill town, nearly all my patrons are mill workers.

I have about 3,000 inhabitants, drawing population about 7,000 in two miles radius. My policy will be to play anything decent that I can get the money from, but pictures will be my main reliance. I have no opposition here, but have in the nearest town, which is one and one-half miles distant.

Now as to my limit for music. I do not think I could go over $200 per week, and I am afraid this would not leave me the profit necessary that I should have. Now I want you to imagine yourself in my place and advise me just what you would do.

Send me your Musical Aids. Thanking you for your advice and suggestions, I am—PAUL ROBINSON, People's Theatre, Roanoke Rapids, N. C.

I have very carefully gone over your letter. For the sake of really understanding your situation, please tell me:

1. What instrument, if any, have you now?

2. What instrument, if any, have you in mind to get?

3. Who is now in charge of your music, if anyone?

4. Who are the musical dealers in town?

5. Are there any musicians?

6. Are there any musical events during the year in town?

7. What is the competition, if any—and what music is at that house, if any?

At once what I would suggest is this: Communicate the fact that you are about to go after music, to the dealers, musicians, and ask your local newspaper to carry the fact so that those who can be of value to you, will immediately get in touch with you.

Unless you are at any point satisfied that you are right, if you desire further advice—remember I am at your disposal. Send along the information I have requested.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

May I express my warm appreciation of your articles in MOTION PICTURE NEWS?

All musical directors of this firm for the past ten years find much in your views that I have striven to put into effect myself in England.

I am over here studying the American Methods of Music to Pictures, and I must confess that apart from the Riesenfeld and a few other houses, music accompaniment leaves much to be desired—so I trust your efforts will not fall on barren ground.

It may interest you to know that in England the most awful organ cum piano affair used here is quite unknown, and though a five-piece combination is the average one, the standard of music is much higher—perhaps it is that our publishers are not so lavish with complimentary sets.

I am mailing your articles to England weekly.—EDGAR E. LAYNE, Musical Director and Advisor, Rhodes Pictures, Ltd., 10 Corporation Street, Manchester, England. (Bolton, Moses Gate, Manchester, etc.)

My Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have been reading with a great deal of interest the excellent articles which you have been writing for the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. It has always been a matter of wonder to me why the trade papers did not give more prominence to the ever-increasing importance of good music with pictures, and to the methods of making good music a box-office success. MOTION PICTURE NEWS has again demonstrated its supremacy by doing just that.

It is, of course, superfluous for me to say that you are presenting the subject from the one and only angle so far as the exhibitor is concerned—that of dollars and cents gain. He is in business primarily to make money, and if music cannot pay for itself and earn a reasonable dividend, it is not good business. "Art for art's sake" is all very fine for the artist, but the exhibitor is a business man. His acid test is: "Does it pay?" And the greater number of houses all over the country that are installing large orchestras and increasing the size of those already engaged answers

Are You Giving Half A Show?

Are you showing the best of pictures with music that does not follow the action, music that does not fit? Are your patrons struggling between a story on the screen and a concert program in the orchestra pit? That's half a show.

Do you want music that blends with the picture and helps your patrons see the picture and not detract from it? The Barton Organ with the patented Divided Manual will take you out of the "half a show" class.

It means more money in the box office.

that question more forcibly than any mere argument could.

In my opinion, if good music is to be the greatest possible box-office success, it must have adequate publicity. It must be treated, not as a mere accessory, but as a feature attraction in itself. The use of the "silhouette orchestra" in all newspaper advertisements, such as is now being done so extensively by the big de luxe houses, is excellent publicity. Advertising tie-ups with sheet music stores and Victrola shops are valuable, if properly conducted. All these things will probably be touched upon in your later discussions.

I am an enthusiast over the great possibilities of music in the de luxe motion picture theatre. The surface has hardly been scratched. It is the most promising of all the branches of the musical profession for the musical director with a vision of the future: for the man who can see something of what is to come in the next five or ten years: for the man who has ability, imagination, enthusiasm, and the will to WORK.

I assure you of my best wishes in this new field.—CHARLES H. LEACH, Louisville, Ky.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"The Invisible Divorce"

(National Pictures—Six Reels)

THIS is a picture with a moral. It teaches a very good lesson of a husband who takes his wife's love for granted, assumes all the credit for his business success and forgets the sacrifice, encouragement and co-operation given by his wife. Thus do they live in "an invisible divorce," estranged and separated by misunderstanding. This is the basis of a picture that is woefully lacking in action, and disappointing in its climax. The principal characters are made to go through a series of lukewarm incidents, not entirely devoid of human interest, but without any noticeable drama. At the end, after the husband has attained wealth, his young wife simply tells him that her heart is broken with the realization that she means nothing in his life, and he, understanding his mistake, promises to reform. A weak ending, indeed.

Leatrice Joy is especially attractive and makes the character very sympathetic. Walter McGrail is also entirely satisfactory as the slightly snobbish and conceited husband. Grace Darmond is just as good, and the cast as a whole, is the best thing in the production.

Another moral in the story may be that a couple should not get married with only $200 and no job in sight. These two people do, and come to San Francisco to conquer the world. The husband's efforts to get work grow tiresome after a while, and their endeavors to obtain a lucky statue are dwelt upon at considerable length. After a time Jimmy receives his chance to develop an oil field and finally makes good. The husband's confidence in his "big idea" has been overdone, chiefly by the subtitles.

There are two splendid sets of the interior of a mansion, and the photography is satisfactory all the way through. The picture opens and closes with a judge giving all married couples some sound advice. The chief appeal in the story is its true-to-life characterization of the husband, which, though exaggerated, in respect to his enthusiasm and self-assurance, is an appealing example of masculine neglect. It may satisfy because of this asset, but the lack of action will be noticeable. This can be seen from the fact that only two characters are before the camera for probably two and a half reels.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"An Overall Hero"

(Chester Comedy-Educational—Two Reels)

AMERRY little farce up to a certain point is "An Overall Hero," the newest Chester release in comicities. Better spontaneity has not been achieved in this type of subject for some time than what is offered up to the bit when the monkey-hero saves the winnings for the race-horse owner. The piece gets off to an excellent start supplying some really amusing hokum when the antiquated horse is placed in the race. The v-i-l-l-a-i-n-s are determined to put him out of the running and resort to fair means and foul with little success. The jockey is "villainized" and the little girl rides the horse until a barrier knocks both for a goal. Then the monkey comes on and starts the amusing gags. He hops on the beast and breezes under the wire a winner.

The rich stakes are just about to be handed to the old man when the culprits steal them and run to a stable to "divvy" up. But Mr. Monkey has secreted himself in a barrel and when their backs are turned he hooks the money and draws it down through the crack. A rich scene and provocative of laughter. Here is where the comedy sags. As if the idea expending itself, the director has utilized any trick which loomed up in sight. The bathing girls are not needed. But a laugh or three will greet the bit where the monkey, the dog, and the girl are seated on the lawn at a picnic lunch. The hero takes a smaller Simian and exchanges his clothing for the garb of a tiny boy. A lion is freed from his cage and considerable high jinks are employed before the well-rehearsed and apparently educated monkey brings the lost child back to his "sorrer-ful" parents. This comedy is good enough to appear anywhere.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Point of View"

(Selznick)

THIS pictured play, with Elaine Hammerstein as its star, manages to hold the interest largely because of its careful production and good characterizations on the part of the cast. It is a story of New York life, full of interesting and real people, which may compensate for the lack of dramatic action. Its plot is largely built upon the misunderstanding of two people, and with dialogue absent, it does not make a gripping screen drama.

The cast is excellent. Besides the star, who handles the role of a practical daughter of a poverty stricken aristocrat very well, Rockliffe Fellows is a fine type of a breezy Westerner. Cornish Beck makes a natural American boy and Arthur Houseman is as good as villain as ever. Hugh Huntly, Helen Linrock, and Warren Cook complete the cast.

Introducing the various members of the family takes some time, but the story starts soon after this, when the wealthy aristocrat loses his fortune in Wall street. The family goes to live in a small New York apartment, to which comes a wealthy Westerner, who has been attracted by the beautiful daughter, as a boarder. The star, in order to allow her brother to complete his musical education, marries this man without love. But the brother is only a partial success at his first recital, and the wealthy benefactor learns that his wife never loved him. He prepares to leave for the West, freeing his wife for her former fiancee, when she realizes the birth of love and forces him to stay. This simple story is dressed up with some fairly interesting incidents, and sumptuous elaborate sets, but is disappointing in its climax. There is no hint that the star has grown to love her husband until she bluntly reveals it. And one would imagine that the Westerner knew all along that he was married for money only.

Director Alan Crosland has used suggestion in a delicate, effective manner several times, except where the brother's playing makes the star willing to marry without love. This is dwelt upon too long, and it is evident that Hugh Huntly knew nothing of violin playing. Length 6 reels.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Slipping Feet"

(Fox—Sunshine Comedy—Two Reels)

HERE we have a comedy whose best points are some dizzy girder-walking high in the air and two or three novel gags. The interest is well maintained and it does not fall below the usual Sunshine standard. Harry Gribbon, as a suave diamond collector, "wanted badly" by the police, Bobby Dunn, and Gus Pixley, are in the cast. Gladys Walton looks exceedingly pretty and supplies the only feminine beauty in the two reels.

There is a fine chase around the sides and the top of a huge gas tank. The race at a breathtaking height does not appear to be double exposure. Slow turning of the crank makes the three men so fleet-footed in their perilous chase, that it is good for a fine thrill. Another gag is the using of the muffler of an overturned Ford for a machine gun, while still another good bit is Gribbon's disguise as a detective and subsequent arrest of himself and collecting the reward. It is a picture of funny incidents rather than bushy mustaches and endless slugging matches, and Director J. B. Blystone deserves the credit for its speed and originality. It should easily satisfy as a good program comedy.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"In Wrong"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—One Reel—Fox)

Mutt, in this drawing, makes a fatal dive into a long pipe in his effort to avoid the police, and the remainder of the reel is taken up in Mutt's efforts to extricate his long, lean friend. It is an iron pipe and cannot be broken with a hammer. Mutt's large feet and his long nose prevent him from being pulled or pushed through. A mule is induced to kick the pipe in the hope of breaking it, but instead he breaks his hoof. Shooting the prisoner from a cannon brings no better results. Things look pretty hopeless until Mutt sees a pretty ankle on the beach, and then he jumps out unaided. But the ankle belongs to a dusky maiden.

Most of the scenes are sufficiently ludicrous to get a good laugh. It gives the audience a chance to laugh at the big fellow's discomfort for a change instead of Jeff's.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Bride 13"

(Fifteen Episode Serial—Fox)

THEY'RE off!!! The open season has arrived to book the serials for the coming winter. And while you are looking over the prospects, you might pay attention to "Bride 13," the first serial that the Fox forces ever produced. If this producing organization has come into the serial field with a late entry, there's no denying the fact that it has a likely "dark horse." Fox has profited by the offerings of better-known serial sponsors and has come with a rush and no mistake, if "Bride 13" is any criterion.

Action and more action is the keynote. Indeed all the space is utilized. There is not a let-up, no slackening in speed or punch from inception through the first five reels which have been presented. What is offered augurs well for what is to follow. One might call the subject matter a variation on "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves." It's a tale of brides who are snatched at the altar on their wedding day—tale of intrigue, adventure, romance, thrills, and stunts galore. Improbable? Decidedly. But what's the difference? One is looking at hokum in a serial and not at reality. Brides, number 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 have been kidnapped under the very eyes of their doting mammas, papas, and sweethearts. And the police apparently are baffled.

The action starts with Bride number 12. Although her parents have some misgivings over the marriage ceremony, the happy girl prepares for the nuptial knot with the same courage that Captain John Smith prepared for Powhatan's club. The villain lurks in the background, smiling in his accustomed way. He is the ambassador between the man "higher up" and the prey. Well the stage is all set for a quick capture of the strange kidnappers who hold the unlucky brides for ransom. The police are patrolling the grounds, some on foot, some on motor-cycles. The wedding party climb into the limousines and drive to the church. But the bride's car is piloted by one of the villains and he drives like a mad-man, outdistancing his followers easily. He plunges the car in the bay and the next seen of the bride she is safely secreted in the Turk's submarine.

A flash is shown of the abode of the other brides—a castle guarded by bestial blacks. Make up your mind that every scene is rich in action and suspense and every one punctuated with thrills. The serial is unlike its predecessors in the fact that the identity of the villains is not hidden from the onlooker. He is not disclosed as some wild freak or automaton. His motive so far as the picture showed is to collect a ransom and, if not successful, to secret them in a harem, in all likelihood. It's a thrill which accompanies the scene when Bride 13 is kidnapped just as she had vowed to go through with the ceremony in order to clear up her sister's (number 12) fate. Two aviators are following in hot pursuit, but their machines are rendered hors-de-combat. The girl is plucky and refuses to pen the letter to her father. So she is tugged out to a rock-bound coast and securely fastened. The tossing tide plays havoc with her body but she survives, thanks to the equally plucky rescue by her sweetheart. The sea-plane stunts are certainly "hair-raisers." Hair-breadth escapes cut quite a factor.

The picture shows careful rehearsing in every particular. The photography is good, and the acting up to requirements. The principal roles are played by Marguerite Clayton, Mary Christensen, Greta Hartman, Luyster Chambers and Ed Roseman. E. Lloyd Sheldon wrote the story, which was scenarized by Edward Sedgwick. Richard Stanton directed. In all "Bride 13" looks like a winner in the serial market. Certainly it carries a wicked wallop.—LAURENCE REID.

"Great Scott"

(Mack Sennett Comedy—Paramount—Two Reels)

THE wedding ceremony is a favorite scene with comedy producers. Trust Mack Sennett to find that out. If it can be used as the final fade-out with the average serious subject, it can be used in several ways to make a comedy score. For instance interrupting the ceremony itself until the marriage is indefinitely postponed. Mr. Sennett has gone back to first principles in "Great Scott." Because the ceremony is the chief trick in the old suit-case. That's why the picture doesn't carry the spice and sparkle of some fore-runners recently released.

A Swede and an Irishman are partners in a delicatessen store. Their offspring are about to have the yoke placed around their necks. Presto. Enter the interruptions. First one partner, then the other is called out and the wedding looks as if it will never take place. One customer comes after home-brew, another wants something else. And so it goes. The funniest scene is when the wedding party parades around the rooms headed by an octogenarian with an accordion. Mildly humorous is the scene where the participants and guests dress for the function. A false bosom won't stay on the manly chest of the groom, and another has an awful time trying to get dad to button her up in the back.

There is a grand chase to wind it up with the sweethearts closing and marrying just as the angry fathers arrive on the scene. The window shade is drawn down and a scene registering LOVE is silhouetted on the cloth. It will surprise some to see Sennett using a legitimate as the figure of the groom. It is customary to have all the characters burlesqued. "Great Scott" is fairly interesting. It didn't provoke spontaneous laughter at New York's Rivoli. Charles Murray, Ford Sterling and James Finlayson are the principal funmakers, with the first mentioned carrying off first honors. He is given the best tricks and he takes advantage of them.—LAURENCE REID.

"Bits of Northland"

(Compiled from the Gaumont Library—One Reel)

"Bits of Northland" is exactly what the title implies, a series of scenes showing snow and ice in various styles as it exists in a cold latitude during the period that a cameraman might journey into the Far North.

There is not much of the scenic to the offering but some attractive shots of big bergs floating about with close-ups of the fissures of snow and ice that exist on them make the picture interesting. The photography is especially good and the reel has been nicely tinted.

As a hot weather filler the picture meets every requirement. Certainly it has a suggestion of "coolness" which is about all that can be expected of a subject of its type.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"A Seaside Siren"

(Christie Comedy—Released by Educational—Two Reels)

HERE is a Christie comedy featuring Fay Tincher and a well balanced cast of comedians and comedians embellished by the usual bathing girls.

When the girl's mother ships her away to an aunt, who has not seen her since she was a baby, the girl permits her maid to impersonate her at the seaside resort while she elopes with the suitor whom her mother had objected to as a son-in-law.

The maid is Fay Tincher and manages to horrify the sedate aunt and hundreds of the elite by her rough attentions to a husky coast guard, escapes the maid wears a suit of men's clothes. The chase is enlivening and in one of her about ten sizes too large.

Many comedy situations, and considerable excitement throughout, combine to give this a good entertainment value.—J. S. DICKERSON.

"Departed Spirits"

(Mutt and Jeff Cartoon—Fox—One Reel)

Our two pen and ink friends here appear in a genuinely funny strip of nonsense. Mutt steals some of Jeff's private stock and the little fellow wonders how to get even. The ouija board helps him out. It advises him to call on the spirit of Al. K. Hohl. The spirit appears, then disappears, and proceeds to harrass Mutt. He is clouted on the head, stripped of his clothing, and generally annoyed by his invisible foe.

The nonsense is clever, and the lack of physical contortions on the part of the two is commendable. Neither Mutt or Jeff tie themselves into a knot—their favorite stunt. The laughs come from a series of absurd incidents flowing from an equally absurd idea, and not from allowing the artist's pen to run riot.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"THE ADORABLE SAVAGE"

(Universal)

Colorful Picture on a Time-Worn Formula

HERE is a story which has become a trifle moss-covered on the screen, so often has it been visualized. The spectator knows from the introductory flash just what the formula is and how it will be developed. Take a half-caste Fiji Islander, send her to America to be educated, bring her back and allow her to revert to type, introduce the necessary conflict by arranging a struggle for her heart between the savage ruler and a young man from the Occident, and you have it. The story has been done since time immemorial and yet it still carries a certain appeal if the director has been careful to incorporate a few touching moments of sentiment, a flash or two of physical action, and the colorful atmosphere.

In fact it has the background which saves this type of story nine times out of ten. And Norman Dawn hasn't failed to give it an appropriate frame. While "The Adorable Savage" may be obvious to the extreme, still the offering has been well produced. If there is an occasional lapse or two in the romance which destroys the interest, this valuable force is attracted again through scenes which are punctuated with physical action. The heroine is one who easily enlists the spectator's sympathy, particularly so when she discovers that she is a half-caste and decides to become one of her mother's people. But no sooner is the decision made than the conventional romantic conflict occurs, with the American winning the honors.

A struggle takes place between him and the native ruler who has long coveted the girl—a struggle which offers a deal of physical action. Why not? Isn't Noble Johnson in there giving a healthy sample of his strength? Mr. Dawn is best with his atmosphere. Indeed, no director could do much with the antiquated material. He has incorporated a realistic typhoon and a score of enchanting tropical scenes. In fact he has saturated the picture with local color. The story leads up to an effective climax when the struggle takes place. The early reels haven't much "snap" to them. And the director, realizing this, has sought to reinforce them with action which seems out of place. "The Adorable Savage" is pretty good entertainment of its kind. Edith Roberts is certainly appealing in a shredded wheat costume and plays her part with plenty of spirit.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

A fascinating story of romance in the South Sea Islands is "The Adorable Savage," the latest Universal picture presenting Edith Roberts, which will be the feature attraction at the theatre next week. Miss Roberts has the role of Marama Thurston, a young girl who has completed her education in America and returned to the Fiji Islands, which she hasn't seen since she was a little child. Although Marama remembers her father as an Americanist she doesn't know that he was married to a native and that she is a half-caste. Her tragic despair upon learning the truth is followed by a mad desire to renounce her training and revert to the semi-savage state of her maternal ancestors.

Romance comes into her life in the figure of Templeton, an American living near the Thurston plantation. He endeavors to persuade her to live according to the customs of the Occident. A bitter struggle ensues between the white man and the native ruler who covets the girl. Human cunning and the natural elements enter the conflict before the American emerges victorious. Miss Roberts gives a colorful performance in the title role and Jack Perrin makes an acceptable hero. The picture is well fortified with atmosphere and carries a deal of action and suspense. Norman Dawn directed from a story by Ralph Stock.

PROGRAM READER

"The Adorable Savage" is the title of the Universal picture which comes to the theatre next week. It is a feature detailing a story of a charming and talented Edith Roberts as the star. This is a feature detailing a story of a romance in the South Sea Islands, and brings to the spectator a feeling of enchantment as the various scenes displaying the color and atmosphere are presented. The story is well punctuated with romantic moments and carries a deal of physical action. Miss Roberts gives a vital and vivid performance as the dark-haired, dark-skinned native, and prominent in her support are Jack Perrin and Noble Johnson. Norman Dawn directed. Ralph Stock is the author.

SUGGESTIONS

You can make much of the title in advertising this feature. A lavish display of stills showing Edith Roberts in native garb will excite curiosity. You can get a lot of local color and atmosphere by framing your atmosphere appropriately. Palms, palm leaves, and all the ingredients which suggest the South Sea villages would come in handy in supplying the correct atmosphere. Tell something about Edith Roberts. Feature her previous pictures. Tell that she created a memorable impression as Lascia in the picture made from the famous poem. Bring out the fact that she is one of the youngest and most attractive stars in pictures. Feature the story as a romance which carries a deal of physical action—a romance of the South Seas.

CATCH LINES

She was a half-caste and she heard the call of the blood. See Edith Roberts in a romance of the tropics. See "The Adorable Savage."

See "The Adorable Savage," a picture of romance and action laid in the South Sea Islands. Edith Roberts is the star. A rich entertainment.

"THE JACK-KNIFE MAN"

(Vidor-First National)

Human Interest Story Rich in Characterization, Humor and Atmosphere

NOT since "The Other Half" has King Vidor put forth such a pleasing entertainment as "The Jack-Knife Man," a picturization of Ellis Parker Butler's story of the same name. The offering may really be called something different. Romantic and dramatic conflict are absent here and the spectator looks upon a quaint character study, one having an old delirium with a heart as big as a mountain for its hero. Simplicity is the keynote that Mr. Vidor has sounded—a keynote that strikes a responding chord because it is brought out with a wealth of human touches. The picture is a study in heart interest.

The lovable old fellow who lives on his houseboat and finds a spiritual awakening in the comradeship of a little boy is a figure who reaches out and tugs at the heart strings. He is shiftless and almost on the point of starvation, but his generosity toward mankind overshadows his weaknesses. He carves out quaint figures for the amusement of the child, a child who has been left with him when the mother dies. The picture is like a visualization of one of Riley's or Field's poems. That's how close to the soil it is. Yet there is a note of vitality that is missing. In fact it always gives the impression throughout its homespun action of touching some deep well of feeling and never quite reaching it.

In spite of this the picture sends out a glow through the fine characterization, the appealing heart interest, the balancing vein of homely humor, the truly remarkable atmosphere which is perfect in every detail, and the lifelike performances of Fred Turner as the Jack-Knife Man, and Harry Todd as the big-hearted tramp. Every type is human with the possible exception of the village dominie who is caricatured too broadly to appear real. A middle-aged man for a hero! And no youthful romance intruding to destroy the harmony! Surely something new in picture production! Perhaps the offering is richest in its pathos and humor. Still, better atmosphere hasn't been revealed in many a day. Mr. Vidor evidently has a mission—to create wholesome photoplays. He is certainly enriching the screen with such a type of story. Length, 5 reels. Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE STORY

"The Jack-Knife Man," a First National attraction produced by King Vidor, is announced as the offering at the theatre next week. This is a picturization of the novel by Ellis Parker Butler, who is favorably known to fiction readers through his story, "Pigs Is Pigs." The adaptation is promised to be a "somewhat different" picture, as King Vidor has chosen what he believes to be an entirely new set of characters with a setting that is little known to the American public. The action transpires in a small hamlet on the banks of the Mississippi River and on a houseboat moored along the banks of the "father of waters."

It is a homely little tale of the affairs of plain people, with Peter, a lovable old fellow, filled with the love of fellow-man. Into his life—otherwise drab and drear—comes a tiny friendless waif and the whole world is changed for him. His struggles to work out the salvation of the lad forms one of the most satisfying and heart-grIPPING tales the screen has offered in some time. King Vidor has brought out all its delightful quaintness and charm, as well as its gentle humor and pathos. An excellent cast has been chosen to interpret the difficult roles. Heading the list is Florence Vidor, while in her support are Fred Turner, Harry Todd and Charles Arling.

PROGRAM READER

"The Jack-Knife Man," which comes to the theatre next week, is said to be one of the most delightful pictures of small town life that the screen ever offered. It is saturated with pathos, sentiment, heart interest and homely characterization. The central character is a lovable old fellow whose mission in life is to bring happiness to others. King Vidor, who produced the picture, is famous for his natural touches—for embellishing his stories with fine humanity. "The Jack-Knife Man" is Mr. Vidor at his best. Prominent in the cast are Florence Vidor, Harry Todd, Fred Turner and Charles Arling. Ellis Parker Butler wrote the story. A genuine treat is in store for you.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a picture which you can exploit for its fine humanity, its sweet sentiment, its wholesomeness and charm. Bring out that King Vidor, the producer, is thoroughly at home in this type of subject. Emphasize his other fine pictures. Your fans will remember them. What of the author? Surely his name is known to many of your patrons as the author of "Pigs Is Pigs." Play up the fact that the story has the Mississippi River as a background and that it details small town life with wonderful expression. Use stills and have your artist draw a study of an old man whittling a piece of wood. Use local color and atmosphere for your lobby display.

CATCH LINES

A story of small town life is "The Jack-Knife Man," which comes to the theatre next week. A charming picture, rich in sentiment, humor, pathos and homely characterization.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to March 27, 1920.

"HAIRPINS"

(Ince-Paramount-Artcraft)

Sullivan Has Taken a Familiar Idea and Made It Throb with Lifelike Touches

GIVE Gardner Sullivan plenty of time and you can trust him to turn out a clever story regardless of its ancient origin. The idea behind "Hairpins" is used about every blue moon, it being based upon the formula of the up-to-date husband who tires of his wife because of her old-fashioned conventions and slovenly appearance, and is gradually won back when she realizes her shortcomings and profits by them. But the difference between Mr. Sullivan's treatment of it and the uninspired development of many of his contemporaries makes it seem like something entirely new. His fine Italian hand is visible throughout, so that the idea is emphasized with remarkable freshness and novelty.

It is as compact a story as has ever been flashed, the sequences building one from another with spontaneous execution. The figure of the wife is more caricatured than we have ever seen her before. Which may account for the fine flavor of humor. She leaves a trail of hairpins wherever she moves—a slovenly spouse eternally thinking of household duties, until a time comes when her husband is provoked into associating with a type who is exactly opposite. Then comes the awakening. And she plays so fast and loose that her better-half is won back in short order. The finish is a trifle unsatisfactory. He will buy her a new kimono if she will be her old-fashioned self. He would place her back on her former level—a level which she has put out of her life. So this finale rings false.

However, the picture has so much in its favor that the analytical spectator will doubtless overlook it. The action is really lifelike, up to this point, and sparkles with vivid and intimate touches. Humor it has in abundance, which is found not only in the admirable subtleties, but in the relations of the characters to one another. Fred Niblo has directed the picture with genuine dramatic instinct, besides seeing to it that the backgrounds, the technical details are perfect. Mr. Sullivan has attempted to write another "Stepping Out" and while he has not approached this subject in workmanship, the new offering is a feather in his cap because of its human touches, and the fact that he has refurnished an old idea. Enid Bennett is delightful as the wife, and the same may be said of Matt Moore as the husband.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Husbands who blame their wives for becoming so domesticated that they lose all interest in the hilarity of life are taught a lesson in "Hairpins," the C. Gardner Sullivan story, which Thomas H. Ince has produced with Enid Bennett as the star. The picture will appear at the theatre next —. The author has used a favorite theme but has so refreshed it and brought out its highlights that it is entitled to rank as a most entertaining subject.

As Muriel Rossmore, Miss Bennett is wistfully appealing even in those moments when she is immersed in her household duties and neglects her personal appearance. Her husband, feeling an aversion to her slovenly ways, seeks solace with his stenographer. In a dramatic manner, Muriel becomes informed of the state of affairs and, blossoming over-night into a social butterfly, she soon brings her erring spouse back to the straight and narrow. The picture is filled with ingratiating humor and the intimate touches supplied by Fred Niblo, the director, are true to life. Matt Moore in the part of the husband gives a portrayal marked for its convincing quality. William Conklin, also contributes a good performance. The picture is handsomely staged.

PROGRAM READER

C. Gardner Sullivan, the talented screen writer has hit upon a theme which is being enacted everywhere in real life. He presents with much dramatic insight and pointed humor, the idea that a wife may become too domesticated for her own good. The husband in "Hairpins" is smart and up-to-date but his better-half is inclined to pay too much attention to household duties. She is a sloven of the first order. Naturally he rebels and finds company elsewhere. Then comes a day of realization to the young wife. She turns over a new leaf and succeeds in winning back her husband's love by paying some attention to her personal appearance. Enid Bennett is the star, supported by Matt Moore and others. Fred Niblo is the director. The picture will come to the theatre next —.

SUGGESTIONS

What of this title? It can be exploited in several ways. Make use of the idea which is a favorite one with fiction writers. Tell that it is the old story of the wife who allows herself to become dowdy and nearly loses her husband. Bring out the several highlights. Use close-ups of the star. Mention the author and emphasize that he is the leading screen writer in the business. Use Fred Niblo's name. Emphasize that the picture is in the same class as "Stepping Out." Bring name. Emphasize that it is on his way around the world in search of new material. Use a teaser campaign. And try to get in touch with the younger married set. Play up the fact that it is a picture which teaches a valuable lesson.

CATCH LINES

She was hopelessly old-fashioned and domesticated. And her husband liked a good time. See "Hairpins," a fascinating story of domestic life.

"THE MAN WHO DARED"

(Fox)

Probably Russell's Best Work to Date

THERE is incorporated in this picture a pretty idea of a prisoner reforming under the influence of another criminal, which is certainly novel for a feature that promises, in the opening reel, to be nothing more than a gun-shooting Western. This mixture makes a likeable production, with William Russell doing some of his best work to date. He plays the rough foreman of a lumber camp—a role that is unsympathetic in the beginning. There is an excellent incident when he gives the girl a revolver, daring her to punish him for the kiss he has stolen. Eileen Percy is the girl. She shoots him in the hand, and the "heavy," anxious to get revenge upon him, stages a hold-up with one hand bandaged. Of course Russell is imprisoned on this incriminating evidence. There is plenty of interest because, although innocent of the crime of which he is accused, he is guilty of another robbery.

Then comes the reform incidents. In the adjoining cell is a journeyman stonecutter, condemned to hang at dawn. Since his arrest he has been hewing the figure of Christ upon the Cross out of the prison wall. Russell, hardened and cynical because of his sweetheart's apparent unfaithfulness, watches the condemned man as he hastens to finish his work in the moonlight. Excellent lighting marks these shots. When the murderer falls exhausted, Russell sees the figure descend from the cross to comfort him. It is quite artistic. The girl, now married to the heavy with the promise that Russell will be exonerated, learns that she has been tricked, and hurries to free the star. Russell is acquitted and the villain is made a suicide.

There are some very much overdrawn shots of the effect of the miracle in the prison upon the populace. The clergymen are also pitifully effeminate and unreal.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

It is a story of the California Redwoods that is to be the attraction at the theatre on —. "The Man Who Dared" is the title, and the star is William Russell, one of the most virile and attractive of screen actors, who, in this story which was written especially for him, is given every opportunity to impress, not only by his wonderful manly build and strength, but also by his remarkable dramatic ability.

In "The Man Who Dared," Russell plays a rough and ready foreman of a lumber camp. He is the leader of a gang of hard drinking workmen who have never known a single good influence. There is a pretty and thoroughly interesting romance woven in. The girl has just returned from an Eastern school to find that her father has been driven by financial troubles to become a forger. Jim O'Kane, played by Russell, cannot bear to see his sweetheart troubled. She needs money. And money she will have—so Jim and his pal decide to hold up the express company to get it. How he comes to realize that honest methods are better, and how he changes from a cynical, hardened disbeliever into a man of unbounded faith and forgiveness, forms the bulk of this interesting photoplay.

The picture was made with a wealth of natural and beautiful scenery as a background. It is technically perfect and many exquisite lighting effects add to the general beauty. Eileen Percy plays opposite the star. It was her work in this and other pictures that caused William Fox to star this dainty actress, and she is now at work at features in which she herself plays the stellar role. The picture was directed by Emmett Flynn.

PROGRAM READER

Real human men are the kind we like to see on the screen. Men who are a living shadow of the people who move about in the real world, hating, like the humans we know and understand. Such a character is Big Jim O'Kane, in "The Man Who Dared," which will be the attraction at this theatre on —. The author has made him no angelic, sanctimonious cinema-hero, rather has he made him an unreal, unscrupulous villain. Instead Big Jim is a regular flesh and blood man—one who has his share of the faults of humans, and perhaps more than his share of their kindness, charity and faithfulness.

Who could depict this lumberjack better than William Russell? For this screen favorite has here turned out his masterpiece. A story of the California Redwoods, this has beautiful scenery as a background for the dramatic action, which fills the picture with thrills and suspense. Playing opposite him is Eileen Percy, that dainty little actress who is soon to be a star in her own name. Big Jim O'Kane is a wholesome mixture of human faults and human virtues and you will love him just as much as did little Mamie Lee.

SUGGESTIONS

This is a fine picture in which to appeal to the Russell following. A great many may expect him in a farce, to be sure, but to get over the fact that this picture is a dramatic one, as well as one filled with thrilling physical action. A cut of the star in Eastern clothes will be attractive in the lobby. For a teaser campaign this slogan would be appealing. "I dare you to shoot!" Follow this with a cut of the star and underneath, "The Man Who Dared." Start this a week ahead of time, if you run it in the daily paper. A stage setting to represent a forest would be in order, but probably a little expensive.

CATCH LINES

A story of a lumber camp in the West, with William Russell in the most dramatic role of his career.

"A DARK LANTERN"

(Realart)

Draggy Picture Develops to an Evident Conclusion

THE lack of novelty in this age-old theme, the stilted acting, the absence of any real dramatic inspiration in authorship or direction, the obvious development to an evident conclusion—these faults take away an entertainment value from "A Dark Lantern." The idea behind this story has lost its appeal with the average picturegoer. The girl who is offered a morganatic marriage with a scion of nobility, and saves her self-respect by ensnaring a likely young man from her own station in life, has become a trifle passe. Such a story has lost its punch because royalty has more or less "taken the count" since the war. The American girl or one of English blood who caters to blue-blooded aristocracy upon the continent may be fairly interesting as found in the magazine supplement of a Sunday paper, but on the screen she is lacking in appeal.

The picture takes a slap at morganatic marriages. That's about all it does do. Every scene and situation is obvious to a degree with the action carefully planted far in advance. So much so that there is not a single note of suspense. Elizabeth Robins, the author, and Burns Mantle, the scenarist, have done their work capably enough. That is not the point. The fault is the subject matter which is poor material for screen expression. As able a director as John Robertson is, he fails to give it any sparkle, any novel highlights. The picture shows evidences of severe cutting, for a number of the scenes are disconnected.

The action travels from London to the imaginary kingdom of Argovinia (page George Barr McCutcheon), to Rome and back to London with scarcely any continuity. Along about the middle the heroine discovers the true intentions of the royal son, with the conflict offered in the figure of the young doctor, who is a wary fellow. A nervous breakdown follows and she disobeys his instructions, but she isn't too sick to play the age-old game of "catching a husband." He is as indifferent as the Royal Prince is romantic. And therein lies his charm. The title finds its meaning in the black expression he assumes when in her presence. It strikes us that Mr. Robertson could have made more of the subject—as if he could have given it some dramatic color. A touch or two of humor would have enlightened the dreary idea. It drags its way without a spark of vitality. The performance is uneven at times.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Alice Brady, the popular Realart star, is to appear at the theatre next in her newest offering entitled, "A Dark Lantern," an adaptation by Burns Mantle of Elizabeth Robins' fascinating story. It is quite an unusual tale and offers the charming and talented star opportunities to express her personality. Her role is that of an English girl, the daughter of a profligate father. Her youthful fancy is ensnared by the fascinations of a young Prince of a small principality.

For several years he lays siege to her heart, begging her to accept the conditions of a morganatic marriage. She struggles with her pride and outraged love, and presently discovers that she is not ready to humble herself to him, but to a young doctor in her own station of life. In fact she humiliates herself to make him love her and the effort is successful. The picture offers any number of tense situations which are brought out with genuine dramatic feeling by the adaptor and director. Miss Brady is assisted by a cast of excellent players. James L. Crane, Brandon Hurst, Reginald Denny, and David Montero are a few of the actors. John S. Robertson has directed the picture with his customary good taste.

PROGRAM READER

Should a woman propose? Isn't it an accepted fact that woman does the proposing, though she doesn't always ask a man to marry her? Doesn't she make it pleasant enough for a suitor to enjoy her company? And can she make it delightful or not according to her whim and fancy? It sometimes happens that when she meets the right man he is not fortified with the necessary initiative to propose. In that case isn't it perfectly proper for her to encourage him and propose herself? These questions are answered to the tune of delightful drama in "A Dark Lantern," Alice Brady's latest Realart picture, which comes to the theatre next. The story is by Elizabeth Robins, scenarized by Burns Mantle, and directed by John S. Robertson.

Should a woman propose? If you believe that this initiative destroys feminine charm you will be disappointed. Come and see Alice Brady in "A Dark Lantern."

"THE SQUARE SHOOTER"

(Fox)

A Familiar Story in Average Western

THERE is nothing unique in this production either in story, star, action or sets, and after the first two reels you can see that it is going to be nothing more or less than a familiar story of the mistaken identity variety with the usual gun play and pursuit over the plains. In short, it is good for mild interest, but can lay no claim to anything above the average, except possibly that Buck Jones has his usual pleasing personality.

Jones plays an Arizona ranch owner, who returns after a five-year's absence to find that the foreman is a crook. A Kansas City man is also half owner in the ranch and sends his son, a citified mollycoddle, to investigate affairs in Arizona. Jones and he meet accidentally and the city chap flees in fear with Jones' clothes. The star then impersonates the young man, and starts to end the corruption on the ranch. The cowboys, thinking he is an Easterner, are surprised to find that he can ride a broncho, throw a lariat, and perform other cowboy stunts with skill. The star, foreman and his gang attempt to kill the star, but prove to be very poor shots. The girl is attacked, and after a chase around the table, is rescued in the usual style by Jones. An unnecessary twist is brought in at the end, when it is learned that Jones is the sole owner of the ranch.

Such rapid recovery from wounds as we see here has come to be expected in this type of picture and probably will not be noticed. There is also a rather improbably worked out escape of the star from an improvised gallows. Jones' leap from a cliff to the back of a horse is good for an average thrill.

Patsey De Forest plays opposite the star and does well enough in her few opportunities. Al Fremont is the conventional villain. This picture will entertain an audience with a hunger for Westerns, but not many others.—Length, 5 reels.—Matthew A. Taylor.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Buck Jones, the inimitable cowboy actor, plays the leading role in "The Square Shooter," a picture of the virile West, which will be the attraction at the theatre on —. This is a thrilling bit of life as it is on the Western plains, among cattle rustlers and quick-shooting cowboys, with the star in a role that gives him ample opportunity to display his ability as a broncho-breaker, lariat-thrower, and all-around hard-riding cowboy.

Making pictures like "The Square Shooter" is far from being the easy life that those who are not acquainted with life in the movies, are wont to believe. It took weeks of hard work to film a story so full of thrills and action. There is something doing every minute and excitement every second. Probably the greatest thrill is a scene where Buck Jones leaps from a cliff over the road upon the back of a running horse, knocking the rider to the ground and saving the heroine from him.

The story tells of the corrupt foreman of the "Flying A" ranch and how he is finally brought to grief when Jones impersonates a city youth and discovers the foreman's methods of cattle-rustling. There is no small amount of comedy injected when the cowboys start in surprise at the "city chap's" ability to ride a broncho that they themselves were never able to go near.

Supporting the star is pretty Patsey De Forest, and others in the cast include Ernest Shields, Al Fremont and Charles K. French. The story is by Denison Clift, and Paul Cazenueve did the directing.

PROGRAM READER

It is the West that gives us our most virile men, and our most virile stories. Such a story is "The Square Shooter," which will be the attraction at this theatre on —. And such a man is Buck Jones, the inimitable screen star, who plays the leading role in this cowboy drama. It is the kind of a story that the whole world loves, for it is full of red-blonded action, and constant thrills, as it tells the tale of the love of a strong, manly man, and a girl's true-hearted devotion. Patsey De Forest is the girl in this case and is equal to the task of supporting such a star as Buck Jones. The rest of the cast are fully capable and you will be assured of seeing a thrilling, well-acted, and technically perfect drama of the West, taken in the West, and filled with the rough and ready atmosphere of the West, when you see "The Square Shooter." The picture will be shown for — days.

SUGGESTIONS

The star seems to deserve most of our investigations in this picture. He is handsome and has an attractive history behind him that reads well in print. Mention his previous successes. Use as a teaser: "He rides, he loves, he shoots—Square!" A cowboy riding through the street would be the best outdoor stunt. He should bear a sign reading "Buck Jones—he shoots square and fights fair." "The Square Shooter," at the — theatre. If you can find anyone proficient in rope throwing, you could conduct a lariat contest on the stage through him.

"My patrons did not like this one and as a result, it did not go over. Played it one day to poor business." "A rather poor picture to three days of poor business." "Good picture which did average business for one day." Consensus—"Average picture, average puller."
RIDERS OF THE DAWN (BENJ. HAMPTON-HODKINSON)	SPECIAL CAST	MAY 13	Colorful action compensated for plot shortcomings. —M. P. News. Exhibitor Comment—"This picture went very well because it was a Northwest picture and full of exciting stunts. It appears to be good for a second run."		SUDS (UNITED ARTISTS)	MARY PICKFORD	JULY 10	Unique characterization and artistic lightings lift slender and common place story. —M. P. News. Exhibitor Comment—"Pickford's latest appears to be a rather poor production. Played it one week to poor business. Pretty good but not a knockout by any means. Did not go well at all. They did not like it." "Played it one week." Consensus—"Average picture, average puller."
RIO GRANDE (CAREWE-PATHE)	SPECIAL CAST	APR. 24	Should give satisfaction wherever shown. —M. P. News. Exhibitor Comment—"Played this feature one week to poor business. Hot weather seems to be the cause for the drop in business."
ROMANCE (UNITED ARTISTS)	DORIS KEANE	MAY 29	Artistic production given play of love and sentiment. —M. P. News. Exhibitor Comment—"Fair—rather poor entertainment however. Too much sentimentality." "Went over big because it was well advertised and put over on a big scale, but it seemed to be too deep for ninety per cent of the patrons." Consensus—"Good picture, good puller."
SAND (PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)	WILLIAM S. HART	JULY 3	William S. Hart and his Pinto score in characteristic picture. —M. P. News. Exhibitor Comment—"Very entertaining. Has a good cast and is well produced. Railroad-holdup stories seem to always fascinate my audiences. Hart does good work and more acting than heretofore. One week to big business every day." "This is a very good production. My patrons liked it very much and were pleased with Hart. Played it two days to big and average business." Consensus—"Good picture, good puller."

Yes, Mr. Gunning, We Have Figured It Out !

[And So Have the Country's Exhibitors]

Have you figured out who the best twenty-five directors are working for this year? Quite interesting, wasn't it? And were you careful to consider where their films go for this year? You want to inquire carefully about that.

Wid

Seven of the directors who are generally recognized by exhibitors as possessing the abilities to do work ranking with the best the industry has ever known—

Are working for themselves this year and for many years to come.

Seven producer-directors are no longer carrying weak stars or sustaining uneven-strength programs with their best work.

Seven producer-directors working out their ideals, doing the kind of productions that exhibitors themselves have told them mean the heaviest public patronage of picture theatres—such a seven-man alliance is a very high percentage of the twenty-five directors about whom "Wid" Gunning asks.

We believe that thousands of exhibitors must have noticed that we have issued no publicity for weeks; that we haven't sent a piece of publicity to the trade journals in a month. We are working, not talking. Evidently, on the basis of contracts already signed, the exhibitors of the country have a measure of the confidence in us that we have in ourselves.

Our hearts are in our work. You, the exhibitors, will reap the benefit of our ambitions and our efforts.

You know you would clean up "Humoresque" is all three rolled into one supreme photoplay.

And it's just as sure fire for the box-office as any picture ever made.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION

INCORPORATED IN NEW YORK CITY. CAPITAL $1,000,000. OFFICE 150 N. W. COR. 42ND ST. N. Y. C.

"How Green the Hills Look Far Away"

HOW DO YOU book your pictures—on future promise or past performance? Take future promise, for instance: it means tons of verbal description, dressed up in silk—beautiful anticipation, lovely hope, enthusiastic expectation!

They all look good when they're far away.

Do you book pictures on hope?

Box-office lines are not formed on the public's hope of seeing a good picture. The public discriminates in favor of what it knows. Folks don't need to waste quarters nowadays in experimenting on their picture entertainment. They've learned this logic:

Take an Organization that has back of it the ideals and the resources of men, money and material to put forth such entertainment as Cecil De Mille's "Male and Female" and "Why Change Your Wife?," George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man," George Fitzmaurice's "On with the Dance," John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," George Melford's "Everywoman," William D. Taylor's "Huckleberry Finn," William S. Hart in "The Toll Gate" and "Sand," Wallace Reid in "Double Speed" and "Excuse My Dust," Douglas MacLean and Doris May in "23½ Hours Leave," Maurice Tourneur's "Treasure Island," Thomas H. Ince's "Below the Surface" and a hundred other week-in-and-week-out, constant, consistent, dependable knock-outs.

Add the fact that, jealous of its established position, sure in its proven knowledge of what the most popular entertainment really is, and possessing, (in the way of stories, stars, directors, studios, scenarioists, authors, artists and money) a wealth of resources unequaled in the history of the theater, such an Organization is going on producing—lavishly, wisely, humanly—motion pictures that shall be week-in-and-week-out, constant, consistent, dependable, better and better sure-fire public entertainments.

Future promise backed by past performance—and the future promise actually surpassing the past.

It's an unbeatable combination for exhibitors.

How do you book your pictures?

ETHEL CLAYTON

in

"Crooked Streets"

FROM the dark corners of Shanghai's slums the evil eyes of her enemies gleamed—each holding a menace that struck horror to her soul.

Then—from nowhere—came a protector—an American. Fought for her—saved her—and vanished.

Who was he? What was his mission in those lurid dens? Later, when she found out—you'll be as much surprised as she was.

It's an unusual and gripping story, filled with surprises and exciting situations.

AROUND them the circle of death drew closer. A common doom awaited them.

But within the circle surged love and hate and passion. Men and women, fated to die within the hour, still waged their primitive battles.

You'll say that Tourneur has scaled the heights of thrilldom with this masterly melodrama. And your audience will say so too.

THE STORY OF A MAN WHO WOULD AND DID

To possess life one must have lived it!

THE creative genius of William Desmond Taylor is the priceless individual possession of a man who has dared all the deepest, fullest experiences of life. Profound in its searchings, broad and sweeping in its range, courageous in its intimate contacts, his life has been the free, glorious adventure of a transducer in quest of an ideal.

Through all his varied enterprises as Irish student, engineer, actor, Kansas ranchman, Klondike miner, director of photoplays and soldier in the World War, his single dominant purpose has been to acquire that rich knowledge of life which is the necessary equipment of one who would interpret the intangible vastness of human relations in some lasting form.

William Desmond Taylor was born on the country estate of his grandfather near Mallow in County Cork, Ireland. The lad was sent to Clifton College in England for preparatory work in engineering and this was supplemented by intensive study in Germany and France, but his own ambition was to achieve fame as an actor. Shortly after his eighteenth birthday, young Taylor was in Manchester, England, when Charles Hawtrey was appearing in "The Private Secretary," and the stage-struck boy applied for work, telling Hawtrey he had had "lots of experience." Sir Charles took him on and the inexperienced youngster made good. This was his first professional engagement and then began the development of those qualities which have made him one of the greatest directors of his time.

Taylor accompanied Hawtrey and his company to London and there friends of the family saw him. Young Taylor's father was notified and rushed to London. Arguments proving useless, the father finally bribed the boy into giving up the stage by buying him a half interest in a Kansas ranch, near Harper.

After eighteen months of ranch life, the yearning for the stage returned. An opportunity came to play in repertoire with Fanny Davenport and young Taylor seized it. He was with Miss Davenport for three seasons, in such fine, old plays as "La Tosca," "Gismonda," "Fedora," "Cleopatra" and "Joan of Arc."

Mr. Taylor's stage engagements dovetailed with his journeyings to far places in search of gold and adventure—mostly the latter. His acting experiences were progressive and included several seasons in repertoire companies in Boston, New York, Chicago and Seattle with a tour to the Hawaiian Islands, as leading man in the Harry Corson Clarke company. Incidentally and between times he played the juvenile with Sol Smith Russell in "The Poor Relation" and the lead in "Madame Sans Gene." It was a grilling school and developed and fixed Mr. Taylor's naturally keen sense of dramatic values, which he employs so effectively in directing motion pictures.

When gold was discovered in Canada, the adventurous youth was off with the vanguard in the great rush to the Klondike. He went by the "Long Trail," overland through the great Northwest and nine gruelling months, such as test the soul of a man, passed before he reached the gold fields. At intervals he made a second and a third trip to the Klondike. The long winter evenings gave him unusual opportunities for reading and study and he took full advantage of them.

During his last trip away from civilization the infant art of the motion picture had teetted and become a lusty child. The vision that held the early pioneers in the new art was appealing to Taylor. The man who had gone off with the leaders of the Klondike rush was again out in front with the challenge of new adventure. He made one picture, "The Iconoclast," for Kay Bee. Subsequently he made "The Diamond from the Skies," a famous old sixty-reel serial, for American. "This production was a great education," declared Mr. Taylor. "I frankly used the play as an experimental laboratory to try effects. We had autos going over cliffs, people falling from balloons, train accidents and all sorts of trained animals from an octopus to an elephant."

Mr. Taylor also made "A Tale of Two Cities." In 1914 he joined the Famous Players-Lasky forces and his long list of productions for them besides his recent success, "Huckleberry Finn," includes "The Varmint," "Tom Sawyer," "Bunker Bean" and "Mile A Minute Kendall" with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff; "Up the Road with Sallie," with Constance Talmadge; "How Could You, Jean?" "Captain Kidd, Jr." and "Johanna Enlists" with Mary Pickford.

The Great War offered the supreme test of Mr. Taylor's physical and moral calibre. He was near the height of success as a director when the catastrophic shot was fired at Sarajevo. Instantly he gave up everything and enlisted as a "buck" private in the Canadian Army. He sailed with the Royal Fusiliers, part of the famous "first hundred thousand" from Quebec.

His distinguished services brought quick recognition. He advanced rapidly through the various non-commissioned grades to the rank of a second lieutenant. At the end of the war he was discharged with the rank of a captain.

When peace was declared, Mr. Taylor once more turned his attention to motion picture directing. Realart was just starting on its career and made haste to secure his services. His first task for Realart was to direct Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables," the new corporation's initial Star release. This production stands out with cameo-like sharpness as one of the best directed pictures of the season.

It is this man whom Realart has selected to make four great super-special productions; this man, whose creative powers are as unconfined as the far-flung barriers of a civilization he has himself helped so much to establish. His is the daring spirit which will create for motion picture audiences the struggles and conquest of the human soul under varying conditions of modern life.

THE SOUL OF YOUTH will take the boy of the streets, of the reform school, and illustrate the thesis that kindness, sympathy and education will cause the latent seed of character to blossom and flower in the full beauty of a high-charactered American citizen. THE SOUL OF YOUTH was written by Julia Crawford Ives and is a gem of contemporaneous boy literature.

THE FURNACE, his second production, is the story of the soul growth of a woman who has everything she wants, save the love of her husband, and who wins her way to true happiness against the barriers set by class feeling and social conventions. The production is based on a sensational story by "Pan," an anonymous English writer, and its appearance not so long ago marked an epoch in British short story writing.

THE WITCHING HOUR, his third production, tells of the soul struggle of a man possessed of strange occult powers and his battle against the employment of this weird influence on those near and dear to him. As a stage play, THE WITCHING HOUR by Augustus Thomas, created a tremendous theatrical sensation a few years ago. It had a long Broadway run with a distinguished cast and for sheer power and originality of its daring plot was one of the most talked about stage productions of a decade.

Here, then, are three of the four Taylor Realart special productions. In the making of these every resource of Realart's powerful organization has been placed at the disposal of the distinguished director. THE SOUL OF YOUTH is now available to exhibitors. It is a picture of tremendous appeal, with abundant humor and haunting charm. It is a moving human document worthy, in every respect, of the dauntless spirit and superbly controlled directing energy of William Desmond Taylor.

—you may not know her right now but you will shortly. Just take one glance at any of her releases and they'll stick in your mind—she's got a way of her own that you can't dodge—a hearty personality that makes her an instantaneous favorite.

And the pictures she's been making. We've seen a lot of pictures of the same type but never have we seen any that pack the wallop of these two reels. They gallop across the screen in a way that causes folks to jerk to attention and glut their eyes on a feast of movie joy they've seldom known.

Every little detail is correct—perfect. From camera to consumer they're at the head of their class. There isn't a wasted jiffy in 'em—they've got more real meat than many five reels we've seen.

Fritzi Ridgeway is bound to be one of the biggest events on the screen this season. You will remember her as "The Girl with a Thousand Personalities." No matter what her part may be, she makes an epic of it. As beautiful as they make 'em and as versatile as the four winds—that's Fritzi Ridgeway.

Her pictures will come every two weeks—twice a month.

The state rights are now selling and selling fast.

—watch this boy. He's got what a lot of screen comedians lack—a sense of humor. And under our direction he's applying it to making the best single reels on the market.

Whatever you like in comedies, you'll find right here. Slapstick—dimpled knees—speed—wild situations—subtitles that each fetch a laugh—clean, clearcut photography, trick stuff without an equal—and more than anything else—this sense of humor we spoke about before.

Bobbie's practically a newcomer—but the kid's clever. He's started right off with a bang—and we'll place a neat bet that he'll have the motion picture theatres of this country rocking with laughter before he's very old on the screen.

Once a week, for 52 weeks Tusun comedies featuring Bobbie Ray will be ready for you. They're single reels with about ten reels of laughs packed tight into each one.

State Righters—here is a comedy you can depend on to keep your exhibitors hungry for more.

We advise quick action.

"Every Chicago Newspaper Praises It"

Never has there been greater unanimity among critics than among those of the four big Chicago dailies concerning this remarkable but authentic picture of the adventures of Edward Laemmle and William Alder among the man-eating savages of New Guinea. ROB REEL—VIRGINIA DALE—GENEVIEVE HARRIS and W. K. HOLLANDER all say, "Go see 'SHIPWRECKED AMONG CANNIBALS' at the La Salle Theatre." ROB REEL says, for example: "The pictures are exciting—and intensely interesting—and different." While VIRGINIA DALE says: "There have been cannibal pictures before but never have there been any so remarkable as those now on exhibition."

Best of all, this amazing film has more exploitation angles to it than a circus. Go to your Universal-Jewel Exchange and see the smashing exploitation helps with which you can make this astounding picture one of the biggest clean-ups of your history. Do this now—today.

This picture has its faults, the majority of them talking in the beginning, but after they get interested, it's worth your return, it enters the story convincingly. The production is excellent, the acting good, the story strong.

The picture is very attractive. Then there is the cast. Sheldon Lewis and Gladys Hulette are names prominently. Also stated that the action takes place in the Swiss Alps. The atmosphere here has achieved for these scenes is quite convincing.

The title is very much similar to others that have gone before. It is a strong one and one around which interesting and diverting revels.

OCTOBER FIRST IS THE DAY

This first great masterpiece of the series of five-part feature productions which Neal Hart is now doing for Pinnacle will be released simultaneously in all parts of the country on that date—October 1st.

If any proof were needed of the unusual power and distinction of these attractions, it is furnished by the irreproachable personnel of the Independent Film exchanges which have contracted for the handling of Pinnacle Productions.

No shoddy, cheap, clap trap would win a moment's consideration from such dealers.

It is a mighty testimonial—and one of which Pinnacle is intensely proud—that within ten days after the signing of Neal Hart, the foremost Independent Exchanges in the country had closed sale contracts totalling $142,000.

Each Neal Hart Picture will be an Independent Special which will be best suited to this star's supreme portrayal of the outdoor type of American manhood.

William Farnum has never appeared to better advantage. The presentation is splendid from every point of view.—N. Y. Tribune.

Delightfully entertaining picture adapted from famous romance. William Fox has a money-maker for you in "If I Were King."—Wid's.

The flavor of romance, of picturesque adventure in a colorful world has been caught. A spectacular and swiftly moving melodrama is the result. Farnum's performance one of the best things he has ever done.—N.Y. Times.

Presenting William Farnum in a finely staged version of "If I Were King," William Fox has scored strongly, for the star has not been seen to greater advantage and the play has had a long and honorable career.—Moving Picture World.

William Fox has never sponsored a better picture. It combines distinction with story and production. William Farnum as Villon is at his best. It moves with the breathless suspense of a Jack London story.—N. Y. American.

Justin Huntly McCarthy's story is ideal film material, and an ideal vehicle for William Farnum, who repeats the success he made in "A Tale of Two Cities." The production has great charm.—Louella O. Parsons, Morning Telegraph.

PEARL WHITE

"The White Moll" is excellent entertainment. The name of Pearl White is a box office attraction in itself, but when she is given a part in a story of underworld life that carries suspense to the nth power, that grips the audience till the final climax, she becomes a "one best bet." In "The White Moll" we have such a story.—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

The time spent in serial work on the screen is comparable to stock experience on the stage. It has enabled Pearl White to flash a finished technique—a skill at pantomime which some, who have reached stardom through the medium of five reels, might well emulate. Miss White won't lose any of her following here. She should gain many new admirers.—Motion Picture News.

William Fox, in presenting Pearl White as a dramatic star, has seen to it that she has made her debut under the most auspicious circumstances. In "The White Moll" he has given her a feature that will be remembered. It is a perfect picture for Pearl White.—N. Y. Telegraph.

For Pearl White's introduction in feature-length pictures William Fox has selected a crook-and-mystery story of compelling interest. In no place does the story lag, and the situations are registered with uncompromising effectiveness. This story gives Miss White the occasion of appearing in a multitude of adventure and escape situations in which her work is sincere and telling.—Exhibitor's Herald.

"While New York Sleeps" is a high-strung trinity of stories whose scenes move in tragic revelation, dark soul interiors suddenly illumined, with lightning flashes on criminal tendencies. The picture is admirably balanced amid the upper and under worlds of a great city.

"While New York Sleeps" is a three-act drama which shows three phases of life in the metropolis. This picture, unique in theme and produced upon big scale, will stand big advertising. It should be a box office sensation of the Fall season.

"While New York Sleeps" Grips the Attention

Everybody concerned in the making and production of this picture is to be highly complimented. Not in a long time has such a decided novelty been made available for exhibitors and in this eight reel photodrama they have something that should be a real, not a fancied, box office record breaker. From beginning to end it grips the attention and the spectator finds himself deeply absorbed in the many exciting scenes of the three episodes.—Exhibitor's Trade Review.

A mystery story that will pack 'em in wherever shown. Thrills, well, we'll say so. The like of which you've never seen before. Aeroplanes, submarines and the latest invention, a submarine train. Startling story, superb production, wonderful acting. A real winner.

Knowing and Guessing

¶ A contemporary publishes its total net paid circulation and gives the distribution by States.

¶ MOTION PICTURE NEWS beats the figures given, and by substantial margins, in 33 States. (Figures and complete proof given to any advertiser who will call at our offices).

¶ The significant fact, in this comparative test of circulation volume, however, is this: MOTION PICTURE NEWS uses only its paid subscriptions, whereas the contemporary includes also its newsstand circulation. (So we assume from the statement).

¶ Newsstand circulation, with a picture trade publication, is of no value to the advertiser.

¶ If it were, MOTION PICTURE NEWS could and would acquire any needed amount of it between issues. No effort is required save a brief conversation with the American News Company.

¶ Newsstand circulation, with a trade publication, is a downright fallacy; there are so many and such obvious objections to it; a few specious arguments that might be conjured in favor of it are so easily made ridiculous—that it is beyond sensible discussion.

¶ MOTION PICTURE NEWS, out of a total printed edition of 11,700 this week gives the newsstand just 195 copies. 70 copies go to the Los Angeles News Company; 125 are ordered by the film building newsstands in New York City.

¶ THAT'S ALL!

¶ We assume that these few, carefully placed copies go to the trade. But we don't know about all of them. And we apologize to the advertiser for the entire number, small as it is.

¶ To reiterate: MOTION PICTURE NEWS beats its contemporary's statement in 33 States with subscriptions alone.

¶ And we know, and will tell any interested advertiser just to whom these subscriptions go.

The Real Test

WHEN several trade publications reach the same reader as they must and do, it isn't a question of bulk circulation that determines advertising value.

- ¶ MOTION PICTURE NEWS, by a recent test is preferred four to one over any other trade paper. It is preferred more than all the rest put together.

Like a Field Poem

"Not since 'The Other Half' has King Vidor put forth such a pleasing entertainment as 'The Jack-Knife Man,' a picturization of Ellis Parker Butler's story of the same name. The offering may really be called something different. The spectator looks upon a quaint character study—one having an old derelict with a heart as big as a mountain for its hero. Simplicity is the keynote that Mr. Vidor has sounded—a keynote that strikes a responding chord because it is brought out with a wealth of human touches. The picture is a study in heart interest.

"The lovable old fellow who lives on his houseboat and finds a spiritual awakening in the comradeship of a little boy is a figure who reaches out and tugs at the heart strings. He is shiftless and almost on the point of starvation, but his generosity toward mankind overshadows his weaknesses. He carves out quaint figures for the amusement of the child—a child who has been left with him when the mother dies. The picture is like a visualization of one of Riley's or Field's poems. That's how close to the soil it is.

"The picture sends out a glow through the fine characterization, the appealing heart interest, the balancing vein of homely humor, the truly remarkable atmosphere which is perfect in every detail, and the lifelike performances of Fred Turner as the Jack-Knife Man, and Harry Todd as the big-hearted tramp. Surely something new in picture production! Perhaps the offering is richest in its pathos and humor. Still, better atmosphere hasn't been revealed in many a day. Mr. Vidor evidently has a mission—to create wholesome photoplays. He is certainly enriching the screen with such a type of story."—Lawrence Reid.—The Motion Picture News.

50 to One They'll Like It

"King Vidor has given 'The Jack-Knife Man' a delightful production. The Mississippi River scenes are wonderfully true. The long shots of the house-boat floating down the river are beautifully lighted and photographed. The detail of the interiors is such as to make them the most realistic ever filmed.

"The performances are all delightful. Fred Turner's characterization of the old man is a rare piece of screen acting. His is a distinct creation, sure to interest and entertain, clever enough to win great approval. Harry Todd as the jovial tramp leaves nothing to be desired. The boy is played realistically by Bobby Kelso. The scenes between these three are the essence of pretty sentiment. They warm the heart to the core.

"The majority of amusement seekers as the success of this show has well proven, are on the lookout for something different, something away from the cut-and-dried type of entertainment, the usual eternal triangle complication or heavy melodrama. This has more distinctive atmosphere, more downright pictorial beauty and pretty sentiment than the majority of pictures released. And it also contains a lovable old man character, something of a third or fourth cousin to the Bill Jones of 'Lightnin' fame.

"It is very human, very much like every-day life. The chances are about fifty to one that they'll like it and tell you so."—Wids.

Real Human Beings

"A story that will undoubtedly please children and grown-ups, the King Vidor picture, 'The Jack-Knife Man,' excels in characterization. 'The Jack-Knife Man' is a pleasing reaction against the conventional stuff of which few directors seem able to rid themselves. Announced as 'something different,' the First National production really does approach the much longed for 'drama of immediate actuality.' Its people are real ones, not afflicted with disguises, dropped letters, overheard conversations, dying confessions and fatal resemblances.

"The director has excelled himself in realistic and picturesque settings. They are in full harmony with the characters, affording a pleasure to the mind of consistent atmosphere. Further than that, his selection of types is in fine accordance with the spirit of the play.

"In a summing up of values 'The Jack-Knife Man' stands for good clean entertainment, brightened by touches of genuine humor, beautified by tender revelations of human kindness."—Moving Picture World.

Full of Heart Interest

"'The Jack-Knife Man' is a well constructed drama surcharged with heart interest, differing from the average feature in that the central idea is the principal character's love for a little child. This is a difficult theme to expand into six reels without becoming tiresome through excess sugary sentiment. But Director King Vidor and his clever company of artists have achieved wonders. There isn't a dull moment in the feature, which ranks as a unique and valuable attraction.

Points of Appeal.—The death of Lize, the erring mother, the affection which grows up between Peter and his helpless ward, the coming of the light-hearted vagabond, 'Boogie,' who turns out to be the child's father, but leaves him in better hands, are all situations vibrant with sympathetic appeal and clever touches of homely comedy add greatly to the picture's entertaining qualities.

Star.—Fred Turner is pleasingly natural as the shiftless but lovable Peter and gives a performance remarkable for dramatic force and conviction.

Supporting Cast.—Bobby Kelso, impersonating "Buddy" registers as a delightful juvenile, destined to win the hearts of all patrons, old and young. Harry Todd is excellent as the hobo father and Lillian Leighton scores a hit as the widow Potter.

Photography and Lighting.—The river and woodland views are exquisite, the brown tinting in some of the scenes being particularly effective, the long shots and closeups are excellent and good lighting distinguishes the production throughout.

Direction.—King Vidor's already brilliant reputation is enhanced by the results he has attained. The continuity is perfect and the action never drags."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

Time Tells

There is nothing transient nor temporary about the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. It had its inception when the motion picture industry was in its infancy. It is in its ascendancy now, when the motion picture industry is in its prime,—and it is our expectancy that it will still be the leader in poster production when photo-plays are ages old. And if the time ever comes when moving pictures vanish from the face of the earth, RITCHEY posters will still be treasured in museums for that which they are,—genuine works of art.

For they are works of art! Advertising art! Which is the greatest and most complex art of all. For in addition to the rare qualities that go into the making of an ordinary work of art, in advertising art is the added factor of psychology.

In the RITCHEY poster that factor is worked out no less carefully than the others. Its ability to appeal to the psychology of the crowd is one of the strongest characteristics of the RITCHEY poster. It makes that appeal strongly and with an absolute conviction. And it gets the appeal over every time. More than that, a motion picture poster can not do. The rest is in the hands of the ticket sellers—and the RITCHEY posters will keep them busy all the time.

Timely Thoughts for the Week

The Single Track Rut

WE have spoken at times of the tendency of production to get into a rut; of the too ready reliance of the average director and actor and writer upon pioneer standards, upon the ready made cut and dried scene situation, piece of "business," etc., etc.

Just what we mean, and just what is the general public attitude today toward this "let-it-go" style of picture is given in the following criticism of a recent picture by a New York newspaper:

"There are the same modishly dressed wives, the same arrogant or indifferent husbands and the timely parlor snake. There are backgrounds of overdone rooms or moonlit exteriors—indeed, none of the prevailing features of the picture play are lacking down to the swiftly moving motor car."

We might remark that this picture cost plenty of money. It lacked only—originality.

What is the matter?

Has the director of such a picture a single-barrel mind? Is he just lazy? Or does he—and does also the star, the cast, the cameraman—believe that most anything in the way of pictures will go over?

Our observation of audiences and their reception of the trite picture leads us to believe that in intelligence they are considerably above the average director.

We recall an advertising writer who used to go from job to job with a stock list of adjectives as his sole asset. His procedure was to sit down to his typewriter, put his list of adjectives up before him, select a number that filled the particular product he was writing about—and then just sling them together.

He said he could be original, but he was too darn tired.

It seems to us that a lot of directors are going about today with a lot of stock "movie stuff"—marine locations, snow scenes, ball room sets and manners, night exteriors, rhapsodical and stilted titles, wide-eyed ingenues, fights, silhouettes—the list could hardly be printed in the issue of "stuff" that has been used over and over again and some of which can be found in most any picture at most any theatre every calendar day of the year.

Try it tonight, Mr. Director, and hear the audience say: "Oh, yes, I saw that same thing in —"

Some hack writers, in the editorial rooms of one of

New York's big publishing houses are turning out novels every day for domestic servants by talking them into dictaphones with eyes half closed in sleep. They got—before the war—about $20.00 a week.

"Earthbound"

IN Earthbound a new, daring and important step has been made in picture production. That is the large fact about this picture.

Earthbound is more than an exceptional picture. One newspaper critic calls it: "a cinematographic distinction." We are inclined to view it in a still larger light as a sort of production milestone, a secession and assuredly an advancement from every idealistic standpoint.

We predict a vast variety of opinions as to the picture's entertainment value. We have our own but we confess it is individualistic. We shall eagerly await the verdict of motion picture audiences not as a matter of curiosity but because we believe this picture is bound to have a large effect one way or another upon future picture production.

In any event the producer has, we believe, the spontaneous approval and admiration of everyone in this industry who hopes for and believes in the wider and finer realization of the motion picture's possibilities.

The Right Word—"Folly"

LORD BEAVERBROOK, the British publisher, who is also interested largely in British picture houses and in the producing of films as well devotes a column in his newspaper, the London Sunday Express, to a signed article dealing with the ever momentous subject of picture monopoly.

He reaches the conclusion that no monopoly is possible in an industry which is also an art.

Marcus Loew in his frank and common-sensible address at the Cleveland Convention said the same thing when he remarked that brains could not be monopolized.

The theorist will say that production can be monopolized when the theatres are well grouped under one head which is interesting as a theory only. Cold practice will never admit of such a theatre situation; nor would the public tolerate such production.

ZUKOR AND COHEN REACH AGREEMENT

FOLLOWING conferences held between Sydney Cohen and the Committee of Nine of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and Adolph Zukor, during the past week, an agreement, the text of which follows, was signed by all parties concerned. With the exception of this, no statement or information concerning the conferences, or of the steps leading up to the signing of the agreement, was given out by either side.

"In view of your statement which appeared in the Exhibitors' Herald, issue of August 14, 1920, and in view of the correspondence between our organization and yourself, we are submitting for your consideration the following proposition, with the earnest hope that same will lead to a permanent adjustment of the controversy existing between the members of our organization and your organization.

"You state that it is your desire and purpose to have the good will of the independent exhibitor of the United States. In our opinion, same can be obtained if you, in behalf of your organization, will go on record in favor of the following definite policies:

"A. That your organization does not intend to acquire theatres or to build new theatres in competition with the independent exhibitors of the country, except in cases where you personally believe that your product is not receiving a fair and proportionate representation.

"B. That whenever in any town, city, community or zone, an independent exhibitor presents to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America a claim that you are about to purchase, acquire or build a theatre which will compete with his, this organization will appoint a fair and impartial committee to investigate the matter (none of whom will be affiliated with any producing or distributing corporation directly or indirectly. If the committee find that you are intending to compete with the exhibitors in such instance, notwithstanding that you are able to secure for your product a fair and proportionate representation in such town, city, community or zone, you agree to receive the report of such committee and to give it your personal consideration, and to give a personal hearing to the committee or its representatives if they so desire.

"If you cannot obtain a fair and proportionate representation of your product in any case, our organization would deem further activities of your company in that case as justifiable, and not a violation of your pledge to our organization.

"To obviate the possibility of any misunderstanding on the above, we desire to call your attention to the fact that we do not propose to permit any committee of our organization to be used for the purpose of forcing any exhibitor to buy inferior productions. We feel that you would want the merit and box office value of your productions to be the deciding factor on this point.

"C. In conformity with the resolution unanimously adopted by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, at their convention in Cleveland, Ohio, on June 8th, 9th and 10th, 1920, regarding an equitable contract between distributors or producers and the exhibitors, your company will co-operate with the counsel and executive committee of our organization and endeavor to agree upon a fair and equitable form of film rental contract, to be made effective at the earliest possible moment.

"D. You will instruct your sales force that upon taking application for every contact for film rental service they will leave with the exhibitor a true copy of the form of contract application which has been signed by the exhibitor.

"In return we are prepared to pledge the unqualified support of our association and its members to your enterprise.

Dated, August 12, 1920."

Signed: Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; Sydney S. Cohen, President; C. C. Griffin, First Vice President; E. J. Peter, Treasurer; W. D. Burford, Fred C. Seeger, John T. Collins, C. L. O'Reilly, C. H. Beau, H. B. Varner.

Accepted for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation—Adolph Zukor, President.

A letter from Mr. Cohen to Mr. Zukor following the signing of the agreement took up exhibitor grievances. He wrote: New York, Aug. 12, 1920.

Mr. Adolph Zukor, President, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, 485 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Dear Sir: I am submitting a copy of a few of the flagrant complaints relative to the activities of Mr. A. S. Black and his representatives, in New England, and of Mr. S. A. Lynch, Southern Enterprises, Inc., and representatives in the South. Our understanding is that you are to have these people and their representatives investigate these complaints and let us have their report on same.

It is also understood and agreed that this committee is to meet with Mr. S. A. Lynch and his representatives, and Mr. A. S. Black and his representatives, so that we personally can go over these propositions in detail, and that Mr. S. A. Lynch, Southern Enterprises, Inc., and theatre holding associates representing your organization in the South, and Mr. A. S. Black and his associates in New England, will enter into a similar arrangement with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, through your efforts as was entered into this 12th day of August, 1920, by and between the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, through you, and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Very truly yours,
MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF AMERICA.

Innerarity Denies Rumor of Pathe in France

Lewis Innerarity, secretary of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and counsel for that organization, has issued an emphatic denial of the reports that Pathe in France is controlled by the Franco-American Cinematograph Corporation.

Pathe cinematographic interests in France are known as the Pathe Cinema Societe Anonyme.

Associated Producers Is Changing Offices

The Associated Producers, Inc., has moved its home-offices from their temporary location on the tenth floor of 729 Seventh avenue to the fifth floor of the same building. The new quarters are crowded, but this will be remedied in the next few days.

Pending the taking over of the entire fifth floor, the New York exchange of the company in charge of Marx S. Nathan, and the Newark exchange in charge of John G. Rohlf, will remain on the tenth floor of the building.

Pre-Release Review of "The Penalty"

(Coldwyn)

"THE PENALTY" Goldwyn's picturization of Gouverneur Morris' melodramatic novel of the same title, had its premiere at the Adams theatre, Detroit this week and, according to Motion Picture News correspondent in that city is provoking favorable comment. The telegram reads: "A well-conceived, well-executed and gripping melodrama. The story taken from the magazine serial story by Gouverneur Morris, is unusual in plot and sustained in dramatic interest. Lon Chaney, who played the part of the 'Frog' in George Loane Tucker's 'The Miracle Man' is, in the leading role, as a legless beggar, by day, and the Czar of the San Francisco underworld, by night. An injury to his brain in the accident which caused the amputation of his legs, caused him to degenerate into the merciless criminal that he is. The climax of the picture, wherein the criminal's brain is restored to normal and his legs returned, is a thriller. The critic of the Detroit dailies concede this picture to be unusually good." Wallace Worsley directed.

France Protests Against Import Restrictions

The whole of the French Film Industry is reported to be up in arms against the government action in regards to the new regulations and restrictions to be placed on their trade. Among the most important of the new measures is the one which would prohibit the importation of foreign unexposed films on the ground that the celluloid comes under the heading of raw material.

The national production of celluloid is declared to be so reduced since the war as to be almost negligible. The obvious result of such a measure would therefore be to so cripple the home industry as to place it bound hand and foot at the mercy of the foreign film market which has already obtained such a hold in France. The second result, it is declared, would be to aggravate still further the unsatisfactory French Exchange situation by reducing the exportation of French films abroad, especially to England and the United States, where the franc is so low.

Connecticut Exhibitors Organize Permanent State League

New Haven Convention, Aug. 6, Well Attended; Important Resolutions Passed

A CONVENTION of the motion-picture theatre owners of the state of Connecticut, held at the Hotel Taft in New Haven on Friday, August 6th, took decisive steps to insure the independence and protection of exhibitors of that state in all future controversies, and, after abandoning the old league, formed a permanent state organization under the title of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut.

More than one hundred and fifty theatres were represented at the gathering. The national organization was represented by S. Cohen, New York, president; D. C. Griffin, California, vice-president; E. T. Peters, Texas, treasurer, and C. L. O'Reilly, New York, and Samuel Kaster, of Norwalk, as members of the executive committee. Mr. C. C. Griffin, of California, acted as temporary chairman of the convention and in conjunction with Mr. E. T. Peter and Sydney S. Cohen reported the activities of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America since the national convention at Cleveland.

Resolutions were adopted endorsing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, their officers and all their activities at the Cleveland Convention and since. Resolutions were also adopted against percentage, advance payments in full more than seven days in advance of actual play dates, the producer-exhibitor menace, the present unfair and inequitable contracts, censorship, music tax, activities of F. I. L. M. Clubs, and a strong resolution urging the support of independent producers and distributors.

The entire state quota for the State of Connecticut towards the national organization fund was pledged, and the exhibitors present paid in cash and checks their proportionate shares of the quota.

The officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America spoke of the illegal and unfair methods of certain producers in their attempts to "squeeze out" the little fellows in the industry and touched upon the various phases of abuses from within and without. The local members endorsed the stand of the officers in a most hearty manner and joined in the fear that these large producing forces, left uncontested, would work a hardship upon the small producer and exhibitor and in this way hurt the picture-going public.

At the close of the morning session permanent plans were laid for the organizing of an affiliation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: M. A. Heanue, Bridgeport, president; H. True, Hartford, first vice-president; Jacob Alpert, Putnam, second

Coast Theatres Back to Normal After Quake

PRACTICALLY every downtown theatre in Los Angeles reports business back to normal after the recent earthquake scare which reduced receipts fifty per cent during the past two weeks. The six houses which report above normal business include Grauman's, Grauman's Rialto, Superba, Clune's Broadway, Garrick and Victory.

"Humoresque" made a new record at Grauman's Rialto on its opening day on August 8th, and during the following day business was excellent despite the fact that the house is on the sunny side of the street.

vice-president; M. Pouzzner, New London, third vice-president; Samuel Kanter, Norwalk, treasurer; Joseph Saperstein, Bridgeport, secretary. The executive committee consists of the following: J. J. Gentile, New Haven; J. W. Walsh, Hartford; J. Dawe, Bridgeport; J. B. R. Pickett, Wilamantic; L. B. Murphy, Litchfield; M. J. Zukerman, New London.

Immediately following this meeting, the assembled exhibitors adjourned to a luncheon as guests of the Associated First National Pictures of New England, tendered by franchise holders of the state, to N. H. Gordon, president of the Olympia theatres, Inc., of which chain the local Olympia theatre at New Haven is a unit. W. E. Spragg, manager of the local Olympia theatre, acted as the toastmaster and introduced J. D. Williams, manager of Associated First National Pictures, after Mayor David E. Fitzgerald had welcomed the delegates at the luncheon.

Mr. Williams outlined the difficulties that the exhibitor had to face in order to get the best pictures and how he was always at the mercy of the producer, who many times left the exhibitor in a sad predicament. Associated First National Pictures of America is an organization, explained Mr. Williams, wherein the small exhibitor as well as the large has a share and is insured protection and a proper and prompt service from the producing end of the industry, and, furthermore, certain that the type of pictures released would be of the highest order.

Following Mr. Williams, the assembled exhibitors listened to an illuminating talk by Mrs. M. S. Ayers, of the Exeter theatre, of Boston. "This," said Mrs. Ayers, referring to the proposed affiliation, "will alleviate the uncertain conditions now existing and tend to elevate the moving picture business to a high standard which will mean added hours of enjoyment to the public and more money for the exhibitor."

Vice-President Jacob Alpert, of Putnam, spoke next, and his talk was highly entertaining as well as in order with the spirit of the occasion. His topic was "Faith," and he urged the members to affiliate with the First National enterprise by signing a franchise and after this was done to "have faith and co-operate."

H. Schwalbe, of Philadelphia, secretary and treasurer of Associated First National Pictures, was also an effective speaker.

The last speaker was Mr. Gordon, president of the Olympia chain of theatres. He explained the inner workings of the moving picture business and spoke in glowing words of the future of the industry, with its greater possibilities through the aid of the First National franchise idea.

Motion pictures were taken of the guests in front of Osborn Hall following the First National luncheon.

Among those present were: Joseph Saperstein of Bridgeport, C. Freedman of Bridgeport, Harry Cohen of Bridgeport, John L. Cannon of New Haven, Lewis Cappole of the White City, Nelson Lund of Bridgeport, James T. Rourke of Bridgeport, M. W. Flagg of Terryville, Andy Grannis of Terryville, Joseph Healy of Bristol, M. H. Many New York Incorporations

A TOTAL of 35 firms have incorporated in New York State during the last few weeks for the purpose of entering the motion picture business. These firms show a total capitalization of $2,308,500. Seldom in the history of this State have more firms incorporated in any single line of business than during the last week or two. The capitalization of one firm is as low as $500, while another sets the highwater mark at $1,100,000. With one or two exceptions, the entire number are located in New York City. A list of the firms, with the amount of capitalization of each, together with the directors for the first year, follows:

Norek, Edward M. Everts, New York.

Oklahoma Exhibitors to Have Organization

Fifty motion picture exhibitors from all parts of the state of Oklahoma met in Oklahoma City recently to perfect the organization of the Oklahoma Exhibitors' Association, which was formed as a central buying organization to enable exhibitors in Oklahoma to buy productions at reasonable prices. Col. E. T. Peters of Dallas, Texas, treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of America, addressed the convention and explained the benefits to be derived by the organization of an association. He also made report of the recent convention held at Cleveland.

The association elected the following officers: Al Darry, president, El Reno; W. E. Woodridge, vice president, Altus; H. B. Hall, secretary-treasurer, Oklahoma City; board of governors, Geo. A. Pollard, Guthrie; Frank Miller, Duncan; Al Darry, El Reno; E. J. Story, Elk City; L. N. Cox, Ardmore; J. L. Carr, Kingfisher.

The association will open an office at Oklahoma City in the near future.

Educators Ought to Be More Business-Like

Carl H. Pierce, vice-president of the Kineto Company of America, while recommending that every reasonable co-operation be given the school authorities in promoting education via the screen, protests that educators are too often ready to beg down rentals on the plea of poverty or on the grounds that their use of the pictures is prompted by educational motives and not by a desire for commercial profit. Mr. Pierce advises the educators to approach the problem of securing films in a more business-like way. This mode of procedure will rebound to their benefit, says Mr. Pierce, who points out that the slogan used by educators, "These pictures are not shown for profit," is the very thing that has prevented certain agencies from putting an adequate supply of educational films on the market.

Wisconsin Exhibitors in State Organization

At a well-attended meeting of Wisconsin exhibitors, held in Milwaukee on August 4th, a permanent exhibitors' state organization was formed under the title of the Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association. The following officers and committee members were elected:

President, Joe G. Rhode, Kenosha; vice-president, Arthur Desormeaux, Madison; treasurer, J. Winninger, Appleton; secretary, Fred Seegert, Milwaukee. The executive committee consists of the following: F. J. Williams, Madison; J. H. Silliman, Milwaukee; Henry Goldman, Green Bay; F. E. Walcott, Racine; Earnest Langmack, Milwaukee.

Full co-operation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was promised, and a resolution was adopted supporting the national organization in its producer-exhibitor fight. The quota to the national association was also subscribed. Fred J. Herrington, national organizer, and Joseph Hopp, second vice-president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, addressed the meeting.

Abraham Carlos to Be Tendered Dinner

Abraham Carlos, after an absence abroad for seventeen months, where he has been general foreign representative of the Fox Film Corporation, returned to New York August 8. Mr. Carlos opened nine exchanges in France, Belgium and Algeria. He visited Great Britain, Italy, Spain, Portugal, Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland.

Mr. Carlos' friends will tender him a testimonial dinner at the Astor Tuesday evening, August 17, at 7:30 o'clock. The committee of arrangements is composed of Jule Bernstein, Room 811 (Telephone Bryant 3377), 729 Seventh avenue; Sam Dembow and F. W. Lang. The dinner will be informal.

Educational Film Managers Meet Aug. 20

Eastern Exchange Managers to Gather at Hotel Astor
100 Per Cent Strong to Confer

ACCORDING to a statement from the headquarters of the Educational Films Corporation of America, one hundred per cent attendance at the first conference of Eastern exchange managers of Educational is assured, judging from the replies reported to have been received at the executive offices of E. W. Hammons, the president of Educational Films Corporation. The gathering of the Eastern exchange managers will hold its first session at the Hotel Astor on Friday, August 20. The conference will continue through Saturday, and at the conclusion of the meeting a luncheon will be served. Educational reports that several distinguished guests, whose names are being kept secret for the present, are expected to attend.

The following statement has been issued from the offices of Educational Films in connection with the coming meeting:

"Managers of the Boston, New Haven, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Louisville and New York offices will be present. In a number of cases it is expected that exchanges will be represented by more than one person since the offices appear to be rivaling each other in enthusiasm.

"While this is only the first of a series of similar meetings which will be held every few months, one of the principal purposes is to discuss future pictures

Internal Revenue Ruling on Tax Reconsidered

THE matter of the payment of a five per cent tax by exhibitors on all advertising matter purchased with films, retroactive to May, 1919, has been up for reconsideration at the Internal Revenue Department, Washington, D. C., during the past week, but as yet no definite announcement has been received as to the outcome of the Department's action.

Since the original ruling was made imposing the five per cent tax, a number of film producers have filed protests. Following the receipt of these objections Deputy Commissioner Baker, of the Sales Tax Division, Internal Revenue Department, issued this statement:

"The Department ruling is being reconsidered based upon certain objections filed by some of the film producers."

which will be distributed by Educational, each office having reported that the demand in their respective territories for the comedies, scenics and other short subjects is putting a tax on the product.

"During the meeting talks will be made by Mr. Hammons, and the heads of the domestic sales, publicity and distribution departments, with the special idea of answering any questions from the field forces and conveying to them the information in person instead of a series of letters.

"On account of the time consumed in traveling, it has been deemed impractical to have the managers from more distant territories come to New York, and, immediately following the Eastern convention, Mr. Henry Ginsberg, manager of the domestic sales department, will visit the other exchanges, first going to Dallas and New Orleans, where he will arrange for the opening of offices in those territories.

"As a matter of fact, Educational has enjoyed the benefit of conferences with those associated with it in many of the districts in the past few weeks. During the last week Samuel Katz and R. C. Seery, general manager of exchange interests for Balaban & Katz, brought very bright reports of the demand for Educational product in that territory. Educational comedies and scenics are being given their first run at the Riviera and Central Park theatres in Chicago and are enjoying release at the very best theatres through the territory.

"J. J. Cubberly, general manager of the Minneapolis exchange, brought equally bright reports which were backed up by considerable increases in his orders for material. He declares that the demand for the product far surpasses that for any short subjects in his territory."

W. W. Hodkinson Writes on Vital Subject

Favors Distributing Organization Free from Producer or Exhibitor Control

COMMENTING on the grave state of unrest which today menaces the motion picture industry and referring specifically to one grave evil, W. W. Hodkinson, head of the corporation which bears his name, writes as follows:

"I have been much interested in the willingness with which executives in charge of producer-controlled distribution systems have gone on record to the effect that they will not deal with organizations of exhibitors who wish to book pictures collectively. This is naturally to be expected because of the ease with which a producer group in control of distribution can impose on the disorganized and unprotected individual exhibitor. They naturally will not help him gain strength with which to defeat their own selfish aims.

"On the other hand, it is to be expected that exhibitors suffering under producer domination will utilize the strength of such organizations ruthlessly and without regard to the rights of the producer and there will probably be no choice of methods between the individual exhibitor in the hands of the producer or the producer in the hands of the organized exhibitors.

"More and more forcibly are we seeing the point I have been making for years past and which my organization is designed to meet,—that is the necessity for a distributing organization free from the domination of either producer or exhibitor, that can deal with either exhibitors or producers individually or collectively on the merits of each individual case.

"We will deal with exhibitor combinations today provided they recognize this fundamental difference between us and their producer enemies and provided we can deal on such a basis as to fully protect the interests of the producers who have placed their product in our charge. There is no use dodging the issue: Until exhibitors and producers can meet on an equitable basis the process of elimination by destructive methods will go on. Our organization is especially designed to co-ordinate the interests of a group of exhibitors and a group of producers. Only by such a neutral agency can the antagonism between producer and exhibitor be eliminated and such a coordinated group is bound to take the leadership in this industry."

This is "true talk" from a man who, by years of consistent "result-getting," has proven beyond a doubt his absolute knowledge of the subject whereon he speaks. What the producer-controlled distributors have done is a matter of record; what the organized exhibitors can do remains to be seen; but what a distributor, free from the influence of producer and exhibitor alike, can achieve is—well, according to Mr. Hodkinson, "there are no limits."

Revenue from Rental Tax Shows Big Increase

THE total amount of revenue derived from the five per cent rental film tax for May, 1920, was $389,295.02, an increase of $272,158.20, over May, 1919. These figures were obtained by the Washington office of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry from the Internal Revenue Department this week.

First Nat'l Franchise to Harry Crandall

Acquires from Tom Moore Franchise for the District of Columbia and Maryland

ASSOCIATED FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES announces that Harry M. Crandall, the prominent exhibitor of Washington, D. C., has purchased from Tom Moore the franchise of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for the District of Columbia and for Maryland. In its statement issued in connection with this transaction, First National says:

"Of interest to exhibitors and others in the industry who closely follow the trend of exhibitor sentiment and exhibitor action is the news just to hand of the purchase by Harry M. Crandall, owner of twelve important theatres in Washington, D. C., and with extensive holdings in territory outside of the capital, of the franchise of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for the District of Columbia and for Maryland from Tom Moore, owner of the Rialto and Moore's Garden theatre.

"Beyond the inherent interest of the announcement of this franchise purchase and apart from the consequent wide currency of Associated First National attractions accruing from the notable number of Crandall houses particular import attaches to the purchase of the franchise just consummated, coming as it does at a moment when tacitly or expressly exhibitors throughout the country are anxiously scanning every move and every activity of fellow exhibitors and are being largely influenced by the trend of others in the course they themselves shall pursue. Thus the franchise acquisition just made by an exhibitor of Mr. Crandall's nationwide prominence may justly be said at this time to have more than ordinary import, and, taken in conjunction with the marked activity of Associated First National reported throughout the country and further instanced last week at Boston and New Haven, this instance of Mr. Crandall's latest activity by important gatherings cannot fail to have its influence on exhibitors generally, and may well be regarded as a notable endorsement of First National aims and proof of its success in securing for the independent exhibitor the best product of the independent producers and stars.

"Headed by the magnificent Metropolitan theatre, the Crandall houses in-

Paper Shortage Will Be Acute, Says Burrell

THAT there must shortly be not a mere shortage but an absolute dearth of pulp wood, beside which the present paper lack will be insignificant, unless the prevailing extravagantly wasteful destruction of forests is promptly checked, was stressed in an address before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers by Charles Burrell recently.

Mr. Burrell, back from a three months' journey through the Canadian North West in the interests of the General Electric Company, gave a vivid word-picture of the methods, lack of method and short-sighted improvidence practised in that great regional source of the bulk of the present supply of paper pulp wood. "So rapidly are the vast forests being denuded," said the speaker, "that the growth product of say, 900 years, and in a particular case instanced, even of 1500 years, are consumed in a single day's felling, a rate of consumption which it was self-evident could not long continue without practically a total extinction of supply."

Present at the luncheon were executives and representatives of the trade press including Messrs. F. Boynton, Wm. A. Johnston, Martin Quigley, W. Mulligan, J. Beecroft and N. Kahn.

include in addition the Avenue Grand, Knickerbocker, York, Joy, Apollo, Savoy and Savoy Gardens theatres. The Metropolitan, whose splendid construction, excellently designed interior arrangement and artistic stage equipment are among the most perfect in the country, has a seating capacity of 1,600. The Avenue Grand, on Pennsylvania Avenue, has a seating capacity of 1,000. The Savoy, situated on Fourteenth Street, N. W., seats 1,200, and adjacent to it is the spacious open air auditorium and stage of the Savoy Gardens. The Knickerbocker, at Eighteenth Street and Columbia Road, has a capacity of 1,600, its handsome and commodious lobby being a notable feature of the edifice. The York, at Georgia Avenue and Quebec Street, seats 950. The Apollo, attached to which is an open air park, accommodates 750. Situated at Ninth and E Streets, N. W., is the Joy theatre, formerly known as the Crandall theatre, which under its later cognomen still continues to house audiences to its full capacity of 500. Of Mr. Crandall's holdings, outside of the District of Columbia are theatres in Maryland and West Virginia. In Cumberland, Md., the Strand, which is designed to be the most beautiful playhouse of that territory, will open in September and will have a seating capacity of 1,500. Mr. Crandall recently purchased the Apollo in Martinsburg, W. Va., shortly to be opened following extensive alterations. Its capacity will be 1,000. In Roanoke, W. Va., still another Crandall house is in course of erection.

"Among attractions which Mr. Crandall's newly acquired automatically opens up to his theatres are the productions of Marshall Neilan, James Oliver Curwood, Charles Ray, Norma Talmadge and Constance Talmadge, Katherine MacDonald, Anita Stewart, Lionel Barrymore, Mildred Harris Chaplin, the Mayflower productions and the Mack Sennett comedies."

Florida to Fight Against Producer-Exhibitor

Many of the representative independent theatre owners of Florida were present at a meeting, held in the City Council Chamber Sunday, August 1st, at Tampa, Fla. The meeting was called by President C. D. Cooley, of Tampa, to decide upon entering the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, and to discuss means of meeting the menace of the producer-exhibitor.

The decision was to join the national organization and as soon as a reply is received President Cooley will call another meeting. It is expected the next meeting will be held at Orlando.

F. B. O. to Distribute Universal Products in British Isles

Carl Laemmle Closes Contract with Big British Distributing Company

R. H. COCHRANE, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has announced that the Universal Film and the Film Booking Offices, Ltd., a powerful distributing agency in Great Britain, have signed a contract, the terms of which provide for the distribution in the British Isles of the F. B. O. of all Universal productions in the future.

The contract, which has been under negotiation for several months through George E. Kann, export manager for Universal, who has been in London since early spring, was signed in person by Carl Laemmle, president of the American Film Corporation, upon his recent arrival in London, on a four months' tour overseas.

The tie-up with Universal was considered of such import by the F. B. O. officials that an extended conference with F. B. O. representatives from all parts of the United Kingdom was held in London immediately after the contract was closed. The convention culminated in a dinner at which Mr. Laemmle was the guest of honor and at which official announcement was made of the new international film combination.

One of the features of the evening was the showing of several reels of film depicting the activities and extent of Universal City, Cal., the Universal Studios, and which were taken expressly to be shown to the British Film officials and sales managers who henceforth will market Universal pictures in Great Britain.

"The contract was closed, on the part of the F. B. O., by that organization's five directors, Arthur Clozenberg, Albert Clozenberg, Alfred Wilson, J. Theodore Goddard and W. Cecil Jeapes," said Mr. Cochrane in a recent interview.

"One of the most important results of the new arrangement," he continued, "will be the establishment of Universal products, as such, in the British Isles, just as Universal pictures are known to exhibitors and photoplay patrons in the United States. British Exhibitors soon will learn to know the Universal brand just as American exhibitors now know it.

"This has not been so in the past, to and great extent, in Great Britain. The Universal Trade Mark largely has been lost sight of over there because Universal pictures, hitherto leased under the Transatlantic banner, have been obtained and handled by many different film renters.

"Under the F. B. O. plan, the distribution of Universal pictures will be concentrated, and the individual exhibitor in England will be assured of a steady output of our pictures just as his American brother now knows he can count on Universal for an exact number of features, and so many special productions, as well as sufficient short subjects, in any given period.

"We are sending over to them our six great 1920 Universal-Jewel productions, 'The Virgin of Stamboul,' with Priscilla Dean; 'Shipwrecked Among Cannibals,' 'Under Crimson Skies,' with Elmo Lincoln; 'The Breath of the Gods,' with Tsuru Aoki; 'Once to Every Woman,' Dorothy Phillips' great photo-drama, and Erich von Stroheim's master production, 'The Devil's Pass Key,' which has just been released in this country.

"Stroheim's first great picture, 'Blind Husbands,' already is in England and has been acclaimed by British critics as one of the great film surprises of the year.

"Our 1920 serial program, the Full House Five, including 'The Lion Man,' with Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin; 'Elmo the Fearless,' with Elmo Lincoln; 'The Moon Riders,' with Art Accord; 'The Vanishing Dagger,' with Eddie Polo, and 'The Dragon's Net,' with Marie Walcamp, is to be offered to the British exhibitor under similar conditions that prevailed there—the assurance to the exhibitor of a year's serial supply featuring popular stars.

Likewise no discrimination will be shown in supplying the British exhibitors with feature pictures. Our Star Series of forty-eight pictures, six series of eight pictures each, made by six popular stars, soon will begin its run in the British Isles. These will include pictures by such stars as Harry Carey, Lyons and Moran, Carmel Myers and Frank Mayo.

"The British market is especially interested in the new five-reelers being made by Lyons and Moran. These two stars have gained great popularity over there in their short comedies. British film men are eager to see the longer and more recent pictures turned out by the two Universal funsters.

"Among those present" at the recent Associated First National New England gathering, New Haven, Conn.

"Our tie-up with the F. B. O. is not the result of an impulse, but the culmination of a long and exhaustive study of the British film market. The F. B. O. perhaps is more able than any other British film distributing agency to distribute the quantity and quality of pictures released under the Universal banner.

"With well established branches in every quarter of the United Kingdom, they are in a position to deal directly with the exhibitor and assure him a proper selection from the Universal output. Mr. Laemmle emphatically explained to the British film officials his personal attitude towards the exhibitor—his policy of minding his own business and of producing and distributing motion pictures with no intention of acquiring theatre interests or otherwise interfering with the exhibitor's side of the game.

"This policy has been communicated by the F. B. O. officials to the British exhibitors, with the additional information that the exhibitor always will be able to exercise his own volition in the selection of Universal features so as to assure his screen of pictures that will please his particular public."

British Film Men Will Arrive in September

Percy Winocour, the sole proprietor of the St. Mungo Exclusive Film Co., of Glasgow, Scotland, is sailing on the "Imperator" on a business visit to the United States on August 28th, and during his stay hopes to visit a great many of the prominent film men of America. Mr. Winocour is in quest of good super films for the British market.

While visiting the States for purchasing purposes in the main, it is extremely probable that Mr. Winocour will be offering a few British productions for the American market.

Lee Ferguson Appointed Publicity Chief

Announcement of the appointment of Lee Ferguson as the director of general publicity of the Selznick Enterprises was made by David Selznick recently. He will fill the position left vacant by the resignation of Lee Kugel.

Mr. Ferguson came to the Selznick organization last December, following a period of more than two years with the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The personnel of the publicity department will remain the same under the new director, it is announced.

Buffalo Managers Offer Ten Per Cent Raise

At a meeting at the Hotel Iroquois, Friday, August 6, between the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association and a committee representing the Musicians' Association, a further increase of ten per cent in wages was offered by the managers, making the boosts 40 to 50 per cent. This figure, however, is absolutely final and it is up to the musicians to accept or reject it. The musicians ask raises ranging from 50 to 80 per cent, with many conditions, such as forced rest periods and limited time for rehearsals. The managers declare that under no circumstances will they stand for a change in working conditions, claiming that a capable performance is impossible with only a half-hour rehearsal. The matter is now in the hands of the musicians. The new scale goes into effect September 1.

In the matter of the stage hands and operators who ask raises approximating 50 per cent, it seems that the two sides are not far apart and that the compromise offer on the part of the managers of a 25 to 30 per cent boost will be accepted. The stage hands and operators both received increases last year and for this reason were not granted as large a boost as the musicians. The stage hands insist that an extra man be placed in Shea's Hippodrome, which, however, will not be granted.

When these new scales go into effect, admission prices in Buffalo will undoubtedly be raised. Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, says that orchestra seats at his house will be raised 10 cents. The matinee and Sunday prices will not be changed and balcony seats will be the same as heretofore, so as not to work a hardship on the women and children and those who cannot afford to pay more for their amusement.

If the musicians turn down this latest offer of the managers, Buffalo will have picture shows with greatly diminished musical accompaniment, in fact there may be nothing but piano or organ. September 1 will be the day of reckoning.

Syracuse Arranging for "Motion-Picture Day"

The opening day of the New York State Fair, Monday, September 13, 1920, which is to be held in Syracuse, will be known as "Syracuse Day." It will also be known as "Motion-Picture Day." Within a few days Mr. Chapin, chairman, and Mr. Kaletski, secretary, of the Syracuse Day committee will be in New York, at which time they hope to arrange to have a number of motion-picture stars, now working in the East, to act as judges of the beauty contest.

Producers desirous of taking advantage of the immense crowds, carnival, races and aero flights for filming purposes can arrange the details with Secretary F. H. Elliott, at the National Association's headquarters, 1520 Broadway, New York.

Pre-Release Review of "North Winds of Malice"

(Goldwyn)

"THE North Winds of Malice," the screen version of Rex Beach's novel of the same title, an Eminent Authors' production by Goldwyn, opened at the Majestic Theatre, Detroit, this week and according to MOTION PICTURE NEWS' Detroit correspondent, "the picture is elaborately filmed and has a good, strong, cast, headed by Tom Santschi, remembered for his work in 'The Spoilers.'" The correspondent's wire continues: "The story is rather simple, involving a man's desertion from his wife, following false rumors, and their reconciliation following the man's success in the Alaskan gold fields. William H. Strauss and Vera Gordon, who has won favorable comment by her work in 'Humoresque,' give strong characterizations. Carl Harbaugh and Paul Bern, directed."

Film Theft Committee Has Active Times

Two more arrests are reported by the Film Theft Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The first attempted theft occurred several months ago at a theatre in Easton, Pa., when a copy of Chaplin's "A Day's Pleasure" was sent to the First National Exchange but failed to arrive. Members of the committee found that it was being offered for sale on the lower East Side. Two men were arrested, pleaded guilty, and are now awaiting their sentence.

The second instance was the loss of Fox's "The Orphan" from the Cherokee theatre, 81st street and First avenue, New York. On evidence produced by the theft committee two men were indicted for grand larceny.

H. Minot Pitman is head of the theft committee and other members are A. I. Seigel, Bert Adler, L. W. Franconi, Samuel Eckman, and G. Kann.

Italy Ranks High Among Producing Countries

An interesting report on the condition of the motion picture industry in Italy has just been furnished the Washington office of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

The report is the result of an investigation made by Trade Commissioner H. C. MacLean and is dated Rome, June 18, 1920. Italy now claims to rank second to the United States among the nations of the world in the manufacture of motion pictures. An idea of the importance of this industry in the economic life of the country can be derived from the fact that the working capital employed is now estimated at 300,000,000 lire and the actual capital invested at 100,000,000 lire.

Cleveland Operators Demand Big Increases

The Cleveland Motion Picture Operators Union, Local No. 610, of the International Alliance of Stage Employees, have presented to the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League their new wage demand to become effective August 19th. The new demands classify the theatres according to their scale of admissions and operators in the higher priced theatres are to be paid $1.55 per hour and those in the 15 cent houses $1.25 per hour. All are to receive double time on Sundays and holidays. The former scale was 80 cents an hour regardless of any classification of theatres.

This heavy increase will, it is said, be disastrous to the small theatres, as many neighborhood houses depend upon Sunday for their week's profit and could not afford to pay the operator double time.

At a meeting of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, a committee of five members was appointed to draft a counter scale to be presented to the Operators' Union. This committee consists of Fred Desberg, Al Freedman, Moe Horwitz, John Pitner and H. Brown.

Death of Lieut. Locklear Mourned on Coast

The death of Lieut. Ormer Locklear and his assistant, Lieut. Milton Elliott, which occurred on the night of August 2nd, has been universally mourned by all people of the film industry and the acquaintances of the two young men in Los Angeles. The accident which resulted in their death occurred when the two flyers were high in the air, the machine catching fire from torches attached to the wings to make possible night photography. It is believed both men were dead when the machine struck the earth after its nose dive of more than 2,000 feet. The bodies were badly charred before they could be recovered and all that was left of the machine was carried away on a small truck.

The scene being made under the direction of James Hogan was to show in the film story exactly what did happen, but when the stunt was planned by Locklear, Hogan and the Fox writing staff, they had every confidence in Locklear to successfully perform such an act as he had done hundreds of times before.

John D. Tippet Embarks for London Trip

John D. Tippet, who will handle the United Artists' output abroad, sailed for London on the Olympic August 4th, after a week's stay in New York. Commenting upon British film conditions, Mr. Tippet stated that advanced bookings are now made as far ahead as eighteen months; in other words, the British exhibitor is already booked up to January, 1922. He expects this policy to continue rather than recede. The British market today is open only to the exceptional American picture.

District Manager Wolfberg of Famous Players-Lasky, announces the appointment of P. A. Block, formerly manager for Goldwyn at Cleveland, as manager of Famous Players' Chicago Exchange. Mr. Block has already arrived in Chicago and has assumed his new duties.

The opening date of the Stratford Theatre, 63rd and Union avenue, which will be Chicago's biggest moving picture house up to the present time, has been postponed from August 15th to the first week in September, due to unavoidable delays in completing the house.

Pathe's Chicago Exchange now is located in its new quarters on South Wabash avenue, between Van Buren and Congress streets. The move from the Consumers Building was made without interruption in the film or poster delivery service and not a single show was held up or delayed. The new Pathe Exchange, when entirely completed, will be one of the finest and most commodious in the country and Manager Aschmann is planning an opening week, during which all exhibitors and members of the industry will be welcomed to the new quarters and given elaborate entertainment.

Manager Gillespie and Musical Director Blaufuss of Orchestra Hall, made a trip to New York to obtain the special musical setting for the Chicago premier presentation of "Humoresque," the Cosmopolitan Paramount production which opened at Orchestra Hall this week and which is in its twelfth week at the Criterion Theatre, New York.

Jones, Linick & Schaefer have continued the engagement of "The Right to Love," featuring Mae Murray, for a second week at their Randolph Theatre, where the picture has been playing to exceptionally good business.

David W. Yoh, a representative of the biggest publishing house in China, who is studying film production in this country, was a Chicago visitor last week and looked over the Rothacker Laboratories while in the city.

Manager Maberry of Goldwyn, has recently added three salesmen to his staff. They are H. E. Schottmuller, formerly manager of the Rialto theatre, Granite City, Illinois, who will cover Indiana territory; B. B. Bates, recently connected with the advertising department of Susack Sign Company and Mr. McGarry, well known in this district as a promoter of industrial pictures.

E. C. Jensen, Goldwyn's district superintendent for the central west, returned from a two weeks' vacation in New York and other eastern points and has started on an extensive business trip, during which he will visit St. Louis, Omaha, Kansas City, Minneapolis and other moving picture centers.

Moving Picture men won a court victory last week when Judge McGoorty of the Circuit Court, granted a temporary injunction restraining the city from enforcing the 911 amusement act, which orders certain places of amusement to be closed not later than one o'clock in the morning. Under Judge McGoorty's injunction the following theatres will be permitted to remain open after the time specified in the ordinance: Rose, 632 West Madison street; Alcazar, 69 West Madison street; Lyric, 320 South State street; Star, 84 West Madison street; Pastime, 66 West Madison street; and Casino, 58 West Madison street.

Chicago and the Mid-West

The bill of complaint was filed by the Jones, Linick & Schaefer Company, Emma Cohen, Harry W. Thompson and the Moir Amusement Company.

The opening of "Earthbound," the latest Goldwyn eminent author's production at the Playhouse, which was specially leased for the showing, brought a number of men prominently connected with the Goldwyn organization to Chicago, including Mr. Goldwyn himself, H. W. Alexander, assistant to the president, Ralph Block, in charge of exploitation, as well as Thomas F. Walker, of the Capitol Theatre, New York City, who will supervise the presentation, and Nat W. Finston, director of music of the Capitol, who will conduct the big orchestra that is to interpret the play. Mr. Goldwyn ran up to Minneapolis for a short visit, but returned to Chicago in time for the premier of the big play.

Manager Hartley has installed a fine new Kimball organ in his handsome theatre at East Chicago, Indiana.

According to reports received in Chicago from Europe, Waterson R. Rothacker has developed into a high flyer since leaving home shores. F. W. Kramer of the Rothacker headquarters having received a cablegram from Mr. Rothacker, in which the latter said that he had made an aircraft trip from England to Paris. Mr. Rothacker is booked to sail for home on the Olympic at an early date.

Douglas D. Rothacker, manager of the industrial division, and Edward O. Blackburn, have left for the east and after spending a week at the New York branch, Mr. Rothacker will make a survey of the New England territory. W. H. Strafford is directing an industrial film in Buffalo.

Charles H. Ryan, manager of the Garfield Theatre on the west side, for the past eight years, is enjoying a two week's vacation at Druce

Lake. He will be a busy man on his return, as the Garfield is going to put on a big celebration in honor of its eleventh anniversary week which commences August 30th.

Marshall Neilan's latest photoplay, "Go and Get It," was reviewed for the press in the Vitagraph Projection Rooms, 207 S. Wabash avenue, on Wednesday and the assembled scribes declared it the one great newspaper picture of moviedom. The lead in "Go and Get It" is played by Pat O'Malley, a Chicago boy, and several members of his family attended the review.

Ike Von Ronkel returned this week after vacationing for some time at Atlantic City with his family and, it is understood, will start work immediately on the organization of his new independent exchange system.

Si Greiver, of Russell, Greiver & Russell, is scheduled to leave Chicago on a four weeks' business tour in the interests of the pictures his firm are exploiting, and before returning to Chicago, expects to visit points as far west as Texas and also to make the principal eastern cities.

L. A. Rozelle, for four years Chicago manager for World Film, has joined the staff of Robertson-Cole as assistant manager, according to an announcement just made by Manager Lucas. Mr. Rozelle has a wide acquaintance and many friends among Chicago exhibitors and exchangemen and should prove a valuable asset to Robertson-Cole Exchange.

Work has been started on wrecking the buildings occupying the site where the new Vitagraph Exchange will be located and excavating for the new foundations is scheduled to start Saturday, according to Manager Fred Aiken. The proposed Vitagraph branch will be one of the finest exchange buildings in the country and when completely furnished will represent an outlay of approximately $200,000. It will be located at 839-43 S. Wabash avenue.

Manager Lucas, of Robertson-Cole's Chicago office, reports that exhibitors are welcoming the opportunity to book Robertson-Cole pictures individually and that the outlook for fall and winter business is splendid. A new record for business is made by the Chicago Exchange during the week ending July 31st.

Manager Lesserman, of Universal's Chicago Exchange, is back from a two weeks' vacation at Pebble Lake, Wisconsin, with a fine coat of tan and some wonderful stories of fish he landed, and also about a big one he lost when the line broke. Old stuff, but Mr. Lesserman claims to have seen the sales as the big one disappeared, and that it was a forty pounder.

Silce Film Exchange has been compelled to cease the physical handling of films in the Consumers Building, and is now distributing and receiving films at Congress and Jefferson in the building recently rented by Universal. Silce, however, will continue, for the present at least, to occupy offices in the Consumers Building.

Phil Goldstein of the Sterling Film Corporation, Omaha, was visiting Chicago last week and looked over some new pictures while here.

Maurice Fleckles, second vice-president of Universal, left for his headquarters in New York Tuesday after making a short business visit to Chicago. He wasted no time in making a trip to the Windy City after his return from Europe the week before.

More than one-half the key cities have booked Vitagraph's fall and winter program, according to Manager Fred Aiken, and among those signing up last week were the magnificent new 2500 seat Capitol theatre at Davenport, Iowa, which the Blanchard Amusement Company expects to open about November 1st, and Harry Gramp's circuit which includes theatres at Rockford, Decatur, Muscatine, Beloit and Galesburg.

H. O. Martin has disposed of all his interests in Supreme Pictures, Inc., and severed his connection with that company. It is reported that he intends to organize a large producing company which will be built around a noted star.

The Academy theatre of Waukegan is scheduled to reopen about August 15th, after having been redecorated at a cost of $10,000. This 1,100-seat house, which is one of the finest moving picture theatres in the state, is managed by Walter Spoor, a brother of G. K. Spoor, and has a splendid equipment, including a battery of three Simplex machines, a Kimball organ and a big new electric sign.

Forest Park theatre, the latest addition to Ascher Brothers circuit, opened Saturday night and comes up to all promises made by its management. The house seats 1,500 persons and has a stage that will permit the presentation of vaudeville and miniature musical comedy. The Forest Park is equipped with a three color lighting system which is so arranged that the lighting may be harmonized with the scenes in the picture calling for special lighting effects. It originally was planned to open the house two weeks ago but unavoidable delays caused the postponement.

Northern New York Lags in Putting 'em Over, Says Grant

Article by Our Albany, N.Y., Correspondent on the Scarcity of Exploitation

SOMETHING is the matter with the Albany motion picture territory. Managers in the local film exchanges admit it, proprietors and managers of the theatres themselves admit it. Even the patrons, particularly those who have had occasion to visit other cities where exploitation is "bringing home the bacon," are forced to admit that their home town theatre is not up to snuff these days.

Speaking from the film exchange point of view, the Albany section extends from the Bronx to Rome or Oneida on the west, to the Pennsylvania border on the south and to the St. Lawrence region on the north. And in that wide area with its hundreds of motion picture theatres, there is not a single house that is using today modern up-to-date exploitation features that are attracting so much attention in many other parts of the country and which are directly responsible for capacity audiences, better pictures and a constantly fattening bank account. Once or twice a year one or two of the theatres go so far as to arrange and use a lobby display, but the remainder of the time they are content to use a single sheet, or in the case of the Strand in Syracuse, or the Avon in Utica, some product of the artist's brush.

But when it comes right down to the cleverly arranged lobby display, the sort that makes friends for the theatre and brings the repeats among the patrons, the exchange men, the managers, the proprietors and in fact everyone is forced to admit that up to the present time, no one has yet been wise enough to see the light of day and the advantages that will surely accrue from lobby displays of the worth while type.

"The trouble with a good many managers these days," said the head of a well known film exchange in Albany today, "is that they are too apt to become pessimistic. They can not expect to have everything their own way and attract the crowds through a mere single sheet announcing to the world at large that So-and-So will be featured at the house for the first three days. The competition in these times is altogether too swift for this sort of thing. For instance, this spring the proprietor of a local theatre became discouraged because of the fact that there were so many new automobiles sold in this section. He went on to figure that every car meant just so many people who would stay away from his theatre during the summer months. Instead of going ahead and making his lobby display particularly attractive, advertising that his house was from 10 to 20 degrees cooler

The Reason for This Article

WE recently wrote our Albany, N. Y., correspondent to investigate in his territory as to the reason for the very apparent scarcity of exploitation material from Northern New York. The gist of our letter was: "Is there something the matter of the Albany territory?"

Mr. Grant made a round of the exchanges, the theatres of the city and talked with managers and showmen wherever he could find someone who was in a position to know something about film conditions in the section.

He writes an article for the Service Bureau that begins with an answer to our question, "Something IS the matter with Albany."

His article is published in the hope that a frank, unbiased if unvarnished recital of the sins of the exhibitors in the territory named, may be instrumental in reviving their energies and that letting them see themselves as others see them may be conducive to at least a partial reform.

than the outside, the man began to look around for cheaper films that would carry him over the summer months with less expense.

"What has been the result? The house is losing patronage because of the films that it is showing, losing it not for today alone, but for months to come when it will be necessary for that manager to practically re-establish his trade through expensive films, used week after week, in an effort to convince his former patrons that he was providing a bill of sufficient entertainment to warrant the admission price. How much easier it would have been if that person had looked to the future and in so looking had exploited through lobby and newspaper display first class pictures, which would have brought capacity houses throughout the summer, with no loss of his regular patronage and with a substantial gain from the floating touring population?"

Some time ago the Selznick company sent one of its exploitation men to this city. He found the problem, however, too great a one for the reason that the local managers were not keen for any exploitation that would run into money, even though the figures were small, and as a result the man was sent on to the Buffalo district, where he is now engaged in putting across pictures in a way that catches the crowds.

Managers of film agencies in this city, however, are looking for some relief with the opening of the new $550,000 Strand theatre in Pearl street. This house is expected to open some time in October, possibly as late as November, and with a capacity of over 2,200, it is bound to give a stiff race to competing theatres. In the meantime, the managers of the other houses are seemingly content with the use of a few single sheets in the lobby or occasionally a banner across the front, but when it comes to cleverly arranged lobby displays, it must be admitted that this section is far behind the times.

Good Lobby Display for Cannibal Film

An unusually attractive lobby display for "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," has proved a big drawing card for the picture, which is being exhibited at the Garrick theatre, Philadelphia.

The Garrick is a legitimate house situated on Chestnut street, near Broad, and passed hourly by hundreds. The first day the lobby was "dressed," the Thursday before the show opened, it immediately attracted crowds, although it had been dark for more than a month. And since then at all hours, crowds are constantly seen in the lobby, reading the huge diaries and examining with interest all the paraphernalia on exhibition.

The center contains a framed one-sheet giving the bill, with the title of the picture prominently displayed and the other features also named. On one wall, right at the street, is a huge "book," about 2 1-2 by 3 feet, each page telling part of the story of the expedition in large type easily read. Everyone who passes stops to see what it is, and to read a page or two. The pages really turn, they tell an interesting story, and they carry a strong appeal. Along the same wall is a gigantic poster, covering the whole wall, and also presenting excerpts from the diary with occasional "stills" by way of illustration. Against the opposite wall is a screen, on which are hung spears, dried grasses and various trophies and pictures, with all sorts of cannibalistic paraphernalia, but none of it hard or expensive to obtain.

Framed colored pictures of savages, taken from the film stand about in the lobby, also framed notes from the diary, and everything together makes a mighty attractive exhibition and proves really interesting to the passer-by.

Liberty Seattle Pulls New Exploitation Stunt

THE following extract from a recent issue of the Seattle Star tells about an exploitation campaign in the interests of "Don't Ever Marry" when this feature played the Liberty theatre of Seattle in a most concise manner. We append it with due credit to the Star and its editorial staff.

"There were just about fifty-five billion, six hundred ninety-eight million, four hundred seventy-eight thousand, eight hundred thirty-seven freckles assembled in front of the Liberty theatre. Saturday morning.

"And Fred Morrissey, 14, of 1728 1/2 11th Avenue N., had a considerable portion of the above.

"When John Von Herberg, manager of the Liberty theatre, saw the crowd of 140 freckled youngsters, of all sizes and ages, he grew uneasy about the $20 he bet that no Seattle kid could beat Wesley Barry, the moving picture lad, who is featured in 'Don't Ever Marry' at the Liberty.

"When John saw Fred Morrissey, he threw up the sponge.

"Wesley has some freckles, but Fred can give him a few hundred and still beat him.

"And there were at least a half dozen other kids who could beat Wes. It was, in fact, difficult to pick the freckledest kid, but after weighing the matter carefully, the judges decided Fred Morrissey was the king of them all.

"Fred was consequently immediately presented with Von Herberg's $20, and escorted to Ray Fox's swell Buick car. At the head of the car was a fife and drum corps.

"With other freckle-faced kids following, Fred was taken down Second Avenue, while thousands of people stopped, looked and paid homage to the freckle-faced king.

"At Yeslerway, the car turned up to Third and stopped, in front of the city hall.

"Mayor Caldwell presently emerged. He bore the crown which Hazel J. Titus made for the occasion. It was a cake-and-candy affair. The coronation was brief and to the point.

"I hereby crown you king of the freckle-faced boys of Seattle," the mayor said. "kle-faced boys of Seattle," themayor said.

"The drum corps 'tuned up' and the parade started back to the theatre. All the freckle-faced boys who took part in the parade were admitted free to see Wes Barry."

Chicago Makes Hit with "Suds" Stunt

COUPLING up a city-wide canvass for a "double" of Mary Pickford and a lobby display in which the person selected as most resembling the star was a part of the display is the stunt recently accomplished by the Castle theatre of Chicago in connection with its engagement of "Suds."

Strand Prologue Decided Novelty

AS a prologue to the feature picture at the Strand theatre. "What Women Love" manager Joseph Plunkett is staging a decided novelty.

A drop representing an under-sea scene is hung close enough to be masked by the tormentors. In front of this a performer costumed to represent "Neptune" is seated on raised platform.

Before drawing the drapes the house and stage are both placed in darkness. The stage is then lighted dimly in green about "Neptune's" throne and water effects are used on the drop.

The actor then recites the lines of "A Hundred Fathoms Deep," with a musical accompaniment by the orchestra. The prologue closes with the actor, a baritone, singing one verse of the song.

The picture is screened on the drapes as they close. The title of the prologue is "Bottom of the Sea."

The Castle theatre is one of the most distinct theatres in the country. It was the first theatre to run all-night performances; it was the first theatre in the Chicago loop that exploited a picture; it has the distinction of being able to obtain more revenue, per seat, than any other theatre in the country, and it is probably the only theatre in the world that runs only the feature, putting over each day as many as sixteen and eighteen shows. Its leading spirit, Mr. Weil, is one of the country's livest wire exhibitors.

To call attention to the fact that a Mary Pickford picture was soon to be shown at his theatre Mr. Weil conducted a test in Chicago in an endeavor to find out who was the nearest young lady who looked like "the world's sweetheart," and after deciding who the lady was they secured her services in conjunction with a display of electric washing machines that were operated in the lobby of the theatre (as shown in the illustration) and creating no end of attractive comment.

Fish Stories as Exploitation Medium

An effective campaign in the interests of "The Silver Horde" has just been completed by the Playhouse of Wilmington, Del.

A salmon sixteen feet long was built by the theatre's advertising manager, and was placed over one of the largest shoe stores in Wilmington. The immense size of the fish attracted a great deal of curious attention and proved a strong point in the exploitation for "The Silver Horde."

A fish story competition sponsored by one of the Wilmington papers, in which prizes were offered for the best three fish stories of 200 words, also caught the public's fancy.

More than a hundred fishermen entered the race and the three prize-winning stories were published in the paper.

Other tie-ups and effective lobby decorations added to the pulling power of the campaign.

Another Tie-up with Uncle Sam

The theatre manager who seizes upon some angle of the pictures he plays that can be exploited along local lines, is the exhibitor that gets the best results from his exploitation efforts. When the manager of the Strand theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, booked "The Virgin of Stamboul" recently, he realized that the Oriental, foreign atmosphere of the picture was his best bet for exploitation.

Then he remembered the well-known Army and Navy posters with their inviting captions, "See the World!" He decided that "The Virgin of Stamboul" would give prospective seamen and soldiers what they might expect to see on a world tour. Therefore he arranged a tie-up with the local U. S. Naval recruiting service.

He was assisted by Captain Stanley H. Lewis of Post 92, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, author, and special volunteer recruiter for the Navy. Captain Lewis superintended the distribution of thousands of recruiting cards announcing the production of "The Virgin of Stamboul" and tying it up with the Navy.

Bill Boards Best Bet in Hot Weather Says Benson

Many motion picture exhibitors greatly misunderstand the fact that billboards are an effective way of exploiting a picture in hot weather, says Charles S. Benson, manager of the Olympia theatre, Lynn, Mass. The biggest part of the work should be done before the paper is even ordered. Many exhibitors think that after they have rented the boards, provided the stands, and see them start off on a wagon loaded with paste pots, the whole thing is finished. Hot weather is conducive to getting the people out of doors, and for this reason billboards are the most effective way of reaching nine-tenths of your patrons. Mr. Benson is using billboards extensively in advertising Anita Stewart in "The Yellow Typhoon," to be shown at the Olympia. Mr. Benson advises the use of less reading matter, letting pictures put over the idea. Selection of locations is the next important factor, ideal locations being near shady spots or vegetation.

Kalogram Idea Works Well in Cincy

The Lyric theatre of Cincinnati in its exploitation of "Sex" used the "Kalogram puzzle" idea with gratifying results.

The aid of one of the Cincinnati papers was secured and the usual plan of procedure with the "Kalogram" carried out.

The editor of the paper reported that telephone calls and letters flooded his office and that one woman called him in the middle of the night to give him the correct answer to the puzzle.

"Old Kentucky" Second Run at Louisville

Mary Anderson Theatre Puts Over Great Campaign for Anita Stewart Picture

BIG features may come and big features may go, but showmen declare that there will never be another feature that will spur Kentucky showmen to greater efforts than "In Old Kentucky." Arguing well for second runs, especially so far as "In Old Kentucky" is concerned, is the unprecedented exploitation given this feature by the Mary Anderson theatre, Louisville, Ky.

If the management of the Mary Anderson missed a bet, the public of Louisville doesn't know it and the box office receipts of the Mary Anderson during the week of the showing of "In Old Kentucky" do not show it.

Without elaboration on one detail of the campaign the following gives other showmen a good idea as to how "In Old Kentucky" was exploited in the State that inspired it:

The lobby contained a box-stall, duplicating the regular quarters of a race-track star, and a live horse was installed in this space. Extra expense in the form of chambermaids for the house was encountered, but the novelty was worth it.

The ushers were attired in real jockeys' "silks" borrowed from the local racing stables and paddock emblems were in evidence throughout the entrance.

A musical program was offered with the picture, Louis E. Zoeller and Evelyn Rymer singing an especially written ballad "In Old Kentucky," with illustrated slides and words thrown on the screen. The woman soloist rendered the first verse and chorus of the song from the stage and Zoeller answering encores from the box.

The first part of the week the Louisville Industrial School, with a membership approximating five hundred boys and girls of both races, was invited to the Mary Anderson as guests of the management, the appointed time for leaving school being set at 2 o'clock.

When the line of march started from the school the prospective guests were met by a reception committee from the theatre which comprised the management in a decorated automobile, outriders in jockey blouses of brilliant satin, "ku klux" band-members with white-sheeting covers for their heads and a platoon of motorcycle police.

The school was in line-formation marching four abreast, headed by the white boys' band of the institution, followed by capacious auto-trucks bearing the smaller children, and by trucks and autos for the teachers and officials, and followed by the colored boys' band and jubilee singers.

Permission was obtained from the police department for passage through the main thoroughfare of the city, and during the progress of the spectacular line traffic on several blocks was completely halted and the streets congested.

Arrived at the theatre, a concert was given by both bands in front of the house and a program of plantation melodies was offered after the gigantic "party" had been arranged around the first, second and third floors of the Mary Anderson.

Good Exploitation for "Below the Surface"

Deep Sea Diving Establishes New Record and Earns Columns of Publicity

AS the result of Sig Schlager's efforts to get two deep-sea diving experts at the U. S. Submarine Base at San Pedro, California, to go under water in submarine tests as part of his work in collaboration with the Thomas H. Ince publicity department to exploit "Below the Surface" in Los Angeles, two world's records were smashed.

As the result of this feat, which was given big publicity in the Los Angeles daily and Sunday newspapers, and the big campaign set on foot by Hunt Stromberg, the Ince publicist, "Below the Surface" ran four weeks at Sid Grauman's Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles.

Inasmuch as Hobart Bosworth had secured the co-operation of members of the Submarine base during the filming of "Below the Surface," Schlager had little difficulty in gaining entree to the inner circle of the unit. It was arranged that a friendly undersea contest between Harry Goldsmith, champion diver at the base, Hobart Bosworth and other members of the base take place as a test of Bosworth's contention that he could beat his own record of underwater endurance made during the making of his Ince special.

The submarine boys entered into the spirit of the thing. Dr. P. A. Maneray, Santa Rosa (Cal.) lung specialist, was the physician at the tests while the base chaplain held the watch. Two world's records were broken to the astonishment of everyone and the Los Angeles Times on Sunday gave through its circulation of 150,000 a two-column pictorial spread playing up Bosworth, a signed story by Dr. Maneray outlining the Bosworth theory that underwater tests are beneficial to lung sufferers and a general article signed by the publicist, Sig Schlager—the first instance of the conservative Times committing itself to a motion picture press-agented stunt.

The Times the next morning gave another follow-up story to the scheme, with "Below the Surface" and Grauman's Rialto prominently mentioned, and the Evening Express gave front page space with a picture of Bosworth to another angle of the stunt.

Clemmer States Music of Major Importance

JAMES Q. CLEMMER, manager of Clemmer's Theatre, Seattle, and the man who organized Clemmer's Augmented Orchestra and employed the best musicians he could find on the Pacific Coast and brought some from the East, did so because he believes that good music should accompany good pictures. In fact, Mr. Clemmer said to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS correspondent: "I believe that in this day and age no picture is complete, or satisfies the audience entirely, unless music and overtures of a high grade accompany the pictures. The picture must be set to music and I believe that the people are beginning to realize that the motion picture house is the people's 'music box.'

"I have noticed that people like to go where there is high grade music, as much to hear the music as to see the picture."

Extensive Exploitation for "Devil's Passkey" at Chicago

Unusual exploitation methods which included an extensive advertising campaign in the Chicago newspapers, were used for the engagement of the "Devil's Passkey," which began an indefinite run at the La Salle theatre, Chicago, on August 8th. A teaser campaign was started on Monday in the newspapers and continued throughout the week, preceding the opening, until Saturday, when half page advertisements were used in both the morning and afternoon papers. In addition to this, the bill boards were liberally used, twenty-four sheets, eight sheets and three sheets being put up.

Gates and Dayton Newspapers Cooperate

AN exploitation stunt that enlisted the heartiest sort of cooperation from the local merchants and set the entire city of Dayton, Ohio, talking, was devised and put across with a bang recently by Manager Gates of Loew's Dayton theatre in connection with the week's first-run showing of "The Cheater," starring May Allison.

The stunt, which took the form of a "Favorite Local Stars Contest," was given profuse publicity by the Dayton newspapers, among them the Journal and the Herald. May Allison herself took a hand in making the advertising feature a huge success by wiring to the Dayton theatre that she would contribute as a personal prize a handsomely framed life-size portrait of herself to the local star distinguishing herself in the special musical comedy to follow the contest.

The proposition, as set forth by Manager Gates of the Dayton, was as follows: the people of Dayton were to vote for a solid week—the week of the run of May Allison in "The Cheater"—for their favorite amateur actresses, and the ten who received the most ballots were to be featured in a musical comedy to be produced at the Dayton theatre for an entire week.

In his reading notices Manager Gates pointed out that May Allison was started on her professional career after capturing first prize in a beauty contest held in Georgia. He said he expected the local stars contest to bring forward some girl or girls who would become stars of the stage or the screen.

No sooner had the management announced the details of the contest than the biggest stores in town scrambled to get in on the good thing. They readily tied up with the Dayton theatre in their advertising; to such an extent that during the week of the run of "The Cheater" and prior to it, the advertising column of the local press seemed to contain nothing else besides boosts for "favorite local stars' contest."

In practically every instance the merchants offered votes with purchases of their wares.

Grauman's Successful with Symphony Concerts Sunday Morning

Symphony concerts by an orchestra of seventy, including soloists, are special attractions at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, every Sunday morning at eleven o'clock.

By these concerts Sid Grauman will add another capacity house to his weekly receipts if business continues in the future as on the opening day of this new attraction. The concert starts promptly at eleven o'clock, continues for about one hour, and the patrons are permitted to remain for the presentation of the film program following the concert. For this program a uniform price of fifty cents, including war tax, is charged and all seats in the house are reserved.

"Earthbound" Opens at the Astor

"EARTHBOUND," Goldwyn's new special feature from Basil King's story opened an indefinite engagement at the Astor theatre, New York, Wednesday, August 11th.

The showing is sponsored by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. The presentation was planned by S. L. Rothapel and includes a prologue in which an actor recites lines appropriate to the offering and with a special stage setting and special decorations especially about the proscenium opening, the front boxes being draped in white bunting fluted artistically.

The stage setting boxes in the picture screen and is also of white bunting prettily arranged and extended from the tormentors in a box set effect up the stage for some twenty feet. During the projection of the picture various colored floods are used on the white cloth outside the picture screen.

The setting is the work of Mr. Rothapel and his artist at the Capitol, John Wenger.

The Astor is a legitimate house ordinarily but is being devoted to a policy of pictures during the summer season.

Universal has been using the house for some weeks, with special features as attractions, "Under Crimson Skies" being the last attraction.

Grauman Stages Another Musical Hit

A musical number on the program at Grauman's theatre during the week ending August 1st entitled "An Original Musical Offering" was everything that the name implies. Recently Sid Grauman learned that several of his usherettes were musicians and he produced an act in which four of them took part. The lobby of the magnificent theatre, was reproduced on the stage and the usherettes at their "usual positions" played and sang. The opening selection was a jazz number by violinist, cornetist and trap drummer, followed by a violin solo, "Rose of Picardy." The third number was a cornet solo, and this was followed by soprano singing "Dear Old Pal of Mine." The number ended with selection by the three musicians. The usherettes in this act wore their usual costumes and the miniature lobby was given the atmosphere of the front of the theatre by the continued procession of passers by.

How the Isis Advertised "Sari"

T. Bidwell McCormick, who has lately taken over the management of the Isis theatre of Kansas City, bids fair to follow in the footsteps of his illustrious brother.

For his showing of "The Virgin of Stamboul," Mr. McCormick engaged the services of a young lady and a black horse to announce the coming of "Sari."

The girl and horse attracted a great deal of attention on Kansas City streets.

Rialto Does Well With "Lost Girl" Stunt

THE "lost girl" exploitation stunt has been put over in great shape by O. Westcott Young, of the publicity department of the Rialto theatre, El Paso, Texas, in the interests of "Eyes of Youth."

The Rialto's engagement of the Young picture was as yet unannounced to the public when the exploitation campaign was put in motion.

One day the El Paso papers carried stories about a "Hindoo crystal gazer" (Mr. Young made up with the skill of an artist) who had arrived in the city in search of a long-lost daughter. The articles were written in the best "sob" style and described in detail the reason for "Yogi Rabindingsh's" visit. He stated that his crystal globe had bid him seek the girl "Gina" at El Paso. He put up at the leading hotel. He inserted "lost" and "personal" ads in the newspapers which described "Gina" and others of a personal nature. He talked and walked about the city in his lavish robe and El Paso read and listened and watched to see what would happen next. It is not to be implied that Mr. Young's impersonation was such that he completely gulled the entire city and it is probable that most people suspected a press agent's ruse but nevertheless every body who read or passed up or down the main streets of the city was afire with curiosity about "Yogi" and when the showing of the picture and the tie-up with the mysterious stranger announced much had been done to excite the curiosity of all theatre goers.

According to Mr. Young, the entire cost of the stunt was about thirty dollars, for which along with much word of mouth advertising, columns of newspaper text had been garnered. The weather is hot in El Paso this time of year and the picture house patronage suffers accordingly but "Eyes of Youth" played to theatrical season business and the Rialto management is convinced that no small part of this result is due to the visit of "Yogi" and his search for "Gina."

Barthfield Takes His Exploitation Into Politics

Kentuckians take their politics seriously, and as a means of exploiting repeat engagements on Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life" and "Shoulder Arms," David Barthfield, owner of the Gaines theatre at Irvine, Ky., filed a petition nominating the comedian for Congress. The fact that the nomination was ruled out on account of the non-residence of the candidate didn't hurt the results of the exploitation, however.

The new Professional Department announced for this issue will instead be begun in an early number. Watch for it.

Bill the "Feature" Regardless of Length

The NEWS has long contended that the feature on any bill is not necessarily the subject containing the greatest amount of footing, and quite often is the so-called filler, if the exhibitor would but recognize the exploitation possibilities or its entertainment value.

Therefore as a matter of adding proof to our theory we are reproducing a display ad used by Arthur G. Stolte, manager of the Des Moines theatre, "Des Moines, in which he singled out a 700-foot educational subject on which to devote the major part of the billing he was to give to the program the Des Moines was to run.

In giving "Modern Centaurs" attention Mr. Stolte took advantage of some exploitation possibilities the picture has that overshadowed those of the feature. The announcement of Ray in "Homer Comes Home" was all this picture needed. Ray fans are "sold." The public knows exactly what it will get in a Ray picture. "Modern Centaurs" had talking points and was an unknown quantity to the public, so Stolte spent his ink on "Modern Centaurs" satisfied that the attraction would live up to his praise of it.

This is not praise for a picture but rather another suggestion that exhibitors stop buying "reels" to fill out their programs and give every number care and thought. When a short subject has exploitation possibilities embrace them, and don't be afraid of giving your one- and two-reelers billing if they deserve it.

Is the Length of a Motion Picture Necessary to Make It a Feature Attraction?

WE KNOW THAT IT IS NOT—This fact has been proven to the management many times, when during the past year many short length subjects have been exhibited. In many cases the comment has been more favorable than that received of the feature attraction.

WE GO ON RECORD as stating that the short length subject, shown this week, is by far the best that we have ever had the pleasure to offer our patrons, and we believe you will agree with us after you see it. The picture is but 700 feet in length, eight minutes screening time, and is billed—

"MODERN CENTAURS"

(Columbia—Meaning, Half Man, Half Horse)

FOLLOWERS OF THE EQUINE will be delighted with this wonderful subject. It thrills you, and you marvel at their overland run, no hill too steep or slanting, all so graceful as every hound and when all is over you wonder if that which you had just seen is possible.

NOTE—Next week we will show "The Valley of the Elphinstone," another of the short subjects ready to be shown and worth of your best to decide read about its many qualities.

Here is the fellow that is giving you entertainment with his silent drama that is worth seeing.

DES MOINES THEATRE
CORRECTION OF A MORGAN

Arthur S. Stolte, manager of the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, seems to have the right idea in that every number on his program is given care and thought.

Merrill Theatre Decorates for "Silver Horde"

BY arousing the mental reflexes to extreme cold of all prospective patrons who passed into his theatre or entered its lobby, H. M. Rouda, manager of Ascher's Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, coaxed the people in to see "The Silver Horde," despite of 97 degrees of heat registered by the thermometer. By the very simple expedient of decorating his lobby with imitation icicles, snow scenes and a painted waterfall he induced a mental shiver, so to speak, in the brain of the individuals who took a look at his theatre. The psychologic law of suggestion was enough; his business for the showing was assured.

Mr. Rouda hung large imitation icicles from the canopy in front of his theatre and over the main entrance placed a panoramic painting of snow-capped mountains and pine trees with a group of Eskimos in the foreground. That promise of coolness and comfort was further enhanced by a miniature waterfall, flowing over greenish white rocks, erected over the top of the cashier's booth.

A mass of imitation icicles hung from the lobby ceiling and over the entrance to the theatre proper was another large painting. It portrayed another expansive and attractive snow scene with a fur-clad fisherman driving an Alaskan dog-team. Concealed red and green lights cast an inviting glow over the scene. The lettering advertising "The Silver Horde" was across the top of the picture and does not show in the photographs at the left.

Patrons of the theatre who saw the picture stopped to congratulate Mr. Rouda on his decoration and on the picture.

Getting the Home Town Angle on Publicity

How Shaw Tied Up His Exploitation With Clinton's Principal Industry

THE number of exhibitors in the United States who could actually use the exploitation in its entirety which is herewith appended as received from the pen of Paul L. Shaw, manager of the Wonderland theatre, Clinton, Iowa, is extremely limited.

The number of exhibitors who should be inspired by the basic idea back of Mr. Shaw's particular stunts, which is to hitch on to local color whenever possible, are all of those who are conducting theatres in cities and villages which have not grown so large but that its industries have not been swallowed in the minds of the public, so far as individual firms and particular trades are concerned.

Mr. Shaw's story tells how he tied up his theatre with the mining industry. Note the real idea back of the stunt and see if you can't do as well in your city.

"Using exploitation that originates first as an appeal to possible patrons, and secondly as applied to the production being boosted, has been used very successfully by my father and myself in connection with the Wonderland theatre. Anything that will be interesting to people in Clinton is taken and adapted as nearly as possible to attracting attention to a picture even if there is no obvious connection," writes Mr. Shaw.

"Clinton has a great number of miners and pay day at the mines is a bigger day than either Saturday or Sunday. We appeal to the miners as much as possible and recently when a firm brought a number of models of a new mine drill to the city we arranged to get one of the models for use in front of the theatre. The firm manufacturing the drills furnished a demonstrator, knowing that it is hard to get a miner to enter a store, but the firm wanted to get the men talking about the drill so that the mine operators' attention might be attracted.

"In using this drill there was an opportunity for an obvious tie-up with a picture. We had coming Katherine MacDonald in "The Turning Point," and when we built a frame so that the whirling head of the drill just projected through a card announcing the picture the connection was obvious.

"The drill attracted so much attention, however, that we decided that we could utilize it to exploit other pictures. We rigged up a little booth over it and placed a cut-out of Wesley Barry as the bell-hop in "Don't Ever Marry," in a position where it looked as if he was inviting passers-by inside. The booth was decorated with the large one-sheets of Miss MacDonald, whose beauty has such a strong appeal to the miners, and for three weeks from nine in the morning until the evening shows started the booth was filled.

After attracting such attention it is probably needless to state that both pictures played to audiences which taxed the capacity of the Wonderland at nearly every showing.

Phone Stunt Makes "Soul of Rafael" Talk of the Town

THEY are still laughing in Russellville, Ark., over the prank played by E. H. Butler, of the Wilson theatre, on the innocent inhabitants of that peaceful town. The only person who cannot see the joke is a sweet-voiced and very tired little lady who sat at the phone of the Wilson theatre for three days and kept repeating "For the Soul of Rafael" at the Wilson, Mr. —, and where will you sit?"

The excitement arose as follows: Mr. Butler, during the week of the run of "For the Soul of Rafael," inserted in the local press, three days before the picture opened at his theatre, a small announcement on the front page, reading as follows: "Have You Heard of the Artega Jewels? They're the most precious in the world. Rachel Estevan of Russellville, who last had them, will offer a reward for their finder. Phone 642 F 7 and ask, 'What is the reward for?' Miss Estevan will answer and give all information."

Mr. Butler then ordered paper mouthpieces to be hung on the telephones, on which was printed, "Call 642 F 7 and ask 'What Is the Reward for?'" and distributed them to subscribers. His mailing list was similarly notified, and his cashier was placed at the phone, ready to answer inquiries.

Messages naturally began to come in from the puzzled inquirers, all ending their inquiry with the mysterious question,

"What is the reward for?"—to which the operator made reply, "'For the Soul of Rafael' at the Wilson, Mr. —, and where will you sit?" The operator made it a point to ask the name and address of every caller, which was added to the mailing list. The seats were reserved over the phone. The answer given by the operator made it plain that the mystery was fabricated, so that no ill-will should result, and that the "Soul of Rafael" will clear up the puzzle.

The entire "stunt" was inexpensive, except for the paper mouthpieces, which were as effective as the local advertisement, and created considerable amusement, which Mr. Butler capitalized on in cheerful and substantial audiences during his showing of the picture.

Hammer Uses Cutouts for "Wonder Man"

As an exploitation medium for "The Wonder Man," Manager R. Hammer of the Academy theatre, Lynchburg, Vt., used a number of very effective cutouts and oil paintings of the star in decorating his lobby and also secured window displays in stores adjoining his theatre.

In his newspaper campaign Mr. Hammer played up the fame of the star, laying emphasis on the boxing match as a part of the picture. A cut at the left shows the Academy with the billing for "The Wonder Man." Mr. Hammer is a firm believer in exploitation and leaves no stone unturned in putting over his attractions.

Cab Used for "Passersby" At Philadelphia

DURING the week preceding the showing of "Passers By" at the Garrick theatre, Philadelphia, the Pathe office put over a stunt that caused a great deal of attention and took comparatively little trouble. Following the model used in the picture, they obtained an old-fashioned hansom cab, and a white horse, and sent these about the principal business streets during the day. The driver was as nearly as possible like the caddy in the picture, fat, and dressed in old-style caddy clothes, high hat and all. The single passenger was a young woman in a dark suit, small hat and long veil, like Margaret of the picture. And the advent of the cab was inevitably followed by the drawing of a crowd. Men were heard to remark: "Are those things coming back?" and one eager reporter almost fell for the whole thing with a story about the return of the hansom.

Whenever the cab drew up to the curb and a crowd gathered the girl began to hand out cards advertising the picture, on which was inscribed:

"'Passers-By.' What is a perfect sacrifice?"

"Does perfect love survive the world's condemnation?"

"'Passers-By' will give you the true answer at the Garrick theatre every afternoon at 1.30 and 3.30 and every evening at 7 and 9, for the entire week, starting Monday, July 5th."

Music Tie-Up Fills Maryland Theatre

CHARLES NEPODAL, of the Maryland theatre, Omaha, is a showman who keeps abreast of the times. When, two months ago, he read in the local press that Equity's "For the Soul of Raphael," a Clara Kimball Young picture, would be adapted to grand opera, he made a little note of the fact for future reference. His foresight was fully rewarded when he booked "For the Soul of Raphael" last week for a three-day run. Here are the ways Nepodal made use of the information:

First, he saved the clipping in which it was stated that Andre Dippel, the Chicago impresario, had declared that the plot and the settings of the picture made it eminently fit for grand opera. Nepodal, in his regular announcements to his patrons, featured this fact. While he knew that many of his patrons would be attracted on this account, he went further. He secured the lists of all the music pupils of Omaha, through the music stores' mailing lists and the music teachers. He then secured an endorsement from several prominent Omaha musicians, as to the suitability of "For the Soul of Raphael" to grand opera. The news-clipping above mentioned, together with the endorsements, were included in one announcement to the music lists.

Following this, Nepodal tied-up with the music stores on a window-display, featuring some of the pretentious scenes of the picture. The fact is that much of the action of the picture takes place outside a cathedral, particularly an exciting duel scene, which bears striking resemblance to many operas. In return for the courtesy of the music stores, Nepodal allowed a small sign to be attached to the scenes, giving a list of some of the most popular musical selections that were prepared in the music sheets along with the picture.

The cumulative effect of this all-around hook-up was such that the Maryland theatre enjoyed one of the most prosperous runs of its career. The campaign was all the more satisfactory because the connection was direct, not suggestive, like so many others.

Thacher Is Real Small Town Live Wire

Salina, Kansas, isn't the largest city in the state but it ranks high in its example of picture presentation and exploitation by reason of the Strand theatre, of which H. J. Thacher is manager.

The deeds of Mr. Thacher, who is his own scenic artist, are not new to the readers of the News, many of his stage settings and lobby displays having been given attention in our columns.

Mr. Thacher's latest triumph in presentation and exploitation is in connection with his showing of "Down on the Farm."

Besides a stage setting as shown by the

"Pierrot's Dream" Rivoli Specialty

THE Rivoli dancing specialty this week, now a regular number on the bill is titled "Pierrot's Dream."

Before a scenic canvas showing a sky in perspective with a porch balustrade masking the floor, just in front of it, Paul Oscar costumed as "Pierrot" dances on and pantomimes toward the sky. He then sinks on a bench and feigns slumber. May Kitchen, Mr. Oscar's dancing partner is lowered from the flies astride a crescent shaped "moon" and gives her portion of the dance, as single. Then the two dance together.

At the close of the duet, "Pierrot" again sinks to the bench and awakening from his slumber as Miss Kitchen makes her exit on the "moon" when he pantomimes to impart to the audience that the dancing has been a dream.

Miss Kitchen is attired in ballet costume. The number is lighted by spots and floods.

accompanying cut, an elaborate prologue was originated.

Before the curtain was drawn, duck calls, roosters crowing and other farm animal cries were imitated with the house and stage totally dark. To the strains of "Down on the Farm" a farmer made his appearance as the dawn broke, washed his face and hands in the tin basin, picked up some tools and disappeared in the barn. During the time the farmer was on the stage a trained goose followed close on his heels, making a big hit with the audience from a comedy angle.

The prologue was followed by the screening of the feature, the scene being faded out with the main title beginning on the front drapes.

Another Treasure Hunt for "Treasure Island"

The treasure hunt league which is supporting "Treasure Island" wherever this picture is shown by live showmen has recently been successfully organized at Wichita, Kansas, where John P. Goring, F. P. Lasky exploitation representative out of Kansas City and the Regent theatre management and publicity department acted as promoters.

Wichita put the hunt over without a slip. Assists were credited to the Wichita Eagle, which handled all the news story and a splendid full page advertising spread in its Sunday issue, the Vail Jewelry Store and Cadwell and Webber, real estate agents. Four chests were buried, the cleared real estate plots in which they were located were pretty well designated in the advertisement and the Vail Jewelry Store offered additional prizes to the lucky youngsters. The combination hit for a goal and with hundreds looking for the treasure and thousands talking about it, "Treasure Island" played to capacity attendance at the Regent theatre.

Los Angeles Musical Number Elaborately Presented

On the same bill with "The Truth," W. G. Stewart of the California theatre, Los Angeles, presented an elaborate musical number under the title of "Southland," same being an orchestral and vocal rendition with stage settings and costumes, of Burleigh's compilation of Southern melodies.

On the opposite page is shown the stage setting used for the number, with the California ensemble on the stage.

Lighting effects included the showing of fire flies, clouds, ripples on the water, etc.

The steamboat shown in the cut was practical, moving up the river, lighted from stem to stern. The number was staged under the direction of Hans Linne.

Mr. Stewart does not aim to use the ensemble to just create atmosphere for the feature picture and will stage his musical numbers as separate units of entertainment.

Good Music Solved Hiller's Problem

C. L. Hiller, manager of the Grand theatre, Crookston, Minn., says there is hardly an exhibitor in the country but will agree with P. T. Barnum that in the amusement world success lies in giving the public what it wants. For a time, Mr. Hiller claims, he had trouble with his theatre, that is, he would give the patrons the same style pictures that played and pleased the public of other cities, but he did not seem to make a success of it. After a careful analysis he discovered that it was caused by the fact that his music was not up to date when his orchestra leader informed him, "The whole dog-gone country has gone jazz crazy." He used jazz advertising and jazz music, and during the showing of Constance Talmadge's production "The Virtuous Vamp," the orchestra played a jazz overture, and had the audience tapping their feet, filling the theatre and the picture with more pep.

How Jones Put Over "The Red Lane"

W. E. Jones, old friend of the News in his many successful years as manager of the Superba theatre of San Diego, Cal., has removed to Los Angeles, where he will manage the Superba of that city.

A new device to show stills, changing every seven seconds, is being used in the Superba lobby with success. On top of the cabinet Jones has concealed an 18 inch electric fan which blows cool breezes on those who stop to inspect the changing photographs, thereby suggesting that the interior of the theatre is comfortable.

Prologue Manuscripts a Part of Press Book

First National Announces New Departure in Exhibitors Aid Material

CONSISTENTLY serving its purpose to enable exhibitors to bring before their respective clienteles the utmost in advanced motion picture presentation, there is an exhibitor device that has been rewarded for the increased box office receipts brought about as a result of it, and for the large number of motion picture fans whose sympathy for motion pictures is traceable directly to it, by the name of "novelty." Characterized by a modest beginning under the sponsorship of showmen who dared to create and originate, this element has forced itself into the foreground of advanced exhibitor thought of the day. It has culminated in what we now term the "prologue," a very necessary part of the modern picture program.

Hindered and obstructed by almost every impediment that ever blocked the progress of a new idea, the prologue has stood the test of expense; it has won almost unanimous audience approval; it has shown in dollars-and-cents results that it has a place on a program of cinema features and that with intelligent treatment it can and does blend harmoniously in with the celluloid subjects which it is called upon to enhance. The prologue has justified itself long ago. But with its steady development and the earnest diligence with which exhibitors have applied themselves in bringing the prologue to a state of perfection has come the results that climax the story of prologues with striking facts that demand recognition by showmen, big and small. And these facts centre about nothing more or less than the following truths:

(1) That the prologue as it is and can be practiced today is by nature an exploitation device of a most constructive and theatre-building nature.

(2) That the prologue of today is practicable—made so as a result of experiment after experiment, test after test, large and small expenditures of money and inexhaustible patience on the part of exhibitors who believe in it.

And in the fulfillment of what I believe to be the duty of the distributor insofar as co-operation with the exhibitor is concerned, I can promise that future press sheets prepared in conjunction with the release of certain attractions to be distributed by Associated First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., will be provided with prologue suggestions in order that our exhibitor-aids may enable the exhibitor to come closer to the point of having everything that will enable him to score the maximum success without attractions within his reach.

This decision, which I have been considering for the last few weeks and which

First National's Latest Press Book Innovation

THE article published on this page from the pen of C. L. Yearsley, director of publicity for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is more in the way of an announcement than it is a matter of exploitation but since it pertains to a subject closely allied to exploitation, presentation and is of certain interest to exhibitors who are giving presentation their best efforts it is presented within the pages of the Service Bureau.

The subject on which Mr. Yearsley writes is the recent decision of First National to provide a suitable prologue "script" for each picture released as a part of the press book gotten out on the feature. Mr. Yearsley explains why First National will henceforth give the matter of prologues special attention and also covers fully the subject on which he writes.

We commend his announcement to our readers and welcome the innovation that is forthcoming.

I understand other distributors are debating was brought to a focus as a result of several specific events in prologue history. Underlying the entire thought is the success of Frank Costello, manager of the Tivoli Opera House, at San Francisco. I have kept in close touch with Mr. Costello and was gratified to learn that a circuit-for-prologues was planned in order to put his splendid theme versions of his pictures before the audience of all exhibitors. To Mr. Costello is due credit for blazing an original trail, and when all details coincident with First National's press-sheet suggestions for prologues are completed the tried-and-test ideas of Mr. Costello will play an important part.

Specifically, the decision was made with the publishing of an article in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau section of MOTION PICTURE NEWS of the issue of August 7th. The item to which I refer devoted a page to the description of a prologue used by Jack Callicott, managing director of the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, and went so far as to even relate the dialogue used by Mr. Callicott in his prologue-exploitation for "Yes Or No," Norma Talmadge's latest release through First National.

The real value of this article is the fact that by providing exhibitors with "meaty" portions of the stage script from which certain film features were adapted, a big incentive to the prologue is offered and at the same time the showman has a chance to work on something definite instead of having to grasp his idea out of mid-air.

To illustrate, while it is possible for some few exhibitors to obtain the script from which the stage play of any given film production was first produced, it is entirely a different matter for the average exhibitor to accomplish this. Lack of time is perhaps the most serious drawback. In Mr. Callicott's case, he knew far enough in advance just when he contemplated showing "Yes or No," and for that reason was able to provide himself with the stage script. But such an undertaking on the part of the average exhibitor would be futile. It is to provide a remedy for this and to bring the advantage of a stage script to every exhibitor who books First National attractions and who may desire to exploit them by means of a prologue that we have decided to secure the stage script and reprints on our press sheets sufficient of the dialogue, "Business" and enough description as to setting and action as to enable the exhibitor to have the advantage of the complete script.

Moreover, realizing the value generally placed by exhibitors on appropriate prologues it will be our aim to so treat this suggestion in our press sheet as to enable the showman to go about the staging of his prologue without incurring the expense of high-priced stage experts. Prior to the time that Mr. Callicott demonstrated that film productions (at least those that are adapted from stage plays) may be prefaced with an introduction that can be procured without the expense of a playwright, there was a feeling generally prevalent among exhibitors that the cost of putting on a prologue, however pretentious or modest, would not matter materially providing the locally-conceived effort was up to the standard of the attraction it was intended to exploit.

In addition, exhibitors held off from their desires to use prologues for the reason that such could hardly be produced unless they had seen the picture. In the majority of cases an exhibitor sees his picture anywhere from one week to four hours before he shows it. Producing an original prologue in that space of time is almost beyond human possibility. But when Mr. Callicott, with his suggestion that the stage play and the dialogue used in the script serve as the basis for the prologue, proved his contention with his success on the "Yes or No" showing, he made it possible for distributors to accommodate exhibitors to the extent of providing them with sufficient material with which to go about the planning of a prologue. For, as the matter now stands, the minute an exhibitor is provided with a press sheet for a First National attraction he is in position to go ahead with the plans for his prologue.

I firmly believe that the exhibitor sentiment of the country as evidenced by the steady increase in a number of theatres that are using prologues as a means of exploitation and for the purpose of enhancing the entertainment value of their respective programmes, carries out my belief that an appropriate prologue is an exhibitor's one method of interpreting the various features he shows in such a manner as to enable him to strike a locally popular chord in the hearts of his patrons. Unquestionably, it is this exhibitor device that puts the local touch to his program. Regardless of wherein the incidents of the picture are supposed to transpire, the scenes are made more appealing and more interesting to a local audience providing the introductory prologue has been provided by a man the audience knows; providing the characters that take part in that prologue are local persons; providing the costumes came from a local concern; providing the set was built in the home town. And with all due respect to the reverence that attaches itself on the part of picture fans to the bigness of a production as it may have been put together in faraway studies and locations, there is a mighty strong sympathy on the part of the audience for whatever the local exhibitor may do to improve on the entertainment value of a production.

Basically, and from the standpoint of acquiring and holding audiences for a theatre, the prologue originated by the local showman, is just a new treatment of an old trick—boosting someone known to local people. Even the smallest star, from a national viewpoint, is worth more to an exhibitor in her own home town and where she is well-known than one of the more nationally prominent stars. The prologue is the exhibitor's chance to make himself and his own creations, his own ideas of entertainment and his personal interpretation of a picture of the maximum value in terms as Frank Costello, whose prologues have won him fame, and have won thousands of patrons for the Tivoli Opera House at San Francisco; S. Barrett McCormick, whose original presentation novelties were rated as classics by the theatregoers who termed the Circle Theatre at Indianapolis "the shrine of the silent art," and Jack Callicott, of the Kinema Theatre at Los Angeles who time after time has scored with his prologues and who on the occasion of his presentation of "Yes or No," brought about not only a remarkable bit of clever staging, but who has advanced the idea that will help First National provide exhibitors of the world with every possible prologue suggestion that will make it possible for them to reap the biggest returns possible.

Capitol Presenting Dancing Specialty

THE dancing specialty at the Capitol this week is "The Scarf Dance" rendered by Mlles. Harding, York and Roggi in aesthetic terpsichorean costume before a futuristic stage setting showing a woodland scene in bright hued colorings.

The dance is an elaboration of the "bubble dance," a toy balloon being used by the dancers as they render the steps of the number. The balloon is kept floating through the air for the most part but is allowed to drop into the red scarf tow of the dancers carry, at intervals to be again tossed into the air as the dance progresses.

The drop provided by Artist Wenger and the lightings enhance the beauty of the number.

Carpenter Ties Up with Navy for "Below the Surface"

GEORGE CARPENTER, manager of the Paramount Empire theatre of Salt Lake, tied up with the Navy Recruiting station to immense advantage in showing of "Below the Surface."

Three enlisted men and a petty officer in uniform established a recruiting office in the lobby and were on duty constantly. The various pieces of apparatus in the possession of the local station were borrowed to decorate the lobby. A great diving suit attracted much attention. A sailor appeared in the suit on the stage before each performance.

Bills were posted on hundreds of billboards advising one to "see 'Below the Surface' and Join the Navy." Permission was obtained to run a streamer across the street which bore all the signal flags of the navy and a banner on the picture.

A bathing girl stunt was the biggest hit of the season and was run in connection with the picture. Local stores supplied, the suits and their own models. Three professionals were rung in to add zest to the show. Prizes were offered in such a manner that a local paper ostensibly gave the money.

The girls were photographed at different parks about town. One of the sailors tested out the diving apparatus in the lake at Liberty Park with the girls assisting clad in their bathing suits. The results of this publicity were complete and satisfying.

The girls appeared once in the afternoon and twice in the evening. One man said that he journeyed all the way from St. George in the extreme southern part of the state in order to see the girls in real life as he had seen their picture in the papers. He was admitted free and saw two performances. The girls staged a little song and dance at each performance and there was a Girl in the Oyster epilogue that started.—C.

Johnson Severs Connection with Finkelstein and Ruben

Julius K. Johnson, whose musical creations used as settings for de luxe pictures in two of Minneapolis' best motion picture theatres, has severed his connection with Finkelstein and Ruben of that city and is coming East.

Mr. Johnson has been occupying the dual role of organist and manager at the New Garrick theatre for the past two years and with the Minneapolis firm for more than six years.

He first came to Finkelstein and Ruben as organist at the New Lyric and his work there soon attracted nation-wide attention. For four years he occupied that position, leaving there to go to the New Garrick, another F. & R. theatre. Shortly after Mr. Johnson went to the New Garrick, L. C. Calvert, then its manager, left the ranks of motion picture theatre managers to shoulder a gun in the service of Uncle Sam. Mr. Johnson then became manager in addition to his duties as organist and he has capably filled the dual role since that time.

It is in musical circles that Mr. Johnson has gained his most enviable reputation. A close student of projection methods in addition to being an acknowledged artist at the pipe organ, Mr. Johnson combined the two arts and produced some of the most strikingly beautiful as well as sensational musical accompaniments for de luxe pictures ever witnessed in the northwest.

Mr. Johnson will rest for a few weeks before resuming work in the East, where he has been favorably known because of his work as an active member of the advisory board of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau.

Jackson Claims Our Captionless Cut

In last week's NEWS the first page of the Service Bureau was graced by a cut showing a lobby display for "The Yellow Typhoon," with the caption announcement of the name of the theatre and other information for credit, lacking. We also requested that the owner of the lobby notify us that we might tell the world about his achievements as showman.

Twenty-four hours after the NEWS had gone out to subscribers a letter from Ben E. Jackson, manager of the Audubon theatre, New York, was received announcing the ownership of the lobby in question.

Besides the lobby-decorations for "The Yellow Typhoon" as shown, the Audubon had another exploitation display in a second lobby, the theatre having two entrances.

In this lobby many thousand dollars worth of Chinese trappings were on exhibition, proving a real attraction in itself.

Lavish lobby displays are the rule at the Audubon, and Mr. Jackson is a firm believer in exploitation.

Explains Exploitation Successful at Baltimore

AN aeroplane flight over one of Baltimore's most popular pleasure resorts in which certificates with money value were dropped into the crowds, as well as the splendid cooperation of the Baltimore American and Star, two of the city's daily newspapers, helped "put across" with great success "The Silver Horde" at the New theatre last week. In addition to these methods, W. R. Ferguson, publicity agent for the picture, and Louis A. DeHoff, manager of the theatre, combined in decorating the lobby of the theatre on Lexington street, so that it resembled a pine grove of the Northern woods.

The aeroplane flight probably attracted most attention. Beginning on Sunday it was announced in all the newspapers—both in the "ads" and in the news columns, that William D. Tipton would fly over Liberty Heights Park on Tuesday. Tipton is a well-known aviator of the city. He has an army record and was decorated by the Prince of Wales with the Distinguished Flying Cross, and besides this is secretary of the American Flying Club of Baltimore. It was announced that he would distribute 2,000 free passes from his plane and would throw out two silver passes, one of which would be redeemed for $25 by the Baltimore Star and the other for an equal amount by the Baltimore American. In addition to this he was also scheduled to perform "tail spins" and other hair-raising stunts over the park.

From Sunday until Tuesday, both the Star and American carried half-column stories under double-column heads on the back page designed to stir up public inter-

Capitol Stages Prelude for "Devil's Pass Key"

A PRELUDE to "The Devil's Pass Key" was staged last week at the Capitol theatre, New York, under the title of "Carnival."

The curtains part showing the capitol ensemble in costumes which suggest the Bohemian life of Paris. Confetti is being thrown by some of the cast. Others are dancing. Japanese lanterns are hung over the heads of performers and they are silhouetted before a black drop by colored floods from the wings.

As the scene is faded out, he comes down stage and laughs amid flashes of red light. A short strip of film showing Maude George in her character of the picture, opening a door that leads to the rooms of a luxurious apartment, follows.

The film mentioned is followed by the title of the picture.

est, with the result that when Tuesday arrived more than 20,000 people gathered at the park to see the exhibition flight. The passes were distributed as advertised.

But even here the publicity didn't end. The next day, it was learned that although one of the silver passes had been redeemed for $25, no one had appeared to cash the one which the Star was going to make good. This occasioned another half-column story on the back page of the Star.

The lobby display was very well done. Pine trees and painted posters designed to convey the effect of a pine grove were posted around the lobby. Most of the posters were painted to represent snow scenes and the effect was made more realistic by the distribution about the lobby of a chemical.

How Reynolds Put Over "Everywoman"

"EVERYWOMAN" may be maturing and "Everywoman" may have parted with the company of the fast city ways, but "Everywoman" is still a business getter for towns of respectable population and a wonderful exploitation medium for theatrical managers throughout the country. Manager Reynolds Maxwell of the Electric theatre in Joplin, who follows THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS closely, stated that he put over exploitation on "Everywoman" when this picture showed at his theatre and he has not seen anything that equalled the tieup Joplin gave the picture.

Richards, the most fashionable department store in the city, was the principal agency of exploitation. By arrangement with this store, models handsomely gowned were placed in the windows representing different characters taken from the picture: "Youth," "Modesty," "Beauty," "Truth," "Vanity" and "Everywoman."

The stunt covered seven days before the picture started and was the talk of the town. Manager Reynolds' opinion of the window displays is quoted verbatim as follows:

"I send you the photographs to show that in the small towns we can do nearly as well as the larger cities, as I have watched THE MOTION PICTURE NEWS closely on the windows on this picture and have not, to my point of view, observed any snappier windows in this class of advertising, considering the class of store and the non-use of cut-outs."

Pictures Solve Village Industrial Problem

New England Manufacturing Interests Install Community Movie Shows

IN the combination of motion picture theatre and community house, with which they have been experimenting extensively of late, New England manufacturing interests believe they have solved the problem of how to get and keep desirable help in sections without city recreational facilities but where housing conditions are less acute than in the cities and abundant natural water power partly makes up for fuel shortage. In the past, numerous desirable mill sites have been abandoned simply because officials were unable to get and keep employees, who desired the theatre and other social attractions of the city. Plans are not to intrude, in any way, into the field of the privately-owned or conducted motion picture house, unless it be so conducted as not to meet the demands of would-be patrons.

Substantial increased railroad and electric road fares, making it much more expensive for people of outlying districts to visit the nearby city in search of recreational facilities have stimulated the community plan of theatre. Probably the most extensive venture into this field is at Florence, Mass., an outlying ward of Northampton and the location of a large manufacturing colony. A deal has just been consummated whereby the building of the Free Congregational parish society, credited with being the finest-appointed church in the Northampton field, has passed in possession of the Florence Amusement Association, representative of the manufacturing interests of that section. As Cosmian hall, the building will be conducted as a high-grade motion picture theatre. Until the late fall and winter season, when it is planned to have nightly programs and matinees conducted by a committee representing the manufacturers.

Florence, being only two miles from Northampton the residents of the former section have been accustomed to go to that city to attend the "movies." But lately the trolley fare has been increased from 10 to 25 cents for the round trip. It is also expected that Cosmian hall will also draw an extensive patronage from the neighboring towns of Bay State and Leeds.

Another instance of converting a rural church into a moving picture house is reported at Guilford, Ct., where lack of trolley facilities prevent the residents from theater facilities of cities or larger communities. Acting for combined interests of that community Rev. H. B. Olmstead and members of the Christ Episcopal parish are taking steps to convert the former Third Congregational church building into a modern motion picture house. The auditorium of the church building which has been recently acquired by Christ parish has been in disuse for a considerable period.

All About Hicks "Rat"

IN the issue of August 7th the News told its readers how Verner Hicks, manager of the Family theatre, Marion, Ill., staged a "tin can matinee" in the interests of the first episode of "The Lost City" and announced that Mr. Hicks' next "hokum" stunt would be a "rat" show.

The "rat" show is now history and was productive of sixty-two rodents, columns of publicity in the newspapers and much more word-of-mouth advertising about the city of Marion.

Mr. Hicks' matinee was conducted along the same lines as the "tin can" show. Every boy or girl was admitted who brought one rat and one-cent war tax to the box office, or rather to a proper receptacle outside the box office so far as the rats were concerned, the regular ticket seller at the Family declining to accept anything but Uncle Sam's share of the admission for the day, being of the feminine sex.

Mr. Hicks reports that the success of the rat matinee was greater even than he had expected and is encouraged to stage other similar events.

This week he is trying a "fly" show.

As you will have observed from reading about Hicks' stunt shows, there is a "clean-up" idea back of each stunt.

Scenic Prelude for Feature at Capitol

AS a prelude number for "The Cruise of the Elsinore" at the Capitol this week, S. L. Rothapel is using some carefully selected strips of library film showing sea scenes in which wind and waves beating on the shores, the wreck of a big ship, the dash of foam over rocks, etc., are features.

The screening of the film is accompanied by the orchestra and the Capitol ensemble singing sea songs. No titles are used and the prelude flashes directly to the title of the feature picture.

Near the tag of the picture, where "John Pike" is dying of his wounds, the orchestra is stilled and a baritone solo, "Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep," off-stage furnishes the accompaniment for the remaining scenes.

It is in this connection that we think that the "fly" matinee is the best stunt yet originated. Four prizes will be awarded for the best catch to be brought to the theatre. The first prize is twenty-five admissions to the Family. The second award will be fifteen tickets. The third prize will be a daily admission to the Marion fair, soon to be held, and the fourth prize is five admissions to the Family.

Enlists Aid of Grocery Clerks for Semon Comedy

As an exploitation aid for his engagement of "The Grocery Clerk" Earle S. Nesbitt, manager of the Linwood theatre, Tarkio, Mo., used a stunt that bears all the ear marks of a sure-fire hit for any exhibitor.

Mr. Nesbitt secured a quantity of Larry Semon "pin buttons" from his exchange, and then had cards run off which read: "Compliments of the Tarkio order of grocery clerks who have adopted as their official organ for a delineation of the severe hardships and cruel conditions under which they labor, Larry Semon's greatest comedy, 'The Grocery Clerk,' with theatre and date line printed upon them.

He pinned a button on each card and distributed them about town, through the medium of the grocery packages the clerks sent out from their respective stores.

The clerks were admitted free at a designated show and were on hand in a body with a "rah, rah" for "Nezzy," all of which was the cause of a lot of talk about town, and a consequent increase in attendance for "The Grocery Clerk's" engagement at the Linwood.

Questions as "Yes or No?" Exploitation

Strand of Louisville and Newspapers Put Over Unique Campaign for Talmadge Picture

WEEKLY the record of the excellent results of securing newspaper cooperation in the exploitation of pictures is being recorded in these pages which may be taken as an indication of the willingness of the publications as a rule to go in with the exhibitor on any legitimate publicity scheme.

This is a story of how the Strand theatre of Louisville tied up with the Louisville Evening Post in the exploitation of "Yes or No?"

The scheme for gaining interest for the Strand's attraction was sound physiologically, and included an offer to give prizes for answers to thirty obviously easy questions to be answered "yes or no," and based upon the title of the Talmadge production.

The questions were printed ten each day for three days with a $5 first prize, $1 for the next five and two tickets of admission to the Strand theatre for the next thirty. The basis of awards was the correctness of the answers and their neatness.

George J. Mauer, manager of the Strand, paved the way for the success of the idea, beginning two weeks before the newspaper announced the prizes. He did the unprecedented thing of using a large lobby banner faced toward the entrance to the theatre so that it was in a prominent position for view by the audiences leaving the theatre. The banner carried two pictures of Miss Talmadge, one as the "Yes" girl, and the other as the "No" girl, both perfectly captioned, but no mention of the picture was made, nor did the banner carry the name of the star. House employees scanned newspapers and magazines for stories in which a flat affirmative or negative answer was given to any question, and these were put into lobby frames with "Yes" or "No" heavily underscored with blue pencil and the top of the frames carried merely a card with the words "Yes or No." Advertisements which offered a chance to underscore the two words were also used in the frames, and local advertisers helped along the campaign by wording advertisements so that they would be selected for the lobby display.

Little cards appeared all over the city each containing a question such as "When a Frenchman shrugs his shoulders does he mean yes or no?" or "The greatest moment in a woman's life is when the right man asks her to say yes or no," and others of similar thought arousing design. The Evening Post made the announcement on the Wednesday before the picture opened at the Strand on July 26th. The first ten questions were along the same lines as the little cards and were so simple that it was a dull witted person who did not figure that it would be an easy thing to win the $5 first prize. Two of the questions in the first ten which most frequently incorrectly answered were "Is Norma Talmadge married?" and "Did Daniel Webster write the dictionary?" This last one caused a number of entries to forget all about Noah.

The newspaper published a new list of ten questions each on both Thursday and Friday and in the Saturday and Sunday papers the theatre used quarter page advertisements announcing the picture at the Strand were used. The Sunday business on the production was enormous, but Mr. Mauer did not fully appreciate the success of the contest until Monday.

The Evening Post had announced that the contest would close on Sunday and that the announcement of prize winners would be printed Monday. Monday, however, the newspaper printed a statement that due to the large number of replies that were received the judges could not announce the winners until Wednesday. This additional publicity on the contest was probably accountable for a part of the way business held up through the entire week but Mr. Mauer used short big typed ads in the newspapers daily along the lines of "Have you been in the Strand this week?" "Yes or No?" and other copy along the same lines as the questions which had been used by the Evening Post.

How the Liberty at Fresno Put Over Pickford's "Suds"

Beatty Uses Float to Advertise "Suds"

There is many an exhibitor, good ones, too, who argue that when playing a picture with a star as popular as Mary Pickford, the announcement of the attraction, the date of the showing, etc., is all that is necessary. However, there are many who have proved this theory to be only partially a fact, and one of these is James Beatty, manager of the Liberty theatre, Fresno, Cal. One of the proofs that Mr. Beatty has that exploitation pays no matter how much of a drawing card the star may be is his experience in putting over "hokum" stunts for "Suds."

As shown by the photographs on this page, the Liberty went the limit in "circusing" the attraction.

The float shown above was driven about the city, with the "washer woman" busily scrubbing away and the family wash flapping in the breeze.

The big sign shown in the cut at the right is not particularly new as an exploitation medium, but illustrates that even in a city as large as Fresno, which is big enough to boast ten-story buildings, the privilege of stringing a banner across the street may be obtained.

Woman Exhibitor Takes Issue with Sister Showman

Miss Willams, of Bluffton, Iowa Attests the Value of Publicity

IN the MOTION PICTURE NEWS of July 24 (page 751) Mrs. Anita Kanges, manager of the Playhouse, Pittsburgh, expressed her views on what she considered abuse and over-rating of the value of exploitation in presenting moving pictures.

And right off—we have a nice little controversy between two sister exhibitors!

Miss Natalie Williams, young, vivacious and pretty, operates the Grand theatre in Bluffton, Ind., and she doesn't mind saying that she has proved the value of special exploitation of worthwhile pictures. She doesn't believe, with Mrs. Kanges, that straight advertising is entirely sufficient to put over big pictures.

There's one point upon which the two fair "showmen" agree—each thinks the exhibiting field is a fine one for women to cultivate. Miss Williams thinks women have splendid opportunities in operating motion picture theatres.

Miss Williams is a firm believer in exploitation, despite the Kanges view as expressed in the NEWS.

"I have proven exploitation of the unusual sort is a box-office asset," said Miss Williams. If a theatre continues to advertise in one way, this routine attitude is soon reflected in the theatre and in the audiences. Getting out of the rut is the problem and exploitation is the thing that jacks us out of the groove every once in a while."

Not so long ago Miss Williams played

"Male and Female." With the assistance of the exploitation department of the Chicago office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Miss Williams put on the liveliest campaign ever seen in Bluffton. Page spreads in each of her daily papers; window displays; extensive billboard work; street car hangers, circular letters, etc., were used.

And if you won't tell anybody, here's a little secret which shows how clever a woman-shawman can be: Miss Williams profited $14 by buying outright the two pages of space in her papers and re-selling them to merchants.

Miss Williams is that type of exhibitor always seeking hints for building up business. When a visiting exploitation man hits her town, she takes him for a walk. If he thinks it's a little social saunter down the street, he is soon undeceived. For at each corner, Miss Williams stops and asks the exploiter if he can suggest a spot for a one-sheet, three-sheet or 24-sheet stand.

"The stranger coming into town often sees locations and gets ideas that we in town all the time overlook," she explains. As a result she is constantly adding spots to her outdoor advertising campaign.

Incidentally, Miss Williams gets those locations that a mere man exhibitor might not get. She has not forgotten her quite recent co-ed days at Illinois University—and charm in business is no mean asset.

In exploiting "On With the Dance" Miss Williams, for instance, made use even of the man who has the patented popcorn-making stand on the main street. As you know, these popcorn machines are topped by a glass lantern arrangement with transparencies containing advertising copy for the popcorn. Miss Williams got "Jim," the popcorn man, to permit her to insert still photos from "On With the Dance" into the transparencies and presto! she had a moving display that caught the eye of the town belles and beaux who stopped to buy popcorn—a favorite sport in Bluffton!

Miss Williams believes in "practical exploitation," as does Mrs. Kanges of Pittsburgh. In putting over "On With the Dance," she went out to the Bay Piano factory, the largest industry in Bluffton. She sold the officials the idea of giving a party for all of the 600 employees on the opening night of the engagement.

Now that Miss Williams has expressed her views, how about hearing from her sister-exhibitors in Indiana? The Hoosier state seems to be the home of exhibitors as well as poets and playwrights; there are Dolly Spurr of Marion, Miss Hollin of Lebanon, Miss McLain of Crawfordsville and several others.

Arthur Jacob's Aim Is to Develop Talent

Arthur Jacobs, whose chosen field in the motion-picture industry is to supply qualified screen players to motion-picture producers, believes firmly that success behind the foot-lights does not assure a corresponding success on the screen or vice-versa. In a statement just issued, Mr. Jacobs maintains that no matter how splendid may be the dramatic technique of a player who belongs to the legitimate stage, unless his or her screen value is stronger than the stage value, stardom on the silver-sheet is not assured.

Screen personality, Mr. Jacobs contends, combines a natural ability to photograph well, plus a wholesomeness and magnetism that reaches out from the screen into the very hearts of the audience.

Rothacker Welcomed Abroad

THE arrival in England of Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, has aroused unusual interest in the British film circles. The reports that have reached this side, concerning Mr. Rothacker's reception abroad, indicates clearly that his fame as one of the most successful figures of the American motion-picture industry has preceded him to foreign shores. In the July 29 issue of the Kinematograph Weekly, a trade journal, published in London, Mr. Rothacker's activities in the building-up of his extensive laboratory business in America are recited with profuse tributes of admiration, and the purpose and scope of his present mission abroad are set forth with elaborate detail.

Kinematograph Weekly Features His Trip and Past Career

Commenting on the rather ambitious itinerary laid down by this busy American, the Kinematograph says:

"Mr. Rothacker has given himself a pretty busy time, for he planned to fly over to Paris on Monday, return after a week, then to fly to Brussels, Antwerp and Ostend, returning to sail in the next westward trip of the Olympic, on August 18. He has then to keep moving, for he has business in Chicago to transact before he can get away to Los Angeles in time for the opening of the company's new laboratory, which by then will be completed."

In discussing possible steps to be taken by Mr. Rothacker in establishing a business in England, the Kinematograph Weekly has the following to say:

"He has the possibility of opening a plant here, but the plans are as yet by no means settled. He wants to know more about the conditions of the trade here first before he makes up his mind whether he will build a laboratory of his own or come to some arrangement with an English company. The great aim he has in view is to establish security for his customers. He wishes to feel confident at least that the work done is as near perfection as human organization can make it; if there are faults he insists upon being in a position to know where they are."

The Kinematograph also devotes some space to Mr. Rothacker's opinions on "international politics of the picture business." In this connection the trade publication quotes Mr. Rothacker as follows:

"We are all here of the same race and have the same commercial ideals, and we all want to make the industry a commercial and an artistic success. We want to be able to get together and interchange ideas. Each country excels in its own way. As to British productions, I have seen some very good, and also, I must say, some very poor. But this is just the same in my own country—in both cases there are more poor than good."

"I have been wonderfully impressed by the hospitality and courtesy I have met with."

Public to View "Life" in Mid-September

William A. Brady's big picture "Life" is finished and has entered the cutting stage. Over 150,000 feet of negative was taken, it is stated. It is expected that the picture will be ready for a trade-showing the last week in August, and its initial public showing may be expected about the middle of September.

Mr. Brady has not decided as to the number of reels that the picture will be released in. Mr. Brady and Travers Vale are said to have taken full advantage of the wealth of picture values that the original play "Life" contained. It is declared by the William A. Brady office that over 40,000 people are actually seen on the screen in the big scenes of the picture.

No arrangements have as yet been made as to the method of distributing "Life."

Lillian Amusement Co. Acquires New House

The Lillian Amusement Company, operating the Washington and the Garden theatres of Granite City, Ill., have taken over the Rialto of that city. After improvements are affected, it will be opened on September 1st for the showing of feature pictures. The Washington will run vaudeville acts booked by the Western Vaudeville Managers' Association. Louis Landan, Jr., will manage the Washington and the Rialto, which, it is estimated, will have a combined seating capacity of nearly 3,000.

Paramount Has Engaged French Designer

Famous Players-Lasky corporation announces that Paul Iribé, a leading French designer of gowns, jewelry, furniture and interior decorations, has been engaged to take care of the designing of settings and costumes for the Paramount pictures, and especially for George Fitzmaurice's special productions. Mr. Iribé will work in cooperation with Mr. Fitzmaurice and Robert M. Haas, head of the art and decoration department.

Live News From The Producers

"Headin' Home" Coming "Babe" Ruth's Picture Is Rousing Great Interest, Producers State

BABE RUTH, the champion home-run hitter of the world and described as the "great personality of America," will begin on the final scenes of "Headin' Home" upon his arrival in New York on Monday. The response to the Kessel & Baumann announcement that this production would not only be a great attraction from the star point of view but a great production and a real American drama is said to have caused a rush from all sections of the United States not only for territory but for actual playing dates from exhibitors.

From the offices of Kessel & Baumann the following statement was issued in regard to the forthcoming big special:

"When the home run king of the Yankee team was shattering circuit records thereby arousing a high pitch of baseball enthusiasm with the fans of the country, with both large and small newspapers in the big cities and the small towns playing up each home run made by Ruth with seven column heads, both

Mr. Kessel and Mr. Baumann were more than positive that in acquiring this phenomenal baseball player, and starring him in a picture, they would be giving both to the exhibitor and the theatregoing public an entertainment that would be a record-breaker so far as box office receipts were concerned.

"Without any fanfare of trumpets the deal was quietly consummated, and before any news of the event had leaked out the mighty "Babe" between home runs started on what will rank as a great box-office bonanza.

"The publicity that Ruth has received since his acquisition by the Yankees can and never will be duplicated by any other actor or actress in a decade.

Richard Robertson with Independent Films

RICHARD ROBERTSON has arrived from the West Coast to assume his duties as director of the exploitation, advertising and publicity department of Independent Films Association. Mr. Robertson is particularly well qualified for his new position as he has had experience in practically every angle of the industry, having been connected with such concerns as Universal, Goldwyn and World, as salesman, exchange-manager and later as publicity and exploitation man.

For some years his headquarters were in Kansas City, but more recently he has been in Hollywood, and in both cities he won an enviable reputation for ability and initiative.

Announces Releases for Illinois Territory

Lee Herz of Silec announces the purchase of several new pictures for release in Illinois, including "Youth's Desire," a five-reel feature, starring Joe Bennett, which he purchased for the Forward Film Distributors and will release October 1st. A series of twenty-six Topical Tips are to be released weekly. Silec will also release a Jester Comedy special on September 1st and has booked "Blind Love" at Barbee's Loop theatre for the week of August 22nd.

"Freedom of Ireland" Release Sept. 14

B. Herbert Milligan, who last week was elected to the presidency of Creation Film Company, announces that "For The Freedom of Ireland" will be released on September 14. This five-reel feature, which deals with the struggle of the Irish people to form their own government, is from the story by Hal Reed and is said to be a powerful photoplay.

"Earthbound" Daring in Its Conception and Scope

Reviewed by J. S. Dickerson

THIS offering is notable. First from the angle of its daring theme, the theory of the existence of an astral body. Second from the standpoint of production, lavish, carefully built, wonderfully acted, faultlessly directed, a triumph from the point of technique and camera work.

On these points all will agree, but individual opinions will differ widely, as widely as the characteristics of the individuals themselves after the angles we have enumerated have been disposed of. It will be taken seriously by those who are inclined to be serious with the occult idea. It will be scoffed at by those who scoff at anything that teaches or preaches of spiritualism.

The hard-boiled fan shopping for entertainment may grow weary of the first half of the story containing little hint of what is to follow, the time-honored eternal triangle plot, given unusual footage and going into detail to securely plant the reasons for the thought to be presented later.

After the murder sequence, perhaps the best thing of its kind ever staged in a picture, a wide diversity of ideas on the balance of the feature are bound to be encountered. Those antagonistic for any reason, will instantly seize an opportunity to criticize presented by the fact that the astral body for a matter of months wears the same clothes as did the murdered man, forgetting the limitations of even the camera, the necessity of preserving the conventions and mixing entirely the great message back of the actual drama of the picture. The superstitious—and they still exist—will feel uncomfortable when they witness a "ghost" walking about, and the brainless see in the idea of the astral body, only one of their favorite plots messed up by the injection of something they can't understand and are not interested in.

Against the class of people we have mentioned will be arrayed the undeterminable number of "thinkers" who probably are not attracted to the picture theatre with any great regularity. Properly exploited this picture will draw this class, and if they see it they are going to spend a lot of time discussing it pro and con, all of which brings the offering from an exhibitors' standpoint down to an exploitation angle.

It is a picture to be regarded as more than another feature to be booked and played. It has exploitation possibilities far in excess of any offering that exists as mere entertainment, or that which naturally is presented by a production adapted from a widely read novel by a popular author.

Its financial success will depend largely on the man and the theatre playing it. Admission prices will have no influence on its patronage. People who want to see it will not haggle over the cost of their seat. Neither will they complain if on viewing it they decide in the negative as to its entertainment value. It is a production to play by itself and for itself with no thought as to who in its sponsor, its players or any of the other matters that usually are considered in booking a picture. "Earthbound" is a "production" or it is nothing. It will stand or fall on that basis.

Two things that mean a little to audiences and a great deal to the industry are to be gleaned from an inspection of this picture. It establishes T. Hayes Hunter's standing as a director and Samuel Goldwyn's courage as a producer. It is a departure from the conventional and as such if for no other reason should be hailed with acclaim.

Cody Can Be Exploited "Occasionally Yours" Offers Exhibitors Fine Possibilities

"OCCASIONALLY YOURS," the Robertson-Cole super-special starring Lew Cody, which will be released soon, is said to be a picture which lends itself easily to exploitation. And the Robertson-Cole experts claim to have taken full advantage of the possibilities offered by the original and novel title and the unusual story, brimful of vim and pep and sparkling with arresting situations, humorous and otherwise.

Aside from the power of the star and the cast with which he has surrounded himself in this picture—Betty Blythe, Elinor Fair of "Miracle Man" fame, Lillian Rambeau, mother of Marjorie Rambeau, Lloyd Hamilton, the comedy star, and others. "Occasionally Yours" can be made to draw, claims the distributors, if the exploitation suggestions already worked out are utilized.

The features that will appeal to the live-wire exhibitor include a novelty herald, teaser ads, a post-card stunt, artistic newspaper ads, commercial tie-ups, and special paper as well as lobby display photos and oil paintings that once seen by the exhibitor will be utilized to capacity.

Equity Picture Is Scoring Novel Community Tie-Up Causes Interest in "Keep to the Right"

INTEREST in Equity's special production "Keep to the Right," starring Edith Taliaferro, which is now being sold to states-rights buyers, is said to be fast accumulating. The first feature of attraction in this production was the name of the star, and the second point of keen interest was the campaign that was prepared for the picture. This was the "Keep to the Right" campaign of exploitation, whereby a tie-up between the picture and the safety-first movement where the picture is to be shown was planned and incorporated in the press-book now completed.

Still another, and very significant feature of this attraction, outside of the picture itself, is the press-book prepared for the assistance of the exhibitor in getting full value out of the picture. The efforts of Equity's staff have been concentrated in turning out a press-book complete in every detail.

Farrar Picture to Be Released Oct. 3

THE Associated Exhibitors, Inc., formally enters the realm of producers of motion pictures with the release on October 3rd of "The Riddle Woman," with Geraldine Farrar and an all-star cast, and directed by Edward Jose. Pathe is to distribute this attraction.

"The Riddle Woman" was more than three months in the course of production.

Strike Scenes on File for Busy Producers

In line with the announcement that the Harry Levey Service Corporation, in addition to producing industrial-educational motion pictures would "sell scenes" to other producers, comes a wire from Mr. Levey's Denver cameraman that he has secured some excellent scenes of the street-car strike in that city. These views will be placed on file under the heading "Mob Scenes—Strikes," for busy producers to purchase.

Ince to Supervise Productions

All Forthcoming Pictures to Receive His Attention

ONE of the important developments concurrent with the advent of the new screen season in September, is the announcement from the Thomas H. Ince Studios to the effect that Thomas H. Ince will continue the personal production supervision. According to a statement issued over Ince's signature, all of the Thomas H. Ince productions for release through the Associated Producers, Inc., own exchange system, will either be personally directed, or personally supervised, by Thomas H. Ince himself.

While no definite information has been divulged as to the initial, or subsequent, super-specials for "A. P." distribution, it is known that casting for the first of these pictures is under way at the present time, and that one of two recently acquired stories will serve as the vehicle for the all-star cast.

The list of former Thomas H. Ince stars, directors, authors, artists, technicians, and even cameramen, concerns many well-known names. Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton, William S. Hart, Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum, William Desmond, Enid Bennett, Sessue Hayashi, kawa, and others of the present-day celebrities formerly worked under Thomas H. Ince.

There also is Mildred Harris Chaplin, who started with Ince as an extra girl; Rhea Mitchell, who has just arrived in starland; and many other now famous personages included among whom are Lewis Stone, Billie Burke, Olive Thomas, H. B. Warner, Margery Wilson, Barney Sherry, Joseph Dowling, Harold Goodwin, Walt Whitman, and Ethel Grandin, who were at one time or another under the supervision of Ince.

In the directorial division, Thomas H. Ince has graduated many successful directors: Jerome Storm, who directed the Charles Ray productions, joined the Ince studios as an actor. Reginald Barker started to learn the rudiments of the art with Ince. Irwin Willatt, who is now at the head of his own producing company, started with Ince as a cameraman.

Howard Hickman, a leading director on the Bruntion lot, entered the Ince school as an actor of small parts. Wallace Worley was also before the camera during his association with Ince. Charles Miller, Victor Schertzinger, Charles Swickard, and the late Walter Edwards, also "broke in" the directors' field under Ince.

The Ince Studios now boast of two young directors who, gaining Ince's consent to abandon the grease paint, are wielding the megaphone under Ince's guidance. They are Rowland Lee, and Jack Nels, the former directing a special, the latter the Douglas MacLean productions.

Ince's success with embryonic authors and continuity writers has been identical with that concerning stars and directors. C. Gardner Sullivan was summoned from New York in the old days of Inceville. Beginning at a small salary his rise, under the supervision of the producer, has earned him a place high in the ranks. J. G. Hawks, John Lynch, Ethel Gillette, Lambert Hillier, Monte Katterjohn, R. Cecil Smith, Julien Josephson, and Luther Reed—all started under Ince.

Two Climax Releases on Sale

"The Fourth Face" and "Love's Battle" on the Market

THE Climax Film Corporation, of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, is a concern which was formed several months ago for the distribution of independent pictures throughout the East. The executives of this company, however, recently decided to broaden their activities and enter the business on a wider scale. Their first move along this line was the purchase of the two feature productions "Love's Battle" and "The Fourth Face."

The men at the head of this corporation are Mr. J. A. Friedenwald, pres.; Mr. M. E. VanBergh, treas.; Mr. Felix Goldfarb, vice-president, and Mr. C. H. Rosenfeld, secretary.

Mr. Felix Goldfarb, its general manager, for a number of years acted as New York manager of the Mutual Exchange and later in the same capacity with Robertson-Cole. Mr. Charles H. Rosenfeld, sales manager, was also associated with the same companies. In addition to this, both of these gentlemen are familiar with the state right field, having traveled over the entire country in the interest of a number of productions.

They are going into the states right distribution whole-heartedly and have selected for their first release two subjects. The Climax Corporation executives, however, feel that they have secured two very good properties in "Love's Battle" and "The Fourth Face" and that they can save both time and a great deal of expense by marketing both of the pictures at the same time.

They have found that the state right purchaser is very much agreeable to this plan as he can view both pictures when he comes to New York and this method saves him much time and expenses in coming East when he is interested in a picture.

"Love's Battle" has as its starred players Eileen Sedgwick and Joe Moore. Miss Sedgwick's work is well known to all in the picture business. She has starred in a score or more of pictures and has also been featured in a great many more. Her name is an asset as is Mr. Moore's whose famous family connection as well as his natural ability have placed him in the fore front of screen actors. In addition to these two prominent names, other notable players have been supplied to make up the cast.

"The Fourth Face" is a gripping mystery story that is said to have been admirably worked out. Its cast is made up of distinguished and capable players with no one particularly starring. It is the type of story where no one particular player's work stands out for a starring part, but one that demands the keenest sort of action of the entire cast.

Grainger to Represent Vidor in New York

King Vidor, whose latest First National picture, "The Jack Knife Man," received much praise during its run at the Strand, New York, last week, announced this week the appointment of Edmund C. Grainger as his New York representative. The New York office of the Vidor Productions will be located in the same building as the First National, 6 West 48th street.

Finish "39 East" Filming

Constance Binney Company Stages Last Scenes in New York Theatre

WITH the filming of important scenes at the Park theatre, Columbus Circle, New York City, Constance Binney this week, completed camera work on her forthcoming production of "39 East" for Realart. The picture will become available to exhibitors during August. It is the third production Miss Binney has made since becoming a Real artist.

After the last day's work, the company, which has been together for more than two years while the play was enjoying its run in New York City and through the country, held an informal gathering and dinner and then disbanded. Reginald Denny, who appears as leading man on the screen, was the only one present not a member of the original stage cast. He replaced Henry Hull when the latter started in a new stage production.

For the last scenes of the play, Director John S. Robertson chose the Park theatre in Columbus Circle as a location. The scenes taken there were concerned with phases of the play which were not depicted on the stage and were done on an elaborate scale with a large company of extras taking part.

In the story, Penelope Penn, played by Constance Binney, is the daughter of an impoverished country minister who comes to the city to recoup the family fortunes without a great deal of a success at first. Finally her experience as a choir singer at home proves invaluable to her in obtaining a position in the chorus.

It hardly proves a relief as she feels forced to keep her work a secret and she becomes involved in difficult situations. Finally, however, her great chance comes when the temperamental prima donna of the company flies into a huff and quits cold just before a performance. Penelope gets the role then, in some respects repeating her own actual rise and success in a Broadway production.

The stage version confined its scenes to the boarding house at "39 East" and Central Park. Director Robertson decided upon a complete and sumptuous presentation of the theatre scenes so vital to the story. An exceptionally large number of extras was engaged to fill the Park theatre and to stage a musical comedy. The scenes, therefore, are said to give a full presentation of a theatre's space with a show in progress, as distinguished from the restricted effects of such scenes staged in a studio.

The cast supporting Miss Binney in the picture, in addition to Reginald Denny, the leading man, is as follows: Alison Skipworth, Lucia Moore, Blanche Frederici, Edith Gresham, Mildred Arden, Luis Alberni, Albert Carroll and Frank Allworth. The scenario was prepared by Julia Crawford Ivers. Shaw Lovett was Mr. Robertson's assistant director and Roy Overbaugh his cameraman.

New Rolin Comedy Has London Street Set

It is said that no expense has been spared for settings and local color for the new Rolin Comedy, "A London Bobby," which Pathe will release August 22d. The streets of London with their narrow alleys inhabited by the "costers" have been reproduced to the minutest detail. "Snub" Polard is at his best featured as the "bobby." He is assisted by Marie Mosquini "Sunshine Sambo" the diminutive colored comedian and a large number of extras to represent the types of the London streets.

Specials in Successful New York Premiers

The premier performances of "If I Were King" at the Lyric on Monday, August 9th, and "Earthbound" at the Astor on Wednesday, August 11th, were very successful, and the presentation at each of these two notable performances was unusually good.

Universal Claims a "Find"

Newcomer to Directorial Staff Said to Show Unusual Ability

UNIVERSAL believes it has discovered another Erich von Stroheim. At any rate, Universal officials are willing to take a chance with their "find" in the hope that he will turn as "meteoric" as von Stroheim did when once he got his opportunity to direct, at the hands of Cal Laemmle, Universal chief.

The new-comer to the Universal directorial staff is Marcel de Sano, a young Rumanian war veteran. He has been in the moving picture game only ten months, and is only 22 years old, but so consistent has been his progress as an assistant director, that those for whom he has worked predict his success.

Up to this time he has assisted Herbert Blache and Winchell Smith.

His work with Blache was for the Metro Company in the production of "The Hope!" He assisted Smith in the direction and filming of "The Saphead," and also took part in the direction of "The New York Idea," for Famous Players-Lasky.

He has been engaged by Universal for five years. He was to leave New York for Los Angeles in a few days. His first work under the Universal banner probably will be the direction of Universal's new star, Carmel Myers, in a new society drama, "White Orchids."

Later de Sano will direct a series of foreign stories of his own writing, in several of which he himself will play.

Children Will See Serial

Chicago Circuits Arrange Matinees for Ruth Roland Serial

SPECIAL Saturday matinees for children, with serial plays as the main attraction, are the latest box office novelties hit upon by progressive exhibitors. These matinees are soon to be introduced by the Lubliner & Trinz theatres in Chicago with "Ruth of the Rockies," the Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland, as the drawing card.

"Ruth of the Rockies" is the first serial to be booked by the Lubliner & Trinz houses. The Ruth Roland vehicle is to be played at matinees in every theatre in the circuit.

Other Chicago picture theatres which will inaugurate these special children's matinees are the houses of the Asher Brothers' circuit, which will start off with "The Third Eye," Pathe's serial co-starring Warner Oland and Eileen Percy. "The Third Eye" was released several weeks ago and to date has proved one of the biggest popular successes Pathe has ever issued in the serial line. Asher Brothers never before booked a chapter-play.

Neither of these big circuits have as yet announced the date of commencement of the new scheme for bolstering up the box office returns for afternoon performances. In all these houses the special serial showings are to be widely advertised in advance and it is expected that the performances will develop into a highly important feature of the management's policy.

Warner Bros. Purchase G. W. Peck Stories

A wire from Los Angeles advises that Warner Bros. have purchased from the publishers the screen rights on all of George W. Peck's stories and that the Warner firm has sold these stories to a new organization, which is being headed by Col. Fred Levy of Louisville. Rumors indicate that the productions based on these Peck stories will be released through First National.

It is also stated that Al St. John will complete his contract in comedy productions for the Warner Bros.

Major Film Purchases "Movie Chats"

A contract was closed last week by the Kinetograph Company of America with the Major Film Corporation, 54 Broadway, Boston, Mass., whereby the New England rights on Charles Urban's Movie Chats were disposed of to the Major Film Corporation.

The United States is now practically sold complete on this remarkable single reel release; only a few states remain to be taken care of and for all of these contracts are pending. The foreign rights have long since been contracted for. Carl H. Pierce vice-president of Kinetograph went to Boston to complete the arrangements.

Leave of Absence Given Roswell Dague

Roswell Dague, Eastern production editor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been granted an extended leave of absence beginning September and at that date his duties at the Eastern studios will be assumed by Tom J. Geraghty. Mr. Geraghty is now on the Coast and is expected in New York in two or three weeks.

Mr. Dague has been associated with the Scenarios Department of Famous Players-Lasky since 1916 and was appointed some two months ago to the position of Eastern Production editor following the resignation of Gardner Hunting.

Work in East Finished, Meighan Goes West

Thomas Meighan has completed "The Frontier of the Stars," which he has been making under the direction of Charles Maigne at the Famous Players-Lasky Eastern studios. He left for California on Monday. Upon his arrival at Hollywood he starts work at the Lasky studio on "Easy Street." Samuel Mervin's story which first appeared in the Cosmopolitan and later was published in book form. Tom Forman will direct.

Roscoe Arbuckle Starts New Paramount Film

Roscoe Arbuckle has started work on his new production for Paramount, entitled "Brewster's Millions." Joseph Henabery is director.

On the left a scene from the R. A. Walsh production, "The Deep Purple," presented by Mayflower. On the right a view of the Charles Miller production, "The Law of the Yukon," also presented by Mayflower. Both pictures are released by Realart.

New Service Company Formed

WHAT is described to be an independent organization, capable of handling a picture literally from the author's typewriter to its exhibition upon the screen is to be realized in the formation of the Allied Independent Attractions, Inc., which is announced this week. Three men, already very prominent in the motion picture industry, have opened their offices in the Brokaw Building.

Harry Leonhardt, who built the famous California theatre and "put it over" is president; Ralph Proctor, who recently resigned as assistant general manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., takes up the new berth as vice president and general manager; and O. E. Chaney, one of New York's most able financiers, is secretary and treasurer.

According to its first announcement, the purpose of the Allied Independent Attractions, Inc., is to render a distinctive service of complete production plans, distribution counsel and exploitation salesmanship together with providing a New York business headquarters for independent producers, conducted by men who understand all the devious channels of the motion-picture business.

This proposition is augmented by a more definite statement by its vice president and general manager, Proctor, who says that the policy is to complete distribution contracts, give proper attention to first-run key-city distribution, equitable approbation of exhibition contracts and complete production publicity through an advertising department headed by capable men. The purchase of stories and the handling of foreign rights together with a general policy of rendering to the independent producer a service that he could not possibly obtain through any medium other than the Allied Independent Attractions, Inc.

Mr. Proctor is now engaged in the task of assembling a staff of assistants so that the organization can immediately begin its operation on a large scale. Already the Allied Independent Attractions, Inc., has been designated as the representative of several big independent producers, announcement of which will be made as soon as the organization has been definitely completed.

Harry Leonhardt, who heads this newest motion picture venture, is one of the oldest showmen in America, starting back thirty years ago as stage manager for George C. Miln. Mr. Leonhardt passed through the Shakespearian period of the American stage. He saw from the inside the inauguration of the legitimate star system by Mr. Charles Frohman and covered the United States in charge of many of the big productions of those days.

The Box Office Attractions formed by William Fox claimed him from vaudeville after eighteen years service with Keith and Proctor, and Mr. Fox realizing Mr. Leonhardt's efficient organizing ability, appointed him as district manager for the territory west of Chicago. The building of the California theatre and its record success under Messrs. Leonhardt and Miller, are recent history. This experience further fitted Mr. Leonhardt by giving him the exhibitor's angle.

Ralph Proctor, vice president and general manager of the Allied Independent Attractions, Inc., hardly needs introduction to the motion picture field. For a number of years, he has been a leader in the distribution field. As assistant general manager of the United Artists, Mr. Proctor opened the entire exchange system of that organization, assembled its complete sales force, and for a year directed the complete selling agencies of the "Big Four" throughout the United States.

Mr. Proctor resigned from United Artists, to become assistant general manager to Fred C. Quimby, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., following which he assisted in organizing the Allied Independent Attractions, Inc.

Joan Picture Attracting "Biggest Hit of His Career"

Fannie Ward in "She Played and Paid" Interests State-Righters

THE reported congestion and the bustle that has been aroused among buyers since the very first announcement of the release of "She Played and Paid" with Fanny Ward, is said to be assuming such proportions that there is talk among the officers of Joan Film Sales Co., advisability of enlarging their offices.

Of no small significance in the activity on "She Played and Paid" is the elaborate press-book that has been prepared with the picture. Considerable surprise was demonstrated at the unusual proportions of this campaign book, which was considered to be twice the size, and even more, than many a regular release—let alone a States-rights picture. States-rights men conceded that an effective press-book went along way towards influencing the exhibitor in booking the picture—particularly at this time, when the cry among showmen is for exploitation, and more substantial publicity matter.

The Joan exploitation staff, headed by the veteran advertising and exploitation man, Nat Rothstein, makes a specialty of press-book and exploitation service.

Vehicle Chosen for Allison

"The Marriage of William Ashe" to be Directed by Edw. Sloman

THE Marriage of William Ashe has been selected by Metro Picture Corporation as the next starring vehicle for May Allison. Miss Allison has just completed camera work on "Are All Men Alike?" a picturization of Arthur Stringer's novel, "The Waffle Iron," which ran as a serial in McClure's.

"The Marriage of William Ashe" was probably the most popular of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's later novels. It ran into many editions in both the United States and England. Later it was dramatized and its stage success was as pronounced as its literary popularity had been.

The stage play was produced at the Garrick theatre in New York in 1905 with Grace George as Kitty Ashe, the role that will be played on the screen by May Allison. In the London production the star role was played by Fanny Ward.

The picturization of "The Marriage of William Ashe" is being prepared for the screen by Ruth Ann Baldwin. This is the first picture assigned to Miss Baldwin since she became a Metro staff writer under Bayard Veiller, chief of production at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood, California. Miss Baldwin was formerly with Universal and Fox and has also directed several successful productions.

Kelly Tells Future Plans

General Manager of New Organization Still Highly Optimistic

JAMES B. ("Smiling Jimmy") Kelly, who recently made the announcement of the new company of which he is general manager, is still enthusiastic over his new plan.

"Big trees from Little Acorns Grow," said Kelly, "although my company is far from being in 'the acorn stage,' in finances, material, exhibitor support, and greatest of all in men of ability in both business and moving pictures. Work is being rushed on our studios over in New Jersey, material is being rapidly secured, one of our comedy companies is just finishing up a knockout and as a whole everything is simply fine and dandy.

"It has been called to my attention that certain other 'proven successful' producers have 'cheated' a wee bit, and looked into our private 'book of morals' in their announcement to the effect that they are not 'saying anything' until they are sure, because we are not going to make any final announcement, until we are 'ready to deliver.' However, this does not refer to the 'five weeks free distribution plan,' as that stands and will be faithfully complied with.

"In addition to producing and manufacturing our own pictures, we are on the market at all times for reputable productions, but only the very best, also we are building our own laboratories, will do our own distribution through twenty-two branch offices in a like number of key towns throughout the U. S., several of our branch managers and special territorial representatives, having already been selected and appointed."

Prediction Made by Kane of Ray's New Film After Receipt of Stills

THE first batch of "stills" from Hollywood studios of Charles Ray's new production, "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," have been received at the offices of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation in New York; and according to reports emanating from that source, these photographs furnish "ocular evidence that Charles Ray's production of 'Forty-five Minutes From Broadway' is the greatest triumph of his career." "The stills bear witness, too," continues the statement from the Arthur S. Kane offices, "to the capable work of Joseph de Grasse as director and the clever performance of each member of the cast, for it is another of Mr. Ray's characteristics that he always surrounds himself with players adequate to their situations, rather than weak actors with whom he would shine all the more in contrast."

The Arthur S. Kane statement further states that the presentation of "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway" will mark "a whole collection of 'firsts' for Mr. Ray." Not only is this his initial work under the Kane affiliation, but his first as an independent producer, the first to be completed in his new studios, and the first for First National release. The expense of the production was far and away greater than that of any other picture in which Mr. Ray was ever before featured.

"For the first time, also, Mr. Ray appears not as a small town or rural character who goes to the city but as a city youth who is to be initiated into the mysteries of village life. Become suddenly, well-to-do and forced to 'dress the part,' 'Kid Burns' suffers tortures as he discards his Bowery costume for the habiliments of high society. But the 'Kid' is, as chockful of human qualities as any of the Reubens Mr. Ray has ever depicted. The story teems with humor and pathos and those 'just natural' touches which have helped to make the young star a universal favorite."

Novel Given Stage and Screen Productions

J. L. Frothingham, general-manager of the F. L. Rutton film interests, which include the Bessie Barriscale company, has purchased the screen rights to Emerson Hough's novel, "The Broken Gate," which is now being prepared for the screen with an all-star cast headed by Miss Barriscale. Mr. Frothingham with a view to having the novel also dramatized for the stage has handed over the book to a playwright. The stage premier, it is planned, will take place in Los Angeles and will then come to New York for a Broadway run. Joseph Kilgour, Marguerite De La Motte, Arnold Gregg, Evelyn Selbie and Lloyd Bacon are also in the cast of the screen production.

Elaborate Press Book for "Big Happiness"

For "Big Happiness," the first starring vehicle of Dustin Farnum for Robertson-Cole, an elaborate press book has been prepared. Both the picture and Mr. Farnum presented fertile fields for exploitation and publicity and the distributors have taken advantage of every opportunity offered. This release, produced by the Dustin Farnum Production Company, was directed by Colin Campbell.

Rork-Roth Concern Announced

SAM E. RORK, president of Katherine MacDonald Productions, arrived in New York on Saturday morning, August 7th. His preliminary announcement upon reaching the Metropolis contained some details of the new producing enterprise in which he and Eugene H. Rork, a prominent exhibitor of San Francisco, have become associated. The new firm, the organization of which has been completed, will be known as the Rork-Roth Productions (R & R). The first release of the R & R company is announced to be "Isobel" adapted to the screen from the novel of the same title written by James Oliver Curwood.

"Isobel," which is a story of the Northwest, was produced under the direction of Edwin Carewe with an all-star cast. House Peters heads the all-star aggregation of players, and Jane Novak appears in the opposite role. The producers are of the conviction that "Isobel" will prove one of the big attractions during the coming season because of the appeal of the Curwood story and the production elements and powerful settings incorporated in the screen adaptation of the novel. The second production, titled "The Golden Snare," also based on a story written by James Oliver Curwood, will start about the first of November.

One of the developments that has proved a source of considerable satisfaction to Messrs. Rork and Roth is the acquisition of George Marion in the capacity of supervisor productions and cast. Mr. Marion has been engaged in the theatrical field for over two score years, and in that time he has produced a large number of stage successes, notably for Henry W. Savage, A. H. Woods, Charles Dillingham, the Selwyns and the Shuberts. R & R feel that Mr. Marion will bring to their aid his vast experience in theatrical affairs and his wide knowledge of types and dramatic essentials.

In the opinion of Mr. Marion the story is the predominant factor in photoplay production. The name of the author and his popularity are of secondary importance; it is the idea which counts, says Mr. Marion. It is also his opinion that the women writers of the future are destined to play an especially important part in the development of the story phase of picture production, and he explains the reasons for his theory as follows:

"Women are naturally creative and the conception of new ideas and new development of the human mind necessarily comes from them. They are also more keenly alive to the dramatic and emotional elements and are experts in detail. Consequently they should soon be the best scenario writers we have."

Mr. Rork, while in New York, will confer with Mr. Marion on their future production program. Mr. Marion is at present in Los Angeles looking over the ground and putting the finishing touches on all the plans for the start of the second production which is to get under way in the near future. Mr. Marion is expected to reach New York shortly.

Lasky Plans A Big Increase

Vice-President Talks on Production in Hollywood

THE increase of the producing organization to consist of fourteen or fifteen directors and the studios enlarged to afford each director additional space and the technical organization enlarged in proportion, are a part of the plans for Famous Players-Lasky Corporations Western organization during the next two months according to statements made by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president and manager of production, shortly after his arrival from London and New York and after two days of conferences with studio officials.

"What American producers must do is to internationalize their films," Mr. Lasky told a representative of the News, "and to do this we believe it is necessary that greater time be spent in the making of each film as well as in the preparatory work of the story and script. American films are superior to those made in any other country due to the progress made during the great war when producers of other nations were forced to abandon their work."

"Our company's plans for this work have partially been made by the building of studios in England and India. At each of these from ten to twenty-five subjects will be made annually, thus getting the correct atmosphere and detail in the films. About twenty subjects will be made at our big new studios in New York and between forty and fifty at the Los Angeles plants."

Mr. Lasky outlined many of the interesting features of his recent trip to London and interviews with English writers where he made contracts with a number to write for the screen. The English releases of American films are about eighteen months behind the American schedule and he took with him copies of the "Male and Female," "The Miracle Man" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," to show English writers the progress made by producers of this country. Mr. Lasky attributes his success in making contracts with some of the best known English writers to the showing of these films, for they gave Sir James M. Barry, Arnold Bennett, H. G. Wells, Robert Hitchins, Henry Arthur James, E. Phillips Oppenheim, Compton MacKenzie, Max Pemberton, E. Temple Thurston and others who contracted to write for Famous Players-Lasky, a new conception of the field of the screen. A number of the writers will come to America to study film production technique and story requirements and plan to spend a number of weeks in American studios.

In summing up his survey of the world film market Mr. Lasky stated it was his opinion that in the future the industry would become an international one with the best modern films being made in American and Italian, French and German producers making the costume plays.

Mr. Lasky plans on remaining in Hollywood for several months so that he may be near during the expansion period of the company.

Charles G. Roshier Joins Neilan Forces

Marshall Neilan last week announced the signing of a long-term arrangement of Charles G. Roshier, a prominent photographic expert in motion pictures. Mr. Roshier has been photographer for Mary Pickford the past three years. For years he has made a study of photography both from a technical and artistic standpoint here and abroad.

At the Neilan studio Mr. Roshier will be in charge of the photographic department, affiliated with David Kessen for some time cameraman under the Neilan banner.

Carey Feature Nearly Finished on Coast

"Sundown Slim," the latest Harry Carey feature, is nearing completion at Universal City.

"Sundown Slim" is being directed by Val Paul, well-known as a craftsman in the construction of pictures of the virile West. Supporting Carey are Charles Le Moyne, George Harris, Ted Brooks and many others.

Stroheim Pleases Two Cities

"THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY," Erich von Stroheim's second feature for Universal, had its premier presentation simultaneously in the Capitol theatre, New York City and the La Salle theatre, Chicago, Sunday, August 8. It was well received in both cities according to reports.

Reports which have reached the Universal office from Chicago indicate that it was necessary to turn people away from the La Salle theatre on the opening night of the new Universal-Jewel production. Nat Royster, manager of the La Salle sent word that he expects to do bigger business with it than with any moving picture ever shown in that theatre, according to Universal.

The crowd at the Capitol theatre was equally as large and as enthusiastic over the picture. This was despite the fact there was no prior exploitation.

An effective and concentrated exploitation campaign was launched in Chicago several days before the opening, directed in person by Joseph H. Mayer, director of publicity for Universal. One of its salient features was a series of teaser ads in the newspapers asking "What is the Devil's Pass Key?" and which aroused great curiosity among the newspaper readers of that city.

"The Devil's Passkey" a Hit in Chicago and New York

The New York presentation was accompanied by a colorful and artistically staged prologue, depicting "Carnaval" by Felix Foudrain, staged by S. L. Rothafel, and interpreted by Bertram Peacock and a chorus. The stage represented Paris at carnival times, with the joyously singing mummers thronging the streets amid showers of confetti. As the frivolity was at its height, Peacock appeared as the Devil, and sardonically laughed the roisters off the stage. The scene faded into the opening of "The Devil's Pass Key."

Reviewers and others who saw the opening of "The Devil's Pass

Key" profess to see it in a new treatment of screen material—a utilization of the dramatic possibilities of the screen as contrasted to the narrative form of the screen drama. In this respect it is hailed as a greater picture than "Blind Husbands" von Stroheim's first picture.

Reports on "The Devil's Pass Key" also have reached the Universal Home office from other cities where previews of the feature have been shown. E. C. Bostwick of the Saxe Amusement Enterprises of Milwaukee, wrote as follows:

"After having seen this picture, I can readily see that it will be one of the season's best and a real-clean-up. I am very glad that I lost no time in booking the picture for its initial downtown showing at our Alhambra theatre, as well as for our outskirt theatres. Mr. E. J. Weisfeldt, managing director of the Alhambra theatre, also reviewed the picture and is very enthused over it. He feels confident that it will go over splendidly and promises to spare nothing in giving it the exploitation it well deserves."

Warner's "Felix O'Day" Should be Winner

Three important elements, according to reports, combine to make "Felix O'Day" the next H. B. Warner release through Pathe, an outstanding feature-star, author and director. "Felix O'Day" was written by F. Hopkinson Smith, and adapted from the novel by Fred Myton, giving the production its second claim to attention.

As the third "element," Robert Thornby directed it. Another angle to the prospective success of "Felix O'Day" is the unusual type of players supporting Mr. Warner, among whom are Marguerite Snow, Lillian Rich, who had important parts in "One Hour Before Dawn," Ray Ripley and Karl Forness.

The polished Warner is again established in a role that emphasizes his artistic finish. His virility and forcefulness are powerful assets to "Felix O'Day," the action of which carries one from the pleasing exteriors of an estate in Ireland to the metropolitan whirl of New York.

A Big Campaign for Serial

WHAT is considered to be one of the greatest advance publicity and advertising campaigns ever launched on any state-right picture is that conducted on the sensational 15-episode serial released by Joan to states-rights buyers. The nation-wide advertising that sets a record in the independent field, makes the buyer's profits on easy matter, and practically guarantees a "clean-up" for both him and the exhibitor.

This coast-to-coast campaign is not an expression of a hope—it is said to be already an accomplished fact. The first gun of the campaign was fired when, on the last Sunday of June, there appeared in all the Hearst magazines and newspapers of the United States totalling a circulation of 5,250,000 readers, a full-page advertisement on the marvels of the "Invisible Ray"—the 15-episode serial of staggers and surprises, under the streaming caption of "The Most Astounding Motion-picture Ever Filmed." The advertisement then painted in flashing colors the wonders and achievements—the thrills and the mysteries that flow from the very first scene to the last close-up of this serial masterpiece.

The result of this country-wide publicity is easy to estimate. Thousands of anxious inquiries began to pour into the producers of this serial from all corners of the country, requesting to know when the serial will be shown at their theatre.

This advertising campaign, backed by a publicity drive of vast proportions, was one of the guiding motives in the purchase by Joan of the national rights to this serial. While the iron is hot, while the public appetite is still thirsting for this bristling 15-episode picture, Joan lost no time in closing with the producers for the acquisition of "The Invisible Ray."

National Advertising of "Invisible Ray" Will Reach 5,000,000

That is why the Joan company has been kept busy the past two weeks negotiating with states-rights buyers for the territorial rights to this serial, and that is why Joan company has never had a greater business activity in its career than now.

This advance campaign is said to be historic in the states-rights trade, insofar as it marks the first time that a producer not only supplied the product, but actually created the demand for his customers—and that is exactly what this advertising and publicity campaign means to the states-rights buyer. He will find that thousands in his territory are waiting to see "The Invisible Ray" at their local theatres, and that many exhibitors are expecting this serial.

Monte Blue to Play in "The Kentuckians"

Monte Blue, who played the leading male role in George Melford's production of "The Jucklins," which has just been completed at the Lasky studio, comes to New York this week to play the lead in Charles Maigne's next production for Paramount, "The Kentuckians," by John Fox, Jr. Work on this production will be started in a week or two.

Albert W. Hale Starts Production in West

Albert W. Hale has been engaged by Dr. J. E. Maple, general manager of the Northwestern Film Corporation, to direct a screen production based on a story now being completed by Carolyn Lockhart. The first scenes for the picture are being taken in the mountainous country adjacent to Dayton, Wyoming. Mr. Hale arrived in Sheridan, Wyoming, early last week and has been busy during the past week preparing for work on the new production.

Bessie Love Arrives on Coast; Vacation Ended

Letters have been received in New York from Bessie Love, telling of the arrival in California of the Callaghan star and her mother, after their four weeks' sojourn in New York. On the way back the two stopped at Niagara Falls for a day.

Bennett Moves Office to Yonkers, N. Y.

Mr. Whitman Bennett announces the removal of his executive offices from 140 West 42nd street, New York City, to the studio at 537 Riverdale avenue, Yonkers, where proper facilities for the transaction of all business have now been installed.

In order to accommodate business acquaintances in New York City, Mr. Bennett has arranged to be at the office of his agent, Mr. Lawrence Giffen, each Wednesday at 12 o'clock. Mr. Giffen's office is at 1402 Broadway.

Samuel Merwin Likes Treatment of Story

Samuel Merwin, author, whose "The Passionate Pilgrim" has just been completed for the screen by Robert G. Vignola as his second special production for Cosmopolitan-Paramount was Director Vignola's guest last week at a private showing of the picture. Mr. Merwin expressed himself as completely satisfied and surprised with the result. Writing from his Massachusetts home after the showing, Mr. Merwin said:

"You did a fine piece of work with 'The Passionate Pilgrim,' and I want you to feel that, at least, you have pleased the author."

Stewart to Make New Kind of Western

The West minus the traditional gun-fight, low-catering dance hall and hard-riding sheriff is to be presented by Roy Stewart in a series of features, the production of which starts this month under the sponsorship of Robert Brunton. In his new pictures Mr. Stewart, it is stated, will demonstrate that he can handle himself as well in evening clothes as in the chaps of the cow-puncher.

Mabel Normand Starts East for Rest

Mabel Normand has finished her new picture, "Head Over Heels," produced under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, and based on Mitzi Hajos' successful stellar vehicle on the legitimate stage a few years ago. Miss Normand is due to arrive in New York shortly for several weeks vacation.

Predict Success for "Kismet"

Robertson-Cole Sure Otis Skinner Picture Will Win

"KISMET," Robertson-Cole's forthcoming production, is described by the producers as a screen production which brings also is it true of the unusual quality. Not only is it true regarding the merit of the play and the star, but also is it true of the unusual quality of the production itself, a production in which neither time, money or brains has been spared to make it a literal triumph of the modern motion picture supreme.

Exhibitors, therefore, it is believed, will receive with interest the information that the screen adaptation of the famous play with Otis Skinner, the foremost romantic actor on the American stage today, in the leading role through which he made the stage play the dramatic wonder success it was, is nearing completion in California. Robertson-Cole will release it in October as another of the super-special attractions to which this distributing organization is now giving exclusive attention.

Mr. Skinner agreed with the press, which declared "Kismet" to be the crowning success of his career, and chose for his initial ap-

Otis Skinner in his world famous characterization in "Kismet," a forthcoming Robertson-Cole special pearance before the camera the role which has added more laurels to his name than any other. It is interesting to note that Mr. Skinner has announced he will never again play "Kismet" after having his work in the drama immortalized through the medium of the screen.

Backed by large capital and directed with minute care by Gasnier, "Kismet" is regarded as a finished product, and is expected to fire the imagination and thrill the blasé movie "fan" into a realization of the endless possibilities of the screen as the newest expression of dramatic art. And this fact, coupled with Mr. Skinner's popularity, won through years of work on the legitimate stage, should spell success for this picture.

And according to the reports from the coast which have reached the home office of Robertson-Cole, Mr. Skinner is putting into "Kismet" every ounce of the ability which won him a distinguished place in American drama. Gasnier, his director, is "enthusiastic" over the easy manner in which Mr. Skinner has adapted himself to the necessities of screen technique.

Since its initial announcement that it would release "Kismet" with Otis Skinner in the leading role, Robertson-Cole has received hundreds of letters from exhibitors, motion picture critics, literary workers and just plain "fans" asking eagerly as to the time of release, and for details of the production. This is taken as proof of the interest which the public has in Mr. Skinner and this role and as a prediction of its reception everywhere.

Strong Cast for Ibanez Film

THE all-star cast for the Metro production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" has been virtually completed after weeks of careful selection by Rex Ingram, who is to direct the picture, and June Mathis, who adapted it for the screen. According to present plans, filming will start next week at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, California.

The Metro announcement setting forth the names of the players who have been cast for this production read as follows:

Rudolph Valentino has been summoned from New York to play the part of the hero, the son of the rich South American, Julio Desnoyers, who develops into a tango king in Paris in the dance frenzy that preceded the opening of the war in 1914. Mr. Valentino was selected from Miss Mathis's recollection of his playing with Marjorie Rambeau in "The Eyes of Youth"; he realized her ideal of the youthful Julio—a poetic, dreamy Latin type of twenty-three years.

"Alice Terry, one of Metro's newest featured players, will have the role of Marguerite Laurier, the young wife who falls in love with the fascinating Julio. Miss Terry's youthful beauty and intense dramatic fire have won for her golden opinions, particularly in the new Metro production, 'Hearts Are Trumps.'

"The role of Madariago, the old landowner of the South American plains, whose primitive love affairs form some of the most memorable passages of the novel, falls to Pomeroy Cannon, whose big physique realizes the impression of brute strength that lies in the character. He was for years with Frohman and Belasco on the stage before going into pictures.

"Joseph Swickard has been engaged to play Marcelo Desnoyers, who brings the family from South America to France and is there caught in the maelstrom of war. Mr. Swickard formerly played in the Metro productions of 'Treasure of the Sea' and 'Making Good.'

"Brinsley Shaw, who was co-star with Margaret Wycherly in Australia in 'The Great Divide' and 'The Thirteenth Chair,' has been cast for Celendonio, the hanger-on at Julio's Paris apartment.

"Alan Hale, remembered on the New York stage for his work in 'Friendly Enemies,' and long a popular leading man on the screen, will play Karl Von Hartrott; Sturat Holmes, celebrated 'heavy' has been selected to play Captain Van Hartrott, and Prof. Von Hartrott, the representative of the German scientific idea as applied to war, will be played by Jean Hersholt, the Swedish actor.

"Mabel Van Buren, a popular leading woman in New York stock companies before starting her successful career in leading roles on the screen, has been cast for Elena, and Bridgetta Clark for the part of her sister, Dona Luisa.

"The Russian, Tchernoff, in whose vision the Four Horsemen are again unleashed upon the world at the start of the war, is to be played by Nigel De Brulier, and Smoke Turner will be seen as Argensola.

Laurier, the faithful husband makes his wife at last see the path of duty, will be played by John Sain Polis. Derrick Ghent has been cast for the youthful Rene Lacour, and Virginia Warwick will play the fiery young Chichi."

Will Rogers Company on Frisco Location

Will Rogers, his director, Clarence G. Badger, and a company of twenty-five players left on Friday of last week for San Francisco where three weeks will be spent in making scenes for the star's next picture, "The Guile of Woman," based upon a story by Peter Clarke McFarlane.

Train Scenes Featured in "Blackmail"

One of the striking scenes in Metro's forthcoming production, "Blackmail," starring Viola Dana, is the interior of a New York-to-Chicago flyer. In the filming of this scene recently, a special motor-generator outfit and lighting equipment was installed in a line of coaches, and after the action started under the direction of Dallas M. Fitzgerald more than one-hundred persons, according to Metro, participated in the scenes that were taken.

Wm. Farnum on Broadway Tucker Picture Soon Ready

"If I Were King" With Fox Star
Playing in New York Theatre

WILLIAM FARNUM returned to Broadway in the William Fox special production of Justin Huntly McCarthy's stage play and novel "If I Were King," which opened at the Lyric theatre, West 42nd street, on Monday, August 9th.

Last season Mr. Farnum held the stage of the Central theatre in the Zane Grey story, "The Last of the Duanes."

"If I Were King" is an adaptation of a play made famous by E. H. Southern and of a novel that has been widely read. The role of Francois Villon is said to fit Farnum like a glove. The cast supporting Mr. Farnum includes some of the best known among screen artists, chief among these is Fritz Leiber, of Shakespearean fame, who enacts the role of Louis XI with ability. Betty Ross Clarke appears as Katherine, originally played by Cecelia Loftus in the stage version and brings to the part an irresistible charm. Others who will be favorably remembered are Walter Law as Thibault, Claude Payton as Montigny, and Renita Johnston as Hugette.

J. Gordon Edwards has handled the direction with infinite care, adding many touches to heighten the color and to make this the crowning achievement of his career.

Woody Finds Prosperity

Realart Manager Finds Middle West Does Big Summer Business

EXHIBITORS throughout the Middle West are enjoying the most prosperous summer season ever known in the business, according to J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, who returned recently from an extended trip that carried him to the leading exchange centers of Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha. Mr. Woody made the trip to inspect the Realart offices in these cities.

Mr. Woody made Chicago his first stop on the trip. Prevailing cool weather there had been accountable for the exceptional business reported by exhibitors. He was informed that every house in the city had reached a new high mark for summer business and that exhibitors were in the midst of a prosperity wholly unexpected and unprecedented.

During his stay there Mr. Woody met a large number of exhibitors in Chicago and surrounding cities. He held important conferences with Harry Lubliner of Lubliner and Trintz, Max Ascher of Ascher Brothers, Sam Katz of Balaban and Katz and William Dineen of the Moir Theatrical Enterprises. All stated that the summer business was a record breaker from every angle and that next year would undoubtedly eclipse anything the motion picture industry had ever known.

"Dynamite" is Second Episode of Serial

Though singled out by the critics as a refreshing novelty because of the rich vein of humor running through its plot, "Pirate Gold," which is Pathe's newest serial, is not devoid of the thrills that have made the serial one of the photoplay's most popular forms. Thrill action has its place even in such a rollicking sort of play. "Dynamite" is the title of the second episode.

Goldwyn, Ltd. Progresses

Distributing Company for Great Britain Working Up Big Business

THE service that Goldwyn Limited, distributors of Goldwyn Pictures in Great Britain, is giving to the British exhibitors has brought a stream of fine business into the offices of the recently organized concern, says a statement from Goldwyn's New York headquarters. A message received by the Goldwyn offices in New York from Charles Tapworth, secretary and manager of promotion of Goldwyn, Limited, states that at the first staff dinner and convention just held in London the reports of sales made justified the highest hopes of the business that awaits Goldwyn products in the British Isles.

The new company is well established in its new offices at 35-36 Little Newport Street, W. C. 2, the centre of the film district in Soho.

A. George Smith has been appointed managing-director with Mr. Lapworth as secretary and publicity director. Four trade showings have been held, and the resulting business up and down the country by the various territorial exchanges has greatly exceeded the sanguine expectations of the Goldwyn Limited officials.

The sales personnel, with Percy Paphal as sales-manager and F. A. Enders as supervisor, is stated to be made up of some of the best known and keenest men in the British film industry. They have gone after the business, and by showing the exhibitors the high quality of pictures and of service which Goldwyn Limited can supply to them these men have put the organization on a firm footing.

"Ladies Must Live" to Be Paramount Picture; No Date Named

ALTHOUGH secrecy is being maintained regarding the activities of George Loane Tucker, word from the West Coast indicates that this cinema master is progressing rapidly with the cutting on "Ladies Must Live," and it is intimated that the print may be ready for shipment to Mayflower's New York office within the next fortnight.

Speculation has been rife in the trade as to who will release the second Tucker offering. Many exhibitors are laboring under the impression that this feature will be handled by First National along with the other Mayflower presented pictures which Associated First National recently contracted to distribute.

To set at rest all rumors concerning the handling of the Tucker productions, Mayflower announced late this week, that because of a previous contract, all of Tucker's films would be handled through Paramount, who released "The Miracle Man."

Through a cooperative arrangement between Mayflower and the Paramount organization, the widest sort of publicity and advertising will be accorded the Tucker productions. John W. McKay, Mayflower's general manager, called in his "Flying Squadron" of exploitation men and conferences are now being field with the idea of working out special campaigns calculated to boost receipts for exhibitors. As yet no release date for "Ladies Must Live" has been marked down on Mayflower's schedule.

Fox Has A Large Art Insert

Forty Pages in National Trade
Journals Announce 273 Pictures

THE largest art insert ever published in the history of the motion picture industry is claimed by William Fox in announcing his "success and profit" season of 1920-1921 for motion picture exhibitors throughout the world. This art insert covers forty pages and will be read by exhibitors in the pages of the national trade organs.

The forty pages tell of the output that will be released during the coming season. This is said to be the greatest output ever planned by any picture organization in the world, consisting of 273 Fox Enterprises, which include super-productions, special features, star series, 26 Twentieth Century Brand productions, a six-reel special Fox Sunshine Comedy, a series of Fox Sunshine comedies presenting the famous Clyde Cook. The general

Fox Sunshine comedies, Mutt and Jeff, Fox News, and the big serial "Bride 13," in making which the United States Navy took an active part.

This splendid output is claimed as a credit to the industry, and more than proves Mr. Fox's contention that the coming year will be the largest the industry has experienced. Believing this, and believing also in the more distant future, he has given the exhibitors of the world a notable list of showmen's pictures.

"Fox Film Corporation," reads the opening announcement, "enters upon its seventh season with the emphatic statement that greater productions and bigger profits are coming to the exhibitors who are users of its pictures during the season of 1920-1921."

Keep your eye on Mr. Seitz!

Only about a year ago Pathé introduced Mr. Seitz as a serial star. He had written and directed many of Pathé's greatest serial successes but as an actor he was new and unproven.

Mr. Seitz made good, with a bang!

"Who is this fellow Seitz?" wrote the exhibitors. "He's great. He's got our people asking for him. He does better stunts than ----- He's got a better personality. He's there!"

Mr. Seitz is there.

Keep your eye on him. Watch him in this adventurous, dashing and fascinating serial. You'll spot him as a man bound to make a great big mark.

WARNER BEFORE DAWN

you find reviewer praise

From the book by Mansfield Scott
Directed by Henry King

From Evening Sun, July 12, 1920

Mr. Warner is one of our best screen actors. He has carried much of the whimsical charm and suavity of manner which he employed so successfully on the stage to his screen work. In his latest picture he has a mystery story to deal with, and handles it in his usual clever manner.

The development of the plot concerns the search for a murderer. Warner in the role of a man who has been commanded while in the hypnotic state to kill the murdered man is the suspect.

The film finds Warner at his best and is excellent entertainment.

From N. Y. Tribune, July 12, 1920

"ONE HOUR BEFORE DAWN" IS STRONG
PICTURE, WITH H. B. WARNER
AT HIS BEST

Only a superficial analysis is needed to determine the ingredients that have been used to make "ONE HOUR BEFORE DAWN," in which H. B. Warner is starring at the Capitol Theatre this week, a picture which thrills and interests. The film physician probably prescribed as follows: large dose of hypnotic suggestion, the triangle, one woman and two men this time, dinner party of the upper set, mystery murder, skillful detective work, and the clearing of the hero after all the evidence at hand points to him as the murderer.

A less experienced actor than H. B. Warner might easily have overacted the role of George Clayton. It is a full and difficult role and Mr. Warner's work—especially his facial expressions—is good. Anna Q. Nilsson also plays well.

From Evening Mail, July 12, 1920

"ONE HOUR BEFORE DAWN," the feature at the Capitol this week, is a drama of the intense variety which one expects when H. B. Warner is cast for the leading role. The swiftly moving, absorbing story is played by the entire cast with a zeal that leaves no dull moments from beginning to end.

H. B. Warner, as George Clayton, the author, scores a real success. It is in the drama that demands the expression of vital personal power that Warner is at his best and "ONE HOUR BEFORE DAWN" offers him an ideal vehicle.

"ONE HOUR BEFORE DAWN" has a psychic background with the saving grace of plausibility. The cast supporting Mr. Warner is excellent, including Anna Q. Nilsson, Augustus Phillips, Howard Davies and Lillian Rich.

From The Illustrated News, July 13, 1920

MURDER MYSTERY PUZZLES AUDIENCE AT CAPITOL

You know, when we received notice that the Capitol Theatre had scheduled a mystery yarn for this week's entertainment we had quite made up our minds that we were going to be bored, but were pleasurably surprised as we watched the unwinding of the plot of "ONE HOUR BEFORE DAWN."

Harrison Kirke was stabbed to death "ONE HOUR BEFORE DAWN," and George Clayton thinks that he committed the murder under hypnotic influence, having awakened from a nightmare in which he saw himself murder Kirke.

We can't tell the public anything about H. B. Warner that they don't know. Suffice it to say that there couldn't be a better choice for the sort of picture "ONE HOUR BEFORE DAWN" is.

From Evening Telegram, July 12, 1920

One of the best all-around bills yet offered the Capitol clientele was shown at the popular playhouse yesterday. The sterling legitimate actor, H. B. Warner, was the bright particular star in a tense detective drama entitled "ONE HOUR BEFORE DAWN." The story is a film version of the novel of Mansfield Scott entitled "Behind Red Curtains," and from the very first moment the reel starts unwinding it grips with a grip of steel. . . . The star is fortunate in having one of those parts particularly suited to his style, and his support is excellent throughout the entire length of the reel.

Claire Whitney Cast in Important Role

Claire Whitney has been engaged by Metro Pictures Corporation to enact the highly important role of Jane Reynolds in the picture-production of Eugene Walter's stage drama, "Fine Feathers." Coincident with the issuance of information regarding the engagement of Miss Whitney Metro made known the fact that June Elvidge also has been added to the all-star cast which will enact the play, and which already includes, besides the two actresses just mentioned, Eugene Pallette.

Both Maxwell Karger, director general of Metro, and Eugene Walter, author of the play and one of Metro's staff of playwrights, regard the most difficult problem of casting "Fine Feathers" solved by the signing of Claire Whitney and June Elvidge. For the part of Jane Reynolds, to be acted by Miss Whitney, Director General Karger had made more than twenty screen test of well-known screen actresses, it is stated.

Eminent Authors' Features on Schedule

The next two Eminent Authors' Productions to be released by Goldwyn and Rex Beach are by two of the most widely read of American novelists—Basil King and Gouverneur Morris. One of the productions is Basil King's story of mortal and immortal life, "Earthbound," which on Wednesday, August 11, was offered by Goldwyn at the Astor Theatre, New York and at the Playhouse, Chicago.

The second, Gouverneur Morris' novel of San Francisco's famed Barbary Coast, "The Penalty," will receive its pre-release showing at the Capitol Theatre.

Clyde Cook Coming in Sunshine Comedy

After having built up the reputation on the vaudeville stages of London, Paris, Australia and America, Clyde Cook is to make his debut as a star of Fox Sunshine Comedies. "Kiss Me Quick" is the title of Mr. Cook's opening comedy.

"Earthbound" Receives Praise

GOLDWYN announces that it is the recipient of the most unusual telegrams of praise from such authorities as George Loane Tucker, Maurice Tournier, Gertrude Atherton, and Gouverneur Morris commenting on Basil King's "Earthbound," produced by Goldwyn. One telegram read "Dignity, power, passion, drama. . . No great work of art has ever held me more spellbound."

George Loane Tucker wired as follows: "Have just attended a review of 'Earthbound.' You have done the right thing in producing such a picture. There is a message in 'Earthbound' that the wide world is greatly and deeply interested in. It is difficult to find words with which to congratulate you on the far-sighted courage that must have been necessary before you undertook this costly and difficult production, and also for the exquisite care with which it has been produced. I sincerely hope that everyone who liked my production of 'The Miracle Man' will go to see 'Earthbound.'"

Maurice Tournier, who also stands in the front rank of his profession, telegraphed: "Have just attended the review of Basil King's 'Earthbound' and want to sincerely congratulate you on what I consider an artistic triumph in the presentation of the most interesting subject that has ever been screened. The production of 'Earthbound' makes a distinct advance in the art of motion pictures."

Gertrude Atherton, whose success as an author for the screen promises to duplicate her success as a novelist, wired: "I dislike so the roughly uplift and religious matters being brought into fiction that I never go to see plays or read books of which either is the theme. I went to see 'Earthbound' prepared to be bored or disgusted, but as a matter of fact I was enthralled, not only because the story itself is intensely interesting, but because it is unique. Nothing of the kind has ever been done and you have a unique idea presented with the most perfect artistry. I am positive that as this play combines a fascinating story, originality and unusual beauty of production,

Authors and Producers Comment on Goldwyn Picture

'Earthbound' cannot fail to attract not only one public but all publics. I thought that your idea of raising the standard of pictures by the co-operation of authors was perhaps a little altruistic, as the novelists talent is so entirely different from the more modern kind in the motion picture writer's brain. But your great idea is certainly justified in 'Earthbound.'"

Gouverneur Morris telegraphed:

"That astounding drama which yesterday passed with unutterable dignity before our astounded eyes!"

In keeping with the unusual character and importance of the photodrama, Goldwyn sought new channels for its first public presentation. A legitimate theatre was engaged in our two largest cities—the Astor in New York and the Playhouse in Chicago—where indefinite runs of the picture started on Wednesday, August 11. An invitation presentation was made on Tuesday evening attended by men and women eminent in the fields of art, literature, the stage and motion pictures.

Salesgirl Beauty Is Found

Mayflower to Select Winner of 10,000 Entrants for Walsh Film

ANNOUCEMENT has just been made by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation that the "National Sales Girls' Beauty Contest" which this organization has been conducting through the Newspaper Enterprise Association in fifty cities throughout the United States, will come to a close the latter part of this week. The winner will probably be announced early next week. This contest, arranged by Mark Larkin, publicity director for Mayflower, has attracted attention for two months. It is estimated that ten thousand sales girls entered from every branch of the merchandising business.

The purpose of the contest was to find the most beautiful sales girl in the United States. This was accomplished by having papers served by the Newspaper Enterprise Association discover the most beautiful sales girl in each of the important cities. Photographs of the winners from the various cities were then judged in New York City by a national committee made up of Neysa McMein, artist; Alfred Cheney Johnston, photographer; Florenz Ziegfeld, connoisseur of feminine beauty; James Quirk, editor of Photoplay, and R. A. Walsh. The girl winning the title of

"Most beautiful sales girl in America" will be brought to New York City, chaperoned by her mother, by Mayflower, and given six weeks' work in an R. A. Walsh production. Following her film engagement, she will then be given six weeks in one of the Ziegfeld shows, probably "The Follies."

Vitagraph is Filming "Black Beauty"

"Black Beauty," the famous classic known to readers in every civilized language, is being filmed by Vitagraph, according to an announcement this week by Albert E. Smith, president of that company.

David Smith, whose artistry in his powerful production of James Oliver Curwood's novel, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," established him among the leaders in his profession, is directing Anne Sewell's appealing story. A period of about four weeks was occupied with the animal continuity with which the picture opens and closes—Black Beauty's life story as told by himself. In the midst of this autobiography of a horse, the simple, homely characters of the English countryside, described in the book, are introduced.

Lloyd Praised at Review

Los Angeles Public Are Shown Star in "Get Out and Get Under"

FOLLOWING out a custom established with the first of the two-reel series, Hal E. Roach, producer of the Harold Lloyd comedy specials, recently gave a preview showing of "Get Out and Get Under" in a theatre near Los Angeles. This is the second of the new series of Lloyd specials, which are being distributed by Pathe. Mr. Roach selected a regular audience with which to try out the new Lloyd laughterbolt, and the reception it won rivalled that given "High and Dizzy" when it was first shown in Pasadena. The producer's theory is to exhibit each new Lloyd feature before an audience that is natural—not a hypocritical gathering of judges or studio employees.

When "High and Dizzy" was shown for the first time, it was found that too much footage followed the great climax, where Lloyd almost falls off the ledge of the hotel. The finish did not get the laughs it would have commanded without such uproarious and thrilling preceding incidents. Consequently Mr. Roach forestalled any lagging at the finish, by cutting the action and snapping up the closing scenes with the result that "High and Dizzy" was a veritable "knockout."

According to the information reaching the Pathe Home Office "Get Out and Get Under" was found practically faultless at its preview showing. Laugh followed laugh in such volume as to leave no doubt, according to the West Coast message, that the new comedy special will be proclaimed the finest Lloyd picture to date.

Fast Work at Metro Plant

Three Specials Have Been Turned Out Since New York Studio Opened

THE results realized at Metro's Sixty-first Street studios in New York since their opening approximately three months ago and the part that Maxwell Karger, director-general has taken in the developments are emphasized in a statement just issued from the New York offices of the Metro Pictures Corporation. The statement follows:

"Despite the obstacle of generating momentum, of overcoming the inertia of a new production unit; and despite unremitting attention to every detail which would make for artistically satisfying photoplay, Metro's director-general has in the brief space of time since May supervised, until completion, three all-star features: 'Love Honor and Obey,' 'The Marriages of Mayfair' and 'Clothes.' Since the last camera 'shots' of these were taken and the cutting and assembling done, Mr. Karger has driven well into the task of three other productions no less ambitious: 'The Misleading Lady,' starring Bert Lytell; 'Fine Feathers,' an all-star screen production of Eugene Walter's powerful stage drama; and 'Polly With A Past,' which brings the Belasco theatrical star, Ina Claire, before the camera in a role she made famous before the footlights.

"When Maxwell Karger came from the West Coast to superintend all Metro pictures made in the East it was expected that on account of the job of putting the studio in running order he would not find time to do more than lend a helping hand in this or that picture when individual directors found themselves confronted with an unusually knotty scene."

Tradition in the Discard

By J. S. Dickerson

ANOTHER step upward toward the goal the motion-picture will eventually achieve, that of being the greatest of educators and providing the most comprehensive medium of expression, has been accomplished.

A recognized director has brought forth a picture which forsakes tradition almost entirely, eliminates the youthful romance, has no hero character such as we have insisted all photoplays must possess, no sweet young thing to be wooed and won, no deep dyed villain, no intricate carefully builded plot, and substitutes for all these one time motion picture virtues, a character study story of no particular value dramatically but rich in its incident and truthful in its delineation.

A distributor famous for its ability to pick box office attractions is presenting the feature without apologies and with perfect confidence that it will meet with success.

We refer to King Vidor's "The Jack Knife Man."

To discuss the merits of the production would be to write a review. To dilate upon the feature's importance as a production in so far as it departs from tradition is a duty.

There is no reason in the world why a motion picture should be arbitrarily confined or made subsidiary to the eternal love story. There is no reason why the motion picture should not have as wide a field of endeavor as fiction. Our greatest stories are character studies quite often with no hint of romance. Our greatest plays, most of them, have followed along the same lines. Why should the photoplay be limited in its scope? Tradition and no other reason. A tradition that should have been outlived long ago. A tradition that had its foundation with the opinions and wishes of the old-time picture fan who for the most part long since ceased to exist.

There is more than an acknowledgment of the discovery that the picture public of today does not demand the time-worn eternal romance as the basis of its motion picture fare to be reckoned with in a discussion of this subject. There is the definite knowledge that this public is positively demanding something new in the way of picture stories. How then is the something new to be provided if writers and directors are to be confined to the narrow lines laid down by tradition? What sort of fiction would authors turn out who were thus handicapped? The ancient Greeks had certain definite rules by which their drama must be constructed. What sort of plays would our present day dramatists bring forth if they were compelled to abide by an arbitrary decision as to what could and what could not go to make up a play?

There are still other thoughts to be considered in a discussion of Mr. Vidor's picture and others like it. One is the particular problem of the exhibitor. When the producer departs from tradition and makes a picture like "The Jack Knife Man" in the hope of broadening the scope of the photoplay, is it not the duty of the exhibitor to do his share by making an extra effort to carry that production to success, even if he may still feel that his personal interests for the immediate future lie in letting some one else be the pathfinder and moulder of public opinion?

We have been told innumerable times by the foremost exhibitors of the country that their greatest problem today is securing good pictures, pictures that are different, pictures that have something new in them.

There is just one way to remedy the faults that are being found in our productions, and that is to go into new fields for material from which to make them. There is just one way that producers can be expected to be induced to make such pictures, and that is for the exhibitors to play them.

Before the public as a whole decides that it entirely approves of stories like "The Jack Knife Man," the exhibitor may be compelled to do some missionary work. It may take a little time, possibly mean the loss of some profits that could have been made by substituting a production with a popular star in a traditional vehicle, and some hard work in the way of exploitation. But in the end everyone is going to be benefited.

Thirty years ago popular fiction was written pretty much along narrow lines as we have been using for picture production. Masterpieces like Irvin S. Cobb's "Judge Priest" stories and Octavus Roy Cohen's character sketches of the Southern negro were unheard of. May the time soon come when the "Judge Priest's" and the "Pop Eyed Parson's" will be considered legitimate leading characters for picture purposes. Then and only then will the motion picture come into its own.

Paul Chase Goes from Hallmark to Stoll

Announcement is made of the resignation of Paul A. Chase as the assistant-treasurer and comptroller of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation. The resignation became effective on August 5th, but he will continue to give Hallmark some of his time until his successor is named. The reason for Mr. Chase's resignation is his engagement by the Stoll Films, Ltd., of London, which is contemplating an extensive distributing program for the United States and Canada. Mr. Chase's association with Stoll Films, Ltd., will not require his departure from America.

Vola Vale to Appear in New Metro Picture

Vola Vale will enact one of the featured roles in Metro's forthcoming all-star production of "Someone in the House," which John E. Ince is directing at the company's west coast studios in Hollywood. Miss Vale signed her contract the other day.

Jury to Select Titles for Walsh Pictures

Recognizing the title as one of the most important factors in the exploitation of a picture, R. A. Walsh, whose productions are presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, has inaugurated a system whereby the selection of a name for his future offerings will be made by a jury of six expert showmen. This innovation will be put into effect with Walsh's second independent subject which is now being filmed and which will be presented by Mayflower as a First National attraction.

"It will be the duty of the title jury," said Walsh, "to select for my productions titles best adapted to use in exploitation. It is my plan to show each production to the jury and have them submit a list of titles, which in their estimation not only fit the story but also lend themselves to unusual publicity campaigns. The titles submitted by the individual members of the jury will be put through the process of elimination, and one will be selected by a majority vote."

Exhibitors Laud Prints Done by Rothacker

The excellence of the laboratory work revealed in Norma Talmadge's latest starring vehicle, "Yes or No," has brought to the offices of the Rothacker Film Mfg. Company a number of letters from prominent exhibitors throughout the country, in which liberal praise is bestowed on the Rothacker Company for its part in enhancing the studio values of the production. The following letter from Floyd Brown of Indianapolis is typical of the other commendatory epistles received:

"An agreeable surprise awaits those who have not yet viewed 'Yes or No.' The excellent studio work has been greatly enhanced by the Rothacker laboratory work."

A number of other releases besides the "Yes and No" come in for special praise on the character of the laboratory work done on them.

Walsh Picture to Be Finished Soon

Work is progressing rapidly on R. A. Walsh's second independent production to be presented by Mayflower as a First National attraction. If the present rate of progress is maintained, Walsh announced that all scenes will be finished within two weeks. In order to make time on this feature, the producer has been operating at two studios, the Biograph studio in New York City and the Paragon studio in Fort Lee, New Jersey.

After the scenes have been completed, the producer expects to spend at least two weeks cutting and titling, thus bringing the production up to its maximum of dramatic value. As yet, Walsh has not given a name to this picture.

Pathe News Has Polish Pictures

"Red" War Scenes to Be Shows in News Reel

WHILE newspapers throughout the country are devoting columns to the Polish debacle in the war waged with the Russian Bolsheviks, the Pathe News claims another triumph by obtaining motion pictures of the scenes attending the new European warfare. Through M. Georges Ercole, the French cinematographer, Pathe News has obtained a series of pictures on the new "front." The first of the series is contained in Pathe News No. 63.

Ercole has been with the Polish army since it started its march of triumph to Moscow, and is still with it while the Reds are driving toward Warsaw. During the great war, Mr. Ercole travelled over virtually every foot of the country where the Reds and Poles are waging their fight. Early in the war he was designated by the Czar to accompany one of the main Russian armies to photograph its progress, for publicity purposes. He was wounded several times and for his "notably meritorious service" was decorated with the Cross of St. George.

Despite the reputation of the PATHE NEWS cameraman, it was only with difficulty that he received a permit to accompany the Polish troops. After several weeks endeavor, he was permitted to move up to the front line, and is said to be the only photographer to get this permission.

The pictures of the Polish-Bolshevik War are published by PATHE NEWS following a series of other big events covered first by this organization, according to reports. It is only a few weeks ago that the PATHE NEWS presented the first news reel pictures of the Mexican revolution. These followed a series of national and international events, which were given to the screen by PATHE NEWS. Among these were the German revolution; the occupation of Fiume by D'Annunzio; the French invasion of Frankfurt; the San Remo Conference, and a number of other events of similar magnitude.

Ercole has been engaged in war cinematography since 1914. Pathe sent him to Belgium when the war began, and he was at Mons when the Old Contemptibles made their great stand. In those days Kitchener was the man at the wheel and he thought the proper place for war correspondents and all their tribe was anywhere but the front. They did not want films then, and none of the Belgian pictures saw the light.

Other ideas prevailed in St.

Petersburg, as it was then when the Russian Government asked Messrs. Pathe Freres for a cinematograph operator they despatched Mr. Ercole. He was first sent down to Przemyśl and during the siege he filmed war in many respects. Then the steam roller rolled forward to Tarnow when it was almost within sight of Germany, and this was the high-water mark of the advance. He was wounded here as the result of an explosion of a 42-centimetre shell which dropped a piece of wood on his shoulder. A second wound was sustained at Vladova during the great retreat which ended at Brestlitovsk.

He was commissioned to join the Black Sea Fleet and he filmed the bombardment of the Bosphorus Forts. Another adventure of great interest was his march with the army of the Caucasus to Trebizond.

Read's New Picture Praised

HIGH tribute has been paid J. Parker Read, Jr., by his fellow producers in the "Big Seven" in the announcement just made by President Oscar A. Price and General Manager Fred B. Warren of the distributing organization that "The Leopard Woman," Read's initial Associate Producers' offering would be the first release of the new corporation.

September 12 has been set as release date for this Louise Glaum vehicle which bears the "personally supervised" stamp of J. Parker Read, Jr., and which probably will be published in seven reels.

"The Leopard Woman" is said to be Stewart Edward White's "pet novel." In the cast in support of Louise Glaum will be seen House Peters who is soon to launch his own producing company; Noble Johnson and several hundred Africans, Egyptians and others.

According to reports from the Coast, Hunter P. Lovelace, assistant to General Manager Fred B. Warren, viewed the "rushes" of "The Leopard Woman" which is drawing to the final stages of filming, and wired New York that he was confident that "The Leopard Woman" will make "screen history and prove a commercial and artistic success of the first water." Lovelace especially praised the settings and general mounting of the production.

Read already has been eight weeks making "The Leopard Woman" with Wesley Ruggles at the directorial helm. Charles J. Stumar has been at the head of the camera staff, with Doran Cox and Frank Gereghy, two well known directorial assistants, acting as aides to Ruggles.

Lovelace claims that "The Leopard Woman" will reveal Louise Glaum as the histrionic queen of the screen. "There has never been any doubt in the exhibitor mind," says Mr. Lovelace "of the ability of Louise Glaum to charm and fascinate her audiences, but in 'The Leopard Woman' she is so vivid, so chameleon-like in her moods, so compelling, that I am certain this piece of work will stamp her as the leading actress of the screen today. As an emotional artist I can think of no equal to her—she is the very incarnation of Stewart Edward White's heroine and J. Parker Read, Jr., has produced the story with a very fine regard for the original.

Although J. Parker Read, Jr., has not evidenced any desire to make public the cost of his initial Associated Producers' offering it is said that by completion the production will have cost him close to $200,000. Nearly 200,000 feet of film have been shot on the production, it is said, and the company of 125 spent a week on the desert beyond Palm Springs, California, in taking some scenes.

Charles J. Kyson and W. G. Heywood are responsible for the architectural work in the picture and these men together with Mr. Read's art title staff will be credited with their work on the screen.

Orchestra Missing in Flint Theatres

Orchestras are missing in all the larger Flint, Michigan theatres, including every picture house in the city which has employed union musicians. Theatre managers are unanimous in declaring they will not employ musicians for orchestras again at what they declare to be exorbitant rates.

Contracts between the musicians' union in Flint and all the theatre managers expired Saturday, July 31. Efforts had been made by the business agent and other representatives of the union to get the theatre managers to grant a new scale effective August 1 which would pay leaders $75 per week and side men $50 per week. The old scale was $35 and $37.50 for side men and $50 for leaders. The theatre men declare they did not feel that they could pay the big increases demanded and then have to pass them on to their patrons.

Neither the theatre owners nor the union men will admit that there is a strike. The theatre men simply say that the contracts expired and they refused to renege on the union men at the new scale.

Veiller Does Original Story for Metro

Bayard Veiller has completed his first original story for Metro. It is a melodrama and will be called "He Tried to Be King." Albert Shelby Le Vain is at present adapting it for the screen, and it will be filmed as an all-star production.

In addition to acting as director of the Metro West Coast production unit, Bayard Veiller is to write five original stories a year. The title of his second story will be "To Catch a Thief," which will be a drama of the underworld, while the third will be "Twice One is Two" which is a comedy.

Hodkinson Will Handle Hutton Productions

A statement from the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that F. Laws Hutton, who is interested in the picture-producing firm of Hutton & Frothingham, was in conference with Mr. Hodkinson on Friday, August 6. Mr. Hutton is quoted by the Hodkinson statement as saying that "all future productions in which he was interested would be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation." The firm of Hutton & Frothingham will release in the near future "The Broken Gate," starring Bessie Barriscale.

Chas. Miles Has First Run on "King Spruce"

Charles Miles, an exhibitor of Cleveland, has just placed a first-run contract on "King Spruce," a Dial Film production, starring Mitchell Lewis and released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"Madame X" Release Is Set

Listed on September Schedule; Has Pauline Frederick in Leading Role

Pauline Frederick, as she will look in "Madame X," presented by Goldwyn

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has named the coming months of September the "X" month. The reason for the appellation is the release during this month of "Madame X," Goldwyn's screen production based on Alexandre Bisson's celebrated emotional drama of the same name. Pauline Frederick plays the title role in the photoplay.

"Madame X" on the stage has proved to be one of the greatest sensations of the decade. With Sarah Bernhardt in the leading role its French version scored repeated success in Paris, London and on tour in the United States. In the English version, Dorothy Donnelly in the titular role gave the most remarkable performance of her career. With Pauline Frederick as the star of the screen production, the Goldwyn officials anticipate for the photoplay, "Madame X," a measure of success commensurate with that of the stage-play. The following statement has been issued from the Goldwyn offices in connection with their forthcoming release:

"The pictured version was directed by Frank Lloyd, one of the most imaginative, sensitive and skilled directors of the day. In the supporting cast are William Courtleigh, known for years to theatre-goers of the country as a thoroughly skilful artist, in the role of the husband; Casson Ferguson as the son who defends his unknown mother against the charge of murder; Hardee Kirkland as the family physician; Sydney Ainsworth as the murdered blackmailer; beautiful Corrae Kirkham as the son's fiancée; and Lionel Belmore and Willard Lewis as two Parisians who fatten on their knowledge of the skeletons in the family closets of the wealthy."

Canadian Exchanges Open

Educational Completes Details of New Canadian Distributing System

EDUCATIONAL Films Corporation announces that it has completed arrangements for establishing its exchange system throughout Canada. Offices will be opened in St. John, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver, the six distributing centers. From the beginning of its plans for the establishment of its own exchange system, Educational has planned to have its own branches throughout the Dominion, and for that reason it is said to have declined a number of financially flattering offers for the Canadian rights to its product.

A separate organization is now being formed to handle the Canadian distribution under the name of the Canadian Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. This organization expects to have its own offices opened in a few weeks, fully equipped with a supply of prints and a full line of accessories and exploitation aids.

In the control of the Canadian company, Educational will be associated with the Allen Theatrical Enterprises, the dominant exhibitor interests of the Dominion. According to the announced plans, there will be a thorough sales covering of Canada from each of the six offices. Physical distribution of pictures will be handled by the Monarch Film Company, a subsidiary of Allen Enterprises, which also has offices in the six cities mentioned.

Much of the product distributed by Educational has long been popular in Canada, states Educational's home office in New York. The Allens have controlled the Canadian rights to the Christie Comedies and Chester-Outing scenes for some time and have distributed Bruce Scenics Beautiful and other Educational releases.

Educational further reports that the trade-paper advertising has brought in scores of inquiries from Canadian exhibitors as to how the product might be obtained and that there are bright prospects for the Dominion organization starting off with a sales record. Arrangements for Canadian distribution were completed this week at a conference between E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., and Louis Rosenfeld, general sales manager for the Allen interests.

Pathe to Make Serial From Popular Novel

Pathe has acquired the motion picture rights to "The Fortieth Door," the novel by Mary Hastings Bradley, and will produce it as a fifteen episode serial starring Charles Hutchison. Contracts for the filming as a serial of this work of fiction were closed this week by Pathe with the author and Robert Brunton, who will produce "The Fortieth Door" at his Los Angeles studio.

Road Show to Exploit Its Productions

The Motion Picture Producing Company of America, Inc., which is making the King Cole Comedies and which controls the world rights to the "high speed" pictures made by the Stereospeed camera, has hit on a unique method of introducing its pictures to the movie fans about the country. A traveling road film company has been organized to visit all the large cities of the country. Theatres or halls are being engaged.

The traveling show is made up of King Cole Comedies and Stereospeed pictures. In addition there is a special lecturer who accompanies the show and an operator. No admission fee is charged anywhere, entrance to the theatre or hall being by invitation only. The invitations are to be so distributed as to secure as representative an audience as the city can offer.

Fox Film Has Birth Day on the Continent

Welcome to France and Belgium—continued success to the Fox Film company. Fox Film Societe Anonyme in Paris recently gave a dinner to celebrate the first anniversary of this offspring of the Fox Film Corporation of New York. The dinner came at the conclusion of the convention of the Fox French and Belgian branch managers held June 26, 27, 28 and 29. The guests of honor included Sir Charles Valadier, Pierre Veber, the distinguished French author and critic; Marcel Allain author of the "Fantomas" detective stories which Fox Film Corporation has purchased and which will be filmed shortly; the Duke of Richelieu and M. de Simone, director of "Scenario," the film magazine.

Edward Earle to Play Opposite Doraldina

Edward Earle, whose similarity to the common conception of the typical American has won him the sobriquet of "The O. Henry Man," has been chosen by the casting director of the Metro studios in Hollywood for the leading male role in the cast of Doraldina's forthcoming production, "The Passion Fruit," which has been made into screen drama from the story by Carey Wilson.

Russell-Grevier Form New Chicago Firm

Announcement is made of the formation of the company of Russell-Grevier-Russell, 8 South Dearborn street, Chicago, Illinois, for the purpose of acting as producers' agents in the marketing of motion picture film.

This company will act as representative of the Doubleday Production Company of Los Angeles, Cal., now making a single-reel comedy weekly known as the Tucson Comedy, and a two-reel western released bi-monthly. The United States territory on this commodity has been sold to the Capital Film Company of Chicago.

The Russell-Grevier-Russell will also produce, preparations now being under way for the production of a picture to be released via the state-right market.

Foreign Sales on Hall Room Boys Comedies

The Hall Room Boys Comedies, the series of which were recently acquired by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution covering a period of three years, have been disposed of in a number of choice territories, according to a statement issued the early part of the week by Gus Schlesinger, manager of the department of foreign film sales of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

Contracts just closed provide for the physical distribution of the entire first year's output throughout Great Britain and also the Japanese Empire. One of the largest film renters in South America has also bought the first year's output for distribution throughout Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay.

Japanese Star Visits Pauline Frederick

Masao Inoyue, a prominent actor of Japan, professor Hiyoishio Masumoto, studio master, and A. Susuki, New York representative of the International Motion Picture Company of Tokio, called upon Pauline Frederick, Robertson-Cole star, at her studio last week, bearing a message of the high regard in which she is held in the land of cherry blossoms.

Masao Inoyue made a brief speech, lauding the star and her work, and then presented her with a kimono of pastel colors, beautifully embroidered in gold and silver. Miss Frederick conducted the visitors on a three-hour tour of her studio.

Chester Conklin Signed by Special Pictures

Carrying on its policy of signing up nationally known stars and directors of the comedy field, the Special Pictures Corporation this week secured the signature of Chester Conklin to a long term contract, which carries with it a salary that it said, will make the former Mack Sennett star one of the highest paid mirth makers in the business. According to the contract the comedian agrees to deliver to Special Pictures Corporation twelve two reel comedy specials a year.

Activities of the Independents

STATE RIGHTS—EXPORT

Neal Hart Series Sell Fast

Seventy Percent of Territory Is Disposed of; Rest Going Quickly

SEVENTY per cent of the territory has already been sold on the Neal Hart Pinnacle productions, announces Eddy Eckals, general manager of the Independent Films Association, Chicago; and inquiries from unsold territories make immediate deals for them certain, it is stated.

E. J. Farrell signed for the entire Neal Hart series last week, which means that the Major Film Corporation of Boston, Mass., will handle the distribution of all Pinnacle productions for the New England States. Upper New York State has been closed with the Dooley Exchange, Inc., with exchanges in Syracuse and Buffalo. While Greater New York and Northern New Jersey goes to the Commonwealth Film Corporation of New York City.

The rights for Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia have been purchased by Abe Dresner of the Exhibitors Film Exchange, Washington, D. C. western Pennsylvania and West Virginia go to the S. & S. Film & Supply Co., of Pittsburgh Pa., the deal having been closed by Messrs. Sanial and Steinberg.

Dave Warner of the Warner Film Attractions, Cleveland, Ohio, will distribute all Pinnacle productions for Northern Ohio. The State of Michigan goes to Dave Mundstuck of the Strand Features Inc., Detroit.

The Iowa and Nebraska rights have been purchased by C. C. Bridwell of the Magnet Film Co., with exchanges in Davenport and Omaha. Al Kahn of the Crescent Film Co., Kansas City, is already exploiting these independent specials for Kansas and Western Missouri.

In the South, the entire series was purchased by the R. D. Lewis Film Co., Dallas, Texas. These rights include the states of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Concentrated distribution will be given the State of Tennessee and Southern Kentucky by general manager Abe Kaufman of Kaufman Specials at Memphis Tenn. The same may be said of Minneapolis, North and South Dakota, arrangements for this territory having been made with the Elliott Film Corporation, Minneapolis.

Woman Untamed Sold in New York State

Ben Fitner, exchangeman from Northern New York State has purchased Elmer J. McGovern's "The Woman Untamed" for that territory. Mr. Fitner is a new comer in the ranks of the independents and will open offices at Albany and Buffalo.

Reports Many Bids for "Whispering Devils"

Sam Zierler of the Commonwealth Film, who purchased the territorial rights on "Whispering Devils" from the Equity Pictures Corporation for New York and New Jersey, has decided not to open the picture for his territory before the fall. The reason for his delay, according to Equity, is that Mr. Zierler believes that this picture is of a calibre suitable to serve as a "season-opener." Other state right buyers who have closed with Equity for this production, are adopting the same policy, states Equity.

Bids on the open territory are coming in rapidly, but Equity prefers to wait and afford more buyers the opportunity of bidding. A statement from the Equity offices says that with the bids on hand it is in a position to dispose of all the rights with ease.

"Nobody's Girl" Will Be Issued Aug. 15

Federated Film Exchanges of America announces that "Nobody's Girl," starring Billie Rhodes, will be released at all Federated exchanges on August 15th. An excellent cast headed by Melbourne McDowell and Mary Alden supports Miss Rhodes. The taking of a robbers' rendezvous on a lonely island by revenue officers under the guidance of the heroine is said to make an unusually thrilling scene. Exceptional exploitation possibilities are claimed for the production. A sixteen-page press-book is available for users of the picture. Advertising aids, lithographs, slides, cuts and music cues are also available.

Screenplays Agent Goes to Eastern Asia

J. F. Newman has been appointed by the Screenplays Productions Inc., as its representative for eastern Asia. He will leave shortly to open an office at Shanghai. Mr. Newman, it is said, has been decorated by the Chinese government with the order of the "Literary Tiger" for his work in directing an army of Chinese coolies in the devastated regions of France.

Mr. Newman is already on his way to the Orient in the interests of Screenplays Productions Inc., which company is handling the Bryant Washburn independent features, the first of which Mr. Washburn is about to start work on in Europe. Mr. Newman's oriental field will cover China, Japan, Indo-China, the Philippines, Dutch East Indies, Straits Settlement and India.

Comic Strip Will Aid Neal Hart Series

In the exploitation of the Neal Hart series of Pinnacle Productions the Independent Films Association is putting out a cartoon comic strip along the "daffodil" type, which is said to be different.

The Neal Hart cartoon is by Joseph Fischer, whose comic strips have made many people laugh through the various newspaper syndicates throughout the country.

David Howells Leaves on European Trip

David P. Howells, International film distributor, of 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, will sail for Europe shortly on the steamer Kaiserin Augusta Victoria.

This is Mr. Howells' regular trip of inspection of his foreign offices, one of which is located in London and the other in Paris. He expects soon to establish another office which will take care of the business of all continental Europe and the near east. If time permits he will visit the continent and look over the situation in the Latin countries with special attention paid to Italy, Spain, and Portugal.

Joe Brandt Helps Cut Arrow Serial

Joe Brandt, eastern representative of the Berrilla Film Corporation, has arrived at the West Coast to supervise the cutting of the first five episodes of "Thunderbolt Jack," the new Arrow serial starring Jack Hoxie, now being produced by Berrilla. Mr. Brandt will also assist in writing the unfinished episodes of this serial, and arrange for the purchase and continuity of Jack Hoxie's next vehicle.

Federal Service Closes for Gumps' Cartoons

The Federal Service of Washington, D. C., has closed a contract for the Gumps' Cartoons for the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware and Virginia. M. J. Mintz of Celebrated Players, Chicago, which are the owners of these popular pictures, states that with the closing of this contract a hundred per cent distribution in the United States has been reached.

Harry Cohn En Route to Hollywood Studios

Harry Cohn, of Jack & Harry Cohn, producers of the Hallroom Boys Comedies, who has been East for the past two months, in conference with his brother regarding plans for 1921, left New York Saturday for the coast. He will stop off in Chicago and then proceed directly to the Hollywood studios.

Mason in Hemmer Cast

Stage Player Featured in Initial Production Released About Sept. 1

SIDNEY MASON, who played in "Stop Thief" on the legitimate stage and who has also appeared as a "heavy" and co-star in a number of screen productions, has joined the cast of the Hemmer Superior Productions, Inc.; of which Edward Hemmer is president and director. The initial production of the Hemmer Company has been completed and will be ready for release by September 1st. The picture is now in the cutting room where Elmer McGovern is taking charge of the editing of the production.

The following statement has been issued by the Hemmer Superior Productions regarding its initial release:

"Mr. Hemmer surrounded himself with an all-star cast for the first production, and so carefully has the play been whipped into shape that all identified with the picture, including not only the director, but also artists, technical men, stage and property hands expect that it will enjoy wide vogue.

While Mr. Mason is featured, Maud Sylvester, the new screen find of Mr. Hemmer, is cast in the ingenue lead, Henry Sedley, widely known star of both stage and screen, fills a prominent role. There are also scores of children, including three year old Peggie Parnel, baby vamp, and Milton Berlinger, 11 year old impersonator of Al Jolson, Flora Finch, whom it will be recalled starred some years ago with John Bunny, famous screen comedian of another day, will be seen in a human-interest role. Then there are also Mabel Wright, Bessie Stinson, Louis Arnold, Pete Raymond, veteran of the stage of twenty-eight years experience; Opie Reid, Margaret Beecher, granddaughter of Henry Ward Beecher; John Hanna and many others.

Equity's Press-Book on "Keep to the Right"

The Equity Pictures Corporation announces that it has available for distribution an elaborate press-book for its current offering to the state right trade, "Keep to the Right," starring Edith Taliaferro. The campaign is a twenty-two page publication containing reproductions of the cuts, mats and posters to be used in connection with this picture; press readers of varying lengths and subject-matter; publicity stories and catch lines. The feature of the exploitation suggestions is a tie-up with the local authorities in the matter of traffic regulations with "Keep to the Right" as the slogan.

"Fickle Women" Bought for Oklahoma

The D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., report the sale of state rights on "Fickle Women" for Oklahoma to Tucker Bros. of Oklahoma City. This is their first production and is to be released very shortly. They have also sold the southern rights to the Southern States Film Co.; New York State, New Jersey and Southern California to the First National Exchanges; Philadelphia to the Metro Exchange; New England to the Klein Distribution Co.; and the foreign rights to D. P. Howells.

Legend Film to Start Two-Reelers Soon

Triple Exposure Is Used

Revier Gets Over Delicate Idea in Filming "The Son of Tarzan"

BY triple-exposure alone, without a cutback or subtitle, Harry J. Revier, directing "The Son of Tarzan," feature serial at the studios of the National Film Corporation of America, at Hollywood, Cal., has overcome, single handed, one of the great difficulties of photoplay direction—the "planting" of a single inherited instinct around which the entire plot of "The Son of Tarzan" is constructed. So successfully did Mr. Revier handle the incident in the first episode where the boy son of Tarzan of the Apes suddenly is transformed from a studious and normal lad to a combative and jabbering half-beast seeking trouble, that Edgar Rice Burroughs, the author of "The Son of Tarzan" warmly congratulated the director when Mr. Burroughs witnessed the studio preview.

"By some miracle, Harry," exclaimed Mr. Burroughs, "you have recorded for all time an incident, or rather laid the ground work, for the rest of the serial in such a manner as to make it a pronounced success. With your camera and film you have succeeded in demonstrating young Tarzan's mental action in three days what it took me several weeks to construct in writing. I have never witnessed a situation as gripping and awe-inspiring as when Lord Greystoke's son, without warning, becomes so imbued with the jungle-lust that he undertakes to whip his tutor, twice his size."

Road Show as Exploitation

"Before the White Man Came" to Be Advertised by Real Indians

WHAT is expected to be an innovation in the manner of presenting a motion picture will be inaugurated when the Arrow release "Before the White Man Came" is shown in the New England territory, according to an announcement made this week from the Arrow offices.

Herman Hirsch, president of the Lightning Photoplays Company of Boston, was a visitor at the Arrow office during the latter part of last week and contracted for the rights to the all-Indian picture in the New England territory. He announced after viewing the picture that he would use it as a special road show and would take along a number of full-blooded Crow Indians for advertising and exploitation purposes. In statements issued before regarding this picture, Arrow has called attention to the fact that this is purely a showman's picture and that it should be handled accordingly. Given sufficient exploitation, the Arrow statement says, this picture should reap an unusual harvest for the exhibitor.

The press book on this picture is now ready and contains innumerable exploitation ideas of which, it is said, can be used effectively.

Doraldina Picture Sold to Signet Films

Elmer J. McGovern, who is presenting Doraldina in "The Woman Untamed," announces that New York City and Northern New Jersey territorial rights for "The Woman Untamed" have been sold to the Signet Films, Inc., of New York City.

Kremer Specializes on Exploitation

Special care is being taken by Victor Kremer, Inc., with the exploitation campaign for "Voices" presenting an all star cast composed of: Diana Allen, Gladys Coburn, Corliss Giles, Henry Sedley, for the reason that this is the first of the Kremer Company's special attractions.

The cry for more and better exploitation than has been reaching the industry for years and that has been the demand of State Right buyers and exhibitors, is said to be more than satisfied with the press book issued on "Voices."

Radin Back From Tour of Exchange Centers

Matthias Radin, head of Radin Pictures, has returned to New York after a tour of the principal exchange centers which he visited disposing of territorial rights on "Thru Eyes of Men," the Frank Mayo feature, "The Weakly Indigestion" series being produced by A. Lincoln Miller, the single reel "Zip Comedies," and the two-part "Real Star Dramas."

Standard Film to Advertise Heavily

The Standard Film Service Co. of Ohio, distributors in several Middle-Western states for Charles Urban's "Movie Chats," has written to the Kineto Company of America of their extensive plans for advertising this release in their Autumn campaign. Their plans include intensive circularization among the exhibitors in their territory besides heavy advertising campaigns in all the regional trade publications in the States they serve.

Foreign Rights Sold on Screen Snapshots

Jack Cohn, producer of Screen Snapshots, announces that he has just sold the foreign rights for this single reel, bi-monthly all-star feature, to David P. Howells, who will handle the international distribution of it. Mr. Cohn reports that Louis Lewyn, who is handling the Coast production end of Screen Snapshots, is shipping in a steady supply of very interesting and newsy material for this reel.

First Fox Serial Is Screened

A LARGE number of officers of the United States Navy and others prominent in the public life of the Nation, State and city attended a screening of "Bride 13," the first serial produced by William Fox, at the Palace theatre, New York, on August 3. It was fitting that in the audience was a large representation of Navy men, because the serial was made with the active co-operation of the Navy—an entire fleet of warships and aircraft having contributed to the action of the picture.

Fifty former members of the Army and Navy—employees of Fox Film Corporation and members of the S. Rankin Post of the American Legion—were at the theatre to meet the officers. An orchestra, under the direction of Louis Rubenstein, Fox musical director, played an especially prepared score for the picture. In the lobby of the Keith play-house were stationed two demure misses dressed as brides, with sashes bearing in gilt letters "Bride 13."

There were two outstanding points of interest regarding this screening. Primarily "Bride 13" being the first serial produced by William Fox, the guests were naturally eager to witness the effects of Mr. Fox's experience and success as a producer of feature pictures applied to what for him was an entirely new field. In the second place, for probably the first time, ships, officers and men of the Navy had taken active part in the filming of a serial picture.

Having in mind the motive that prompted the Navy Department in granting to Mr. Fox the opportunity of utilizing an entire fleet of war vessels—the wish to acquaint the American people with the peace-time pursuits of the service—the Navy officers were interested in the results. The fact that "Bride 13" met with the approval of officers of high rank was gratifying to the producer.

All in the audience were thrilled by the speedy action of the serial, by its hair-raising stunts and its desperate encounters. At the conclusion of the screening one heard it said many times that "there isn't a dull moment in it anywhere; every scene is full of speed and action."

A point that especially gratified the officers was the absolute fidelity to Naval procedure in all scenes in which the ships and Navy men appeared. The warships, aircraft and men that took part in the filming were under direct command of a Naval officer—Commander A. L. Bristol. Every move was in accordance with his orders after he had conferred with Director Richard Stanton as to the requirements of the scenario.

"Bride 13" discloses the sea forces of Uncle Sam in a role hitherto untouched on the screen. It is not a war picture; it does not concern disputes between nations. It does portray the Navy in the heroic role of a great rescuing force, protecting the shores of the United States against the depredations of a band of Tripolitan pirates that descends upon the coast, kidnaps thirteen wealthy brides and holds them for millions in ransom. The Navy is appealed to for help by the distracted families, and it gives aid with a generous hand.

Tribute was paid by the guests to the excellence of the performance by the leading woman, Marguerite Clayton; the leading man, John O'Brien, and the others conspicuous in the cast including Greta Hartman, Mary Christensen, William Lawrence, Lyster Chambers, Edward F. Roseman, Frank Beemish and Arthur Earle.

Victor Kremer Reveals His Plans

IN line with the recent statements made by Victor Kremer, president of Victor Kremer, Inc., further developments of the company's plans are fast taking shape. "Voices," the first big feature production, is selling fast and will be released in the New York territory by the Independent Master Films, Inc., on or about September 1st.

Another feature production starring a most famous actress, whose art, as well as personal beauty is proverbial, will be released on or about October 1st. Selling campaign for the second picture will be initiated before the end of this month.

The tone of determination in the statements made by Mr. Kremer in behalf of his company, since the early part of June, is the outstanding mark of said statements, and having contracted for large product of superior quality, Mr. Kremer is now preparing for a trip throughout the country not merely for the purpose of marketing present product but to make equitable arrangement for future distribution of his company's output. Mr. Kremer will leave no stone unturned to see to it that the product of his company shall be distributed from every State Right centre.

The courtesy and consideration reputed to be shown in all dealings of Mr. Kremer with the various exchanges that have released his reissues in the past, will stand in good stead in his aim to properly distribute the new product of the company, and he is said to be assured of a hearty welcome by the many who have been notified of his forthcoming momentous trip.

In his absence from New York, Curt Kremer, his only son, has been taken into the firm of Victor Kremer, Inc., where as treasurer and general supervisor, supported by a staff of experts, he quickly is accumulating the knowledge to act in Mr. Victor Kremer's behalf during his absence from headquarters.

Any exchange dealing with Victor Kremer, Inc., will, it is said, be able to depend upon regular output of at least eight big dramatic features, the same number of rip-roaring five reel Westerns, and a complete year's run of two reel comedies. All new stories, directors and stars are carefully selected so that the company's trade mark, "V. K. stands for O. K." will become a proverb in the industry.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

David Butler, starred in "Fickle Women" produced by D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc.

Urban Science Pictures to Get B'way Run

Charles Urban has just sent to the Rivoli theatre three more subjects from his Science Series. They will appear separately, in all probability, very shortly on the Rivoli or Rialto program.

The subjects, though educational in purpose, are said to be as interesting as those of a dramatic character. "Getting Close to the Spider," revealing the courtship of a spider; "The Bell Animalculas," a study in botany; and "The Germination of Plants," showing the possibilities of plant culture, are the titles of the pictures scheduled for the Rivoli or the Rialto.

Harry S. Stone Enters State Right Field

Harry S. Stone announces his resignation as general manager of the Photo Products Export Co., which position he has held since the formation of that company, four years ago. He will enter the state right and foreign field under the firm name of "Film Sales Company," with offices at 158-160 West 45th street. He has contracted for the release of the "Funful Comedies," featuring Billy Ruge and his "Bevy of Bathing Buds" on a state right basis.

C. B. C. Film Sales to Make Westerns

The C. B. C. Film Sales, in which Joe Brandt and Jack Cohn are associated, has undertaken to produce and distribute a series of twenty-six two-reel lively westerns but have not as yet announced with whom the deal has been closed. Mr. Brandt will make an extensive statement as soon as he is settled in his new quarters at the Berwillia studios.

Exploitation Aids Opening

"Stunts" Precede Showing of "Up in Mary's Attic" in Philadelphia

THE part that exploitation played in putting over "Up in Mary's Attic" at the Metropolitan Opera House in Philadelphia this week is described in detail in the course of a statement just issued by the Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., which is releasing this comedy-drama. The production is billed at the Metropolitan Opera House for an indefinite run. The statement from the Fine Arts offices follows:

"A week preceding the opening, Donn McElwaine, director of publicity for Fine Arts Pictures, who handled the national campaign and who had charge of the advertising and publicity for the New York premiere at the Broadway theatre, arranged for a complete exploitation and advertising campaign for the Philadelphia showing.

"By securing the cooperation of the United States Recruiting Service, McElwaine arranged for the use of half a dozen navy aeroplanes for exploitation purposes. On the day of the opening one of the planes, carrying one of the bathing girls from 'Up in Mary's Attic' flew over the city. As they passed over the main thoroughfares of the city, the girl in the plane dropped passes good only for the opening showing.

"And then came the real benefit of the stunt. Just as the crowd was about to break up a huge scenery truck with an attic on top with a sign calling attention to the showing at the Metropolitan Opera House was pulled down the street by the 'strong man' of the Navy who donated his services for the occasion.

"The Navy recruiting service further cooperated by donation of the services of its band to aid in exploiting the picture. Every day, about two hours preceding the time for the matinee opening, the band will march through the main streets of the city ahead of the scenery truck advertising the picture. In addition the band will march up the theatre just preceding time for the opening every evening."

"Bud" Duncan, of the "Ham and Bud" team, who is to appear in a new series for Reelcraft pictures

Duncan Returns to Screen

"Bud," of "Ham and Bud" Fame to Make One Reelers for Reelcraft

LITTLE "Bud" Duncan, the Bud of "Ham and Bud" fame is coming back to the screen, as a star for the Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, in a series of one reel comedies, to be known as "Bud and His Buddies." Needless to state that the "Buddies" will be mostly girls.

Bud Duncan first attained fame as an actor on the legitimate stage, and entered into picture prominence in 1914 when he joined "Ham" Hamilton, forming the comedy team of "Ham and Bud." That the combination was successful is best proven by the fact that they continued making comedies during 1914, 1915, 1916, and a part of 1917. It is claimed that these comedies have played in every country on the globe. In the United States, the old General Film Company booked the series into nearly every theatre in the United States at that time.

A "Bud Comedy Company" has been duly formed and organized, and the little comedian expects to leave New York about the end of August for Hollywood, where his representatives have already arranged a studio for his company. The producing staff is now being selected and will be ready to commence work on September first.

Reelcraft will give this new addition to its Exclusive Short Subject program an extensive advertising campaign in the national trade papers, and will have an extra number of advertising accessories.

Exporters Sell Film in Far East

The division of films of Bech, Van Siclen and Co., of New York, announce the sale of the Japanese rights of "Deliverance," "Trooper 44," "Atonement," "Dollars and Destiny," "An Adventuress," "Romance of the Underworld," "Twilight," "Wild Honey," "Hidden Code," "Calibre 38." They have sold for India "Dollars and Destiny," "Atonement," "Adeles," "Playthings of Passion," and "When Love Drives."

Copperhead Series Out About Aug. 15th

The Photo Products Export Co., of 220 West 42nd street, N. Y. C., who are marketing the copperhead series of dramas, give the approximate date of release as August 15th, when a sufficient number of pictures will be ready for shipment. There are to be twelve pictures in all; at present six of them are cut and titled.

"The Wrong Woman" at International

Ivan Abramson is at present producing "The Wrong Woman" at the International studios. Unusual elements of pathos and humor are said to be embodied in this new production. The all-star cast is headed by Montague Love and Olive Tell and also includes Regina Quinn, Guy Coombs, Jack Crosby and Wilfred Lytell.

Doraldina Picture is Impressionistic

There is said to be nothing of the overdrawn, sensational or lurid in the Doraldina picture, "The Woman Untamed" which is being distributed on the States Rights de-market by Elmer J. McGovern, despite the fact that it interprets the life, cruelties and savagery of cannibals.

The director is said to have portrayed the effect of superstition upon the savage mind admirably in one instance particularly. It will, it is said, leave a lasting impression upon all who view it.

Columnist Enters Movies

Pioneer to Release "Film-osophy" by Famous Luke McLuke in Sept.

THE "movies" have captured Luke McLuke, who, under this nom-de-plume, has for the past fifteen years conducted a humorous column in more than 250 daily newspapers throughout the United States and Canada. The Pioneer Film Corporation, through its general manager and vice president, M. H. Hoffman, has consummated arrangements with H. Serkovich, president of the McLuke Pictures Co., for the world rights of Luke McLuke's "Film-osophy."

J. S. Hastings is Luke's real name. He has been characterized as the dean of column conductors and Pioneer is confident of the success his feature will achieve. It was in commenting on the deal yesterday that Mr. Hoffman, speaking for Pioneer, said among other things that Luke McLuke's "Film-osophy" will fill a long felt want inasmuch as it guarantees nothing but laughs. "We're mighty enthusiastic over this Luke McLuke capture," said Mr. Hoffman. "His name is known where newspapers are read and his style of humor is unsurpassed."

Pioneer exchanges in twenty-three of the largest cities in this country, will distribute the Luke McLuke laugh-provoking velluoid next month to the exhibitors in their respective territories.

—Offered as the Highest Class
State Right Production on the Market

"WHISPERING DEVILS" written by Henry Arthur Jones and played by CONWAY TEARLE, Rosemary Theby and brilliant supporting cast is offered by EQUITY PICTURES CORPORATION as the highest class State Right production on the market.

Its highly dramatic elements register it as a vastly superior production to the usual so called State Right picture. The theme of the drama throws the opposing forces of Minister, young girl and married woman in the most tense and gripping situations ever portrayed on the screen, yet the story is fine, big, sweet and splendid.

A very special and unusually elaborate advertising campaign book with complete Exhibitors' materials is available. A complete list of exhibitors is forwarded to any State Right Buyer, Independent or Exhibitor, upon request. Communicate with us for terms, territories, prices. Quotations are subject to change without notice.

Sensational Posters for "Whispering Devils"

First of Monte Banks Series Ready Aug. 15

When the Board of Directors of the Federated Film Exchanges met in Pittsburgh last week they were given a private showing of the first five Monte Banks comedies, a new series of two-reel pictures made by Warner Brothers and released by Federated.

W. E. Shallenberger, general manager of the Federated, states that after seeing these comedies all of the members of the board of directors were most enthusiastic over them and felt that they had in the Monte Banks comedies a series that was the equal if not the superior of any comedy in the market.

Monte Banks' humor is clean cut and free from the usual "custard pie" type of slap stick, says Federated. The first comedy will be released August 15th, and prints are already at all Federated exchanges where they may be seen.

"Heritage" Selling on States Right Market

William L. Roubert of the Matty Roubert Productions, Inc., reports many inquiries concerning "Heritage," featuring the juvenile actor, Matty Roubert. The story was written for the young actor by William Mack, the author of "Tiger Rose" and numerous other big stage and picture successes.

The picture has been elaborately staged, and well played by a large cast of screen favorites, among whom are Herbert Standing, Augusta Perry, Joseph Burke, Philip Sanford, and Adelaide Fitzallen. William L. Roubert was responsible for the direction. Negotiations are now pending for many of the territories of the United States. Sydney Garrett, Inc., has purchased all foreign rights for this picture.

Jans Manager Leaves on Selling Trip

F. E. Backer, general manager of Jans Pictures, Inc., will leave for a flying trip through the West in the interests of his organization within the next few days. Mr. Backer will give special attention to closing contracts for the little territory now remaining on "A Woman's Business" and "Wings of Pride," the two Olive Tell-Jans features.

Lewis Sales Director for Peerless

Jerome Lewis is now acting as director of sales for the Peerless Pictures Co., with offices at 117 West 46th street, where they are offering to the independent exchanges a drama entitled "The Heart of a Woman." Several territories have already been closed. The second release under the Peerless banner is a five reel comedy now nearing completion and entitled "A Husband's Folly."

Critic Makes Debut as Scenario Writer

The debut of Burns Mantle, dramatic critic of the New York Evening Mail, as a scenario writer was noted with interest by his fellow critics on the metropolitan dailies when "A Dark Lantern," starring Alice Brady, and for which he wrote the continuity, was presented on the screen of the Rivoli theatre last week.

Cannibal Picture Does Heavy Business

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," the feature filmed by two Universal cameramen in the wilds of New Guinea, has proved to be one of the film sensations of the season, according to reports that have been coming into the Universal headquarters.

In the Columbia theatre, Pittsburgh, the picture played to more than 4,500 paid admissions on its opening day.

Matty Roubert Series Selling Fast

Reelcraft reports the sale of the Matty Roubert series to the Equitable Film Corporation; the R. D. Marson Attractions, of Boston; and the Electric Theatre Supply Company of Philadelphia, and the Productions of Merit, Inc., of New Orleans.

Seventy per cent of the territory in the United States has now been sold, according to Reelcraft, on both the Matty Roubert series and the Royal Comedy series.

Elmer J. McGovern, who is presenting Doraldina in "The Woman Untamed," announces that Greater New York City and Northern New Jersey territorial rights for "The Woman Untamed" have been sold to the Signet Films Inc.

David Solomon, president of the Signet Films Inc., closed the deal which gave his concern the rights on this production immediately after viewing the picture on the screen.

Arrow Feature Sold in New England States

"The Golden Trail" Arrow's feature fall release has been sold in the New England territory to Samuel Grand, manager of the Arrow Film Corporation of New England. Mr. Grand announced that the production would open for at least two weeks in one of the down town theatres of Boston early in September.

SIMPLEX NOTES

An interested visitor at the Simplex Plant recently was Mr. Floyd Stewart, Purchasing Agent for the Southern Enterprises, whose theatre interests in the Southwest are nationally known. Mr. Stewart, accompanied by his wife, took occasion to make their New York trip one of pleasure and business combined.

Mr. Stewart, after going thru the many departments at the Simplex factory expressed his surprise at the great number of interesting machines and processes that go to make the Simplex Projector, and he also expressed the wish that every user of the Simplex Projector throughout his circuit might take a similar trip in order to get first hand knowledge of the care and workmanship that is built into the Simplex.

Mr. Stewart informed the Simplex officials that there are no less than fifty (50) Simplex Projectors being used by the Southern Enterprises, thirty (30) of them having been installed since last October. Prominent among the Simplex theatres on the Southern Enterprises' circuit are those located in Ranger, Abilene, San Angelo, Temple, Waco, Austin, San Antonio, Beaumont, Galveston, Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth, Corsicana, Dennison, Greenville and Palestine.

Universal to Replace African Data

Technical data on the Johannesburg gold mines, lost in the train wreck in which William Stowell and Dr. J. F. Armstrong of the Universal African expedition lost their lives, is being replaced by Gus S. Holmes, Jr.

The motion picture negatives of the mills, dumps, shaft heads, and other details of the Johannesburg mines escaped destruction in the wreck in which Stowell was killed, as did the thousands of feet of scenic African subjects that had already been filmed.

Legion Commander at Goldwyn Studios

Col. Franklin D'Olier, national commander of the American Legion, accompanied by his staff, visited the Goldwyn studios recently as guests of Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production. He expressed his amazement at the magnitude of the Goldwyn Culver City studios and the advancement made by Goldwyn in motion-picture production. The visitors were particularly interested in the Goldwyn property room where hundreds of ancient implements of war are stored for use when occasion may arise.

Washburn Company Sails

Director, Assistant and Technical Experts to Meet Star in London

THE producing unit of Screenplays Productions, Inc., which is to handle the production of Bryant Washburn's first independent feature, sailed on August 10th, and immediately on their arrival in Europe the actual work of filming "The Road to London" will begin. Mr. Washburn has already completed arrangements for the use of a studio and in addition to filming scenes in the exact locations called for in the story, interiors will also be photographed on the other side.

In the party that sailed last Tuesday were Eugene Mullin, director; Jack Evans, assistant director; C. N. Nichols, Bryant Washburn's personal representative; Charles Davis, cameraman; Richard Pietchman, electrician and Dwight Cleveland who will write scenarios and while abroad comb Europe for suitable stories for the star. Twenty-five specially built cases containing electrical equipment enough for two studios was also shipped.

Jack Evans, who will assist Eugene Mullin, was associated with him on previous occasions and so the two work particularly well together. Charles Davis, the cameraman of the outfit, has photographed all over the world and with the assistance of electrician Pietchman declares that he will be able to produce excellent photographic work.

Mr. Washburn will meet his producing staff on their arrival and it is said will have a surprise in store for them when he announces the name of his leading lady.

Dancer Signed for Picture

Dorothy Dickson Will Appear in Next Geo. Fitzmaurice Production

DOROTHY DICKSON, featured dancer in many Broadway productions, has been engaged to play a leading role in "Money Mad," a special to be directed by George Fitzmaurice for Paramount, according to an announcement made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Miss Dickson has refused offers to appear in pictures and her engagement for a part in the new Fitzmaurice production is said to be the result of the persuasive efforts of Mr. Fitzmaurice himself. In her he saw the personification of the character about which the action of "Money Mad" revolves and he was not satisfied until she had consented to play the part.

"Money Mad" is an original story by Ouida Bergere, who adapted "On With the Dance" and "The Right to Love," two of Mr. Fitzmaurice's recent productions for Paramount, for the screen, and who is the author of "Idols of Clay," the latest picture which he has completed.

Miss Dickson has many theatrical successes to her credit. This season she has been appearing in "Lassie," the musical play with a Scotch setting which has proved one of the most popular productions of the year. Although well-known for her dancing in hotel ball-rooms, it was not until she appeared in "Oh Boy" that Miss Dickson became a stage favorite.

Marsh Picture Is Started

"Shooting" Begins with Arrival of Benoit; John Adolfs Directs

WITH the arrival of George Benoit, the camera man, at Hollywood this week, the work of "shooting" the new Robertson-Cole super-special in which Mae Marsh is starred, was begun. John G. Adolfs, the director, who is behind the megaphone for the new picture, arrived on the scenes last week. It is expected the film will be ready for distribution in the fall.

This is not the first time that Adolfs and Benoit have worked together for Robertson-Cole. "The Wonder Man," starring Georges Carpentier, the French idol, was an example of their work.

Mr. Adolfs is first of all an actor. Acting was his first love and he remains close to "the profession." As a progressive actor John G. Adolfs became a director and he is a director with vision.

Mr. Benoit is one of the best known camera men in the moving picture business. He learned his art in France when "movies" were in their infancy. In the United States he has photographed many of the great spectacular productions.

Betty Compson's Photo on Booklet Cover

The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce has paid Betty Compson a tribute by illustrating the cover of its pamphlet, "Motion Picture Making in Los Angeles," with a specially-posed photograph of Miss Compson, showing her at work before the camera on an exterior of "Prisoners of Love" the first of her pictures to be released by Goldwyn. The pamphlet is being sent broadcast over the world in response to inquiries concerning motion-picture production in Los Angeles.

Cotter Made Manager of Foreign Branch

Frank J. Cotter, a well-known newspaper and magazine man, has been selected as the permanent head of Universal's Australian Branch. He already has taken up his duties in Sydney, having been in the Universal employ in this part of the world for several months, as assistant to James V. Bryson, the former Australian manager. Universal's Australian branch is only a few months old, it having been established by Mr. Bryson this Spring after he had made a comprehensive study of Australian conditions.

Cotter is better known in the newspaper world as Pat O'Cotter, which is the name he has used for the last twenty years in his writing.

Cast of Arbuckle Picture Now Complete

By a switch in roles, Fred Huntley, recently engaged to play the role of Grandfather, Ingram in "Brewster's Millions," the new Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle picture being directed for Paramount by Joseph Henabery, the scenario by Walter Woods, has been assigned to the role of Grandfather Brewster while James Corrigan has been engaged for the other part.

Arrow Adds New Picture to Lists

A recent addition to the Arrow's list of feature pictures for the coming year, was made last week when Arrow arranged for the distribution for the dramatic picture entitled "The Penny Philanthropist." This picture is presented by the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions and was adapted from the widely read novel by Clara G. Laughlin. Peggy O'Neil and Ralph Morgan are featured in the picture.

Templer Saxe Writes Guy Empey Story

Templer Saxe, well known character actor, has turned author successfully. His "A Long Distance Hero" will be produced by Guy Empey Productions with Arthur Guy Empey in the principal role and the author in the chief character part. "A Long Distance Hero" will be the second of the series of comedy drama being produced by the Empey company of which "Oil," now ready for release, was the first.

"Riders of the Dawn" Does Big Business

According to reports from the W. W. Hodkinson offices, Benjamin B. Hampton's production, "Riders of the Dawn," is showing marked vitality in the matter of bookings. After playing to capacity houses in the Kinema, Los Angeles, says Hodkinson, the picture is now being booked by the same managers for their Alhambra house in the same city. Reports of continued bookings on this Hodkinson release are being received at the home-offices of the Hodkinson Corporation.

GOLDWYN

SEVERAL changes are announced from the west coast Goldwyn studios. One is that Reginald Barker has been selected to direct the all star production of the Scotch comedy drama "Buntz Pulls the Strings" and that Russell Simpson has been engaged to play the part of Buntz's father. Barker recently completed the filming of "The Black Pawl" with Simpson in the title role.

Wallace Worsley is on his way to the coast after directing a feature starring Madge Kennedy and he will be entrusted with the direction of an original screen play by Gertrude Atherton.

E. Mason Hopper, who directed the Rinehart play, "It's a Great Life" and is responsible for the filming of the first six of the Edgar stories has completed the sixth, titled "Edgar Camps Out" and is now to direct Tom Moore in the Ben Ames Williams story, "Canavan." Naomi Childers and Sylvia Ashton have been selected as principal supports for Moore. At the same time it is announced that Mason A. Litson, who has been connected with the production department, is now to direct the Edgar series and will immediately begin the filming of "An African Interlude."

Will Rogers, director Clarence Badger and company of twenty-five have gone to San Francisco for exteriors for the "Gule of Woman," where they will remain for several weeks. The "Santa Barbara," one of the largest lumber schooners plying west coast waters, together with its cargo of 650,000 feet of lumber, has been leased for several days for the making of many scenes for the Rogers play. A big set is to be erected on the top of one of San Francisco's office buildings overlooking the harbor and many scenes will be taken there. Doris Pawn, Lionel Belmore, Bert Sprotte and Nick Cogley are among the members of this cast.

Victor Schertzinger has completed all scenes for Mabel Normand's picture, "Head Over Heels" and Miss Normand has gone to New York for a vacation of a month.

Colonel Franklin D'Olier, National Commander of American Legions, together with his entire staff, who are on a trip to the coast, were guests of vice-president Abram Lehr at the Goldwyn studios this week.

An out of the ordinary preview was given by Abram Lehr, vice-president and director of production of Goldwyn studios Friday evening, when he invited all consuls of foreign lands in Los Angeles to witness the showing of "Earthbound" as his guests. The nations represented were Belgium, Bolivia, Columbia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Denmark, England, Sweden, Honduras, Norway, Spain, Japan and Mexico.

CHESTER

The C. O. Chester organization this week shipped two Chester comedies featuring Snookie the humaneze. The one to be released first is titled "The Big Show" and following this will be "A Trayfull of Trouble." Both subjects were filmed under the direction of William S. Campbell.

This organization has also completed four other subjects, which will be released as Chester Outings and Screenies. The titles for these are "Monkey Hits and Woolly Bits," "South Sea Naiads," "Too Much Overhead" and "Igagu the Exquisite." All of these subjects are for release by Educational Film Corporation.

1st NATIONAL

THE first Charles Ray release for First National "Forty-Five Minutes From Broadway" was given its first initial preview this week when it was shown for Sol Lesser, Western First National representative and Colonel Fred Levy of Louisville, Kentucky. Both men are very enthusiastic about the results obtained by Ray and his organization in this production and they state it is their belief the subject will prove as big a success as any previous Ray release.

It is also learned the Ray organization will next film "Nineteen and Phyllis" from a story of the same title which will be made under the direction of Joseph de Grass responsible for the filming of Ray's first release. The cast for "Forty Five Minutes From Broadway" is composed of Dorothy Devore, McDonald, Harry Myers, Eugene Besserer, Hazel Howell, May Foster and William Courtright.

When Anita Stewart returns from her summer vacation it will be for the filming of the Harold McGrath novel, "Drums of Jeopardy." Plans for the filming of this are now being made at the Louis B. Mayer studio. This will serve as the release to follow "Sowing the Wind" which was recently completed by Director John Stall. James Morrison, who played with Miss Stewart in many subjects during her Vitagraph engagement, appears in the leading role with the star. Another story purchased for Miss Stewart is "Judith of Blue Lake Ranch."

Complete cast for the next Katherine MacDonald production, "The Second Latchkey," is announced by president Sam Rork to consist of Edmund Lowe, Claire Du Brey, Thomas Jefferson, Howard Gaye, Helena Phillips, Lenore Lynard, and continuity for this photoplay was written by Finis Fox with Metro.

All scenes for the de Haven comedy "Twin Beds" have been taken by director Lloyd Ingraham and as soon as the editing is completed Mr. and Mrs. de Haven will take the comedy to New York. The role of Signora Monti in this film is taken by Helen Raymond, who played this part on the stage for five consecutive years. Ross Fisher is responsible for the camera work. Work has been started at the Al

Kaufman studios on the production of "Parrot and Company" from the Harold McGrath novel by Director Sidney Franklin. Sylvia Breamer will play the leading role in this and other members of the cast will be Herbert Prior and Lloyd Whitlock. David Abel is camera man, Willard Webb, assistant director, and Ben Carré is art director of this unit.

Allan Holubar, in the making of the first Dorothy Phillips subject for First National "Man, Woman and Marriage" has been using a great number of extra players for the past two weeks. A big ball scene was filmed which required several days. On another occasion more than fifty classic dancers from a local school danced before the Holubar camera and on other days a great number of extras as c o l i e s were in evidence on the Holubar sets. The complete cast for the subject supporting Miss Phillips includes Emily Chichester, J. Barney Sherry, James Kirkwood, Robert Cain, Shannon Day, Margaret Mann and Jean Calhoun.

METRO

THE big Metro plant is alive with activity as a result of several new productions being started this week. The all star feature from the Luther Reed original story "White Ashes" to be directed by Philip Rosen now has a complete cast. Garret Hughes and William Conklin will play the leading masculine roles and Cleo Madison and Helen Weer are cast for the feminine parts. Conklin has been playing in Thomas H. Ince and J. Parker Reid Productions.

John Ince has been selected to direct the making of "All Men Are Valiant" from the Ben Ames Williams story prepared for the screen by Edward Lowe, Jr. and Edmund Lowe and Vola Vale will take the principal parts. This drama is to have settings in the New England coast and the South Sea Islands, together with several episodes aboard ship.

Frank Elliott, who has played in a number of Metro productions and had the leading role in the "Drury Lane" melodrama "The Hope," has been cast to play with May Allison in "The Marriage of William Ashe." The cast for this picture has now been completely selected and includes Wyndham Standing as leading man together with Robert Bolder, Lydia Titus, William Courtright and Clarissa Selwyn. The production is to be made under the direction of Edward Sloman.

Alice Lake's picture "Body and Soul" directed by Charles Swickard is nearing completion with a cast that includes William Lawrence, Stuart Holmes, Fontaine La Rue and William Orlamond.

Another Metro cast selected is that to support Viola Dana in "Cinderella's Twin," another Luther Reed original story. Wallace McDonald will be leading man and Ruth Stonehouse will have one of the crook roles as well as Edward Cecil and Edward Connelly. Others in the cast are Gertrude Shart, Irene Hunt, Victory Bateman, Gilbert Clayton and Calvert Carter. Dallas Fitzgerald is in charge of direction.

Director A. Smallwood has completed all work for Nazimova's "Madam Peacock" and is on vacation.

The Victoria theatre, Camden, New Jersey, which is managed by Benjamin Shindler

The Hannah Hinsdale story "The Turning of the Worm" recently purchased by Metro is being adapted for the screen by A. P. Younger and will be known as "Don't Nag Your Husband." Miss Hinsdale was formerly correspondent for the Motion Picture News at Spokane, Washington.

Wyndham Standing has been placed under contract to appear exclusively in Metro subjects for a term of years. The contract was signed this week. This makes a total of four stock players under contract by Metro besides stars.

F. P. LASKY

THE Sinclair Lewis story which ran serially in a weekly magazine and has since been published in book form titled "Free Air" is being adapted for the screen by Biron Morgan and is to serve as the next play for Wallace Reid upon the completion of his present subject "Always Audacious." James Cruze is to continue as director for Reid.

Benish Marie Dix is now at work on the continuity for "Easy Street" which is to star Thomas Meighan who is now on his way to the coast following the completion of work in "Civilian Clothes" at the Eastern Famous Players-Lasky studios.

The largest palatial yacht of the Pacific coast has been leased for use in the making of the marine scenes for the next Roscoe Arbuckle comedy feature "Brewster's Millions" and the company is to leave shortly for a cruise on the Pacific to take these scenes.

Milton Sills has been selected to play name role in the film version of the William Vaughn Moody play "The Faith Healer" under the direction of George Melford.

BRUNTON

ROBERT BRUNTON will begin the production of the first Dustin Farnum subject "The Trail of the Axe" by Richard Cullen about August 15th and the Ruth Roland serial "The Avenging Arrow" to be made for Pathe by Brunton will be started August 16th. No casts for these pictures have been announced.

The Charles Hutchinson serial company making the "Double Adventure" under the direction of W. S. Van Dyke is this week making marine scenes between Los Angeles and San Diego.

Louis F. Gottschalk who has prepared the incidental musical scores for a great number of photoplays has been engaged by Mayflower to arrange music for the Dwan picture "The Sin of Martha Qued."

A series of Western dramas to be known as Roy Stewart productions are to be made by Robert Brunton and information is given out that these Westerns will have an entirely new garb eliminating the gun fights, dance halls, typical Western sheriffs, etc.

With "The Barbarian" in the final finishing stages Monroe Salisbury Players are making arrangements for the filming of the second subject which will be "Ethan of the Mountain" from the Sarah Waters story. This story gives Salisbury an entirely new out of door type role and will be directed by Donald Crisp.

VITAGRAPH

THE Vitagraph Company has made a new contract with Antonio Moreno, which provides this serial star shall continue with this organization for the next three years. Moreno is now at work on the 9th episode of the serial "The Veiled Mystery," and in as much as the contract does not stipulate what class of production he shall continue in, it is intimated at the studio that he will be seen in feature productions as soon as the present serial is completed.

The Earle Williams company, directed by Chester Bennett, continues at work on the exteriors for "The Romance Promoters" at Santa Barbara.

Construction work on new stages at Vitagraph is progressing rapidly and plans provide that the enclosed stages will be ready for use early in September, which will make possible the doubling of filming capacity for this plant.

TOURNEUR

MAURICE TOURNEUR has assembled the cast for his first A. P. release "The Last of the Mohicans" which will consist of Barbara Bedford, Henry Woodward, Albert Roscoe, Lillian Hall, Wallace Berry, Jack McDonald and Omar Whitehead, together with more than five hundred extras as Indians and soldiers. Producer Tourneur is taking his entire company to a mountainous valley more than one hundred miles from Los Angeles where ideal lake, stream and mountainous scenes can be secured. He plans to spend about two months on the making of this film.

UNIVERSAL

VACATION period is on for three producing units of the Universal. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have made final scenes for "Once a Plumber" from the Edgar Franklyn story and with their wives have gone to Del Mar where they will vacation and prepare the script for their next play "Fixed by George" also an Edgar Franklyn story. The "Once a Plumber" film is being edited in their absence by their co-director Eugene De Rue.

Other productions finished during the week are "Sundown Slim" starring Harry Carey and "Out of the Sky" the circus story directed by Reeves Eason and co-starring Gladys Walton and Jack Perin.

Director Rolin Surgeon this week put in production the second of the Carmel Myers features which is to be titled "The Gilded Dream" from the story of the same name by Catherine Leiser Robbins. Other productions in the making are "Outside the Law," Priscilla Dean picture directed by Tod Browning, "Foolish Wives" a Stroheim special, "Black Friday" being directed by Frederick Thompson, "White Youth" directed by Norman Dawn and "Kate Plus Ten" which is being directed by Stewart Paton.

Of the short subject companies Hoot Gibson has finished "The Shootin' Fool" with Dorothy Woods playing opposite and director Jacques Jaccard is doing the final cutting on several pictures made in Bear Lake Valley.

Announcement is made that Director Jaccard will in the future direct feature productions, the first of them will be "The Throw Back," an original story by Jacard laid in the big out-doors. It is probable Frank Mayo will be starred in this subject.

The "Lightning Eye" serial company directed by Robert Hill and headed by Elmo Lincoln is now on its fourteenth episode and director J. P. McGowan has resumed work at the U studio after a trip to Denver where Eddie Polo played in a number of scenes in and about the Robinson shows for the serial "The King of the Circus." Production work on the "Queen of Diamonds" is being delayed because of the injury sustained by Eileen Sedgwick who is being starred.

HERE AND THERE

Edward Bowes of the Capitol theatre, New York, is in Los Angeles for a stay of two weeks to visit studios and become acquainted with production activities of the several companies.

H. D. H. Cornick, chairman of the finance committee of Famous Players-Lasky corporation is in Los Angeles for a short stay.

Frank Elliott, Western representative of the Sun-Light Arc Corporation has returned to Los Angeles after attending the annual meeting of the corporation at its New York office. The supply of lumps for the coast territory is to be greatly increased according to statements by Mr. Elliott and shortly the company will be in position to fill all orders, condition which heretofore has not existed.

Sam E. Rork, president, and B. P. Fineman, vice-president, of Katherine MacDonald Pictures Corporation, left Los Angeles August 3rd for New York. They expect to be in the east but a short time on matters pertaining to the Katherine MacDonald corporation and also the newly formed Rork-Roth Productions, Inc.

The screen is to lose a favorite player. Vincent Coleman, having finished his work opposite Constance Talmadge in "Good Reference," having accepted an engagement for the legitimate stage in "Self Defense," which opens in Chicago on August 30.

June Walker, who comes to the screen after a successful career on the stage, will play opposite Bobby Harrison in "Coincidence," directed by Chet Withey, to be released through Metro.

Helen Ferguson has been engaged to play the lead opposite Earle Williams in "The Romance Promoters," Vitagraph.

Ann May, selected by Cecil B. DeMille on the strength of her work in "Wanted, a Blemish" with Bryant Washburn, has completed her work in the special part introduced for her in the DeMille production.

Rod LaRoque has been engaged to play the leading masculine role in the next George Fitzmaurice production, the distinction heretofore allotted David Powell.

"Bill Bailey" is what he is called. But he has earned the dignity of being addressed as William N. Bailey, having been selected for a second time to play opposite the Pathe star, Juanita Hansen, in the leading masculine role. To meet with the approval of the daring Juanita, a leading man must look as good as he can act and act as good as he looks, which entitles "Bill" to his correct moniker.

Anne Sutherland will enact the role of "Paula" in the screen play of "The Foreigner," with Gaston Glass in the title role and opposite Wilton Lackaye.

The casting for two additional productions of the Dominion Film Corporation, using stories by Ralph Connor, who is in real life Major, the Rev. Doctor Gordon, D.D., is under way.

Betty Blythe has been engaged for the leading role in "Truant Husbands," screen version of the story of the same title by Albert Payson Terhune, under the producing auspices of Rockett Brothers. Miss Blythe's recent work has been for First National, following an association with Robertson-Cole releases.

"The Witching Hour" will be prepared for the screen under the direction of William Desmond Taylor, Realart, in which Eddie Sutherland will portray the leading juvenile role. Sutherland won attention for his work in support of Roscoe Arbuckle in "The Round-Up," and also appeared in "The Sea Wolf," a recent Paramount-Lasky production.

In the cast of "Twin Beds," the Carter de Haven comedy production which Lloyd Ingraham has

Peggy North, who has scored in important roles in many recent productions for the larger companies directed, William Desmond, the well known star, maintains his reputation as a light comedy actor to high advantage.

After long resisting the temptations held out by the motion picture, George Arliss, one of the most distinguished actors of the stage, has succumbed. He will be presented by Andrew J. Callaghan Productions in an elaborate film version of "The Devil." In this stage play Arliss scored his first great success. Callaghan Productions is the company which is presenting Bessie Love in a new brace of pretentious film features.

William Lawrence was engaged this week by Metro to play opposite Alice Lake in her new picture, "Body and Soul," now being filmed at Metro's studios in Hollywood, California.

Miss Ann and Master Michael Cudahy, children of the noted Cudahy family of packers, have done so well in Monroe Salisbury's new play, that they may be exploited as stars under his guidance.

Fatty Arbuckle, having finished "The Traveling Salesman," will next be the pivot of a film version of "Brewster's Millions," with Betty Ross Clark as leading woman.

At the conclusion of his current contract with Vitagraph, Larry Semon will probably form his own producing organization and release his pictures through First National or United Artists (the Big Four).

Included in the support of Justice Johnstone's initial starring vehicle under Famous Players banner, are Jess Arnold and Grace Parker.

Virginia Warwick, a former bathing beauty has been selected by Rex Ingram to enact the part of Chichi, the little Spanish girl in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse." This is Miss Warwick's first dramatic role and Mr. Ingram is highly pleased with her work.

Wyndham Standing, at present playing the leading role opposite Viola Dana in the forthcoming production of "Blackmail," this week signed a contract under which he will appear exclusively in Metro pictures for a term of years.

Tully Marshall has been signed by Metro to play an old South Sea Islands leper in the forthcoming production of "Passion Fruit," in which Doraldina will star.

Edmund Lowe, who is the nimble fingered thief in Metro's "Someone in the House," has been weaned away from the legitimate stage through this, his first screen engagement in several years. He has announced that he will remain in Southern California instead of returning to New York, as was his intention when engaged by Metro to appear in the all-star cast for this production.

New Rochelle Mansion Carefully Rebuilt

One of the settings in the forthcoming starring production of Charles Ray, "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," that shows the extreme care that the young star is taking to make his picture an assured success, is the "Castleton Mansion at New Rochelle." The mansion in all its details—broad verandas, stately columns, French windows—has found its exact counterpart in the huge set erected on the new "lot" recently opened by Charles Ray at Hollywood, Cal.

The star himself, his director, Joseph de Grasse; Wesley G. Gilmore, the studio manager—all contributed suggestions in the preparation of the "mansion" set for the new picture. The details were handled by George E. McCormack, chief of the electrical department, and Robert Bennett and Clarence DeWitt, in charge of the technical and art direction of the production.

Betty Compson's First Picture a Success

Following the declaration of George Loane Tucker and Samuel Goldwyn that Betty Compson's stellar characterization in her first independent picture, "Prisoners of Love," will surpass her performance in Mr. Tucker's production of "The Miracle Man," Miss Compson stated that she attributed her success to her desire to produce a character equal to "Ro-cin" in "The Miracle Man."

ABOUT DIRECTORS

At the August meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, which was well attended for this season of the year, it was announced by Director Perry N. Vekroff that he would transfer his membership to the coast lodge, since on September 1 he is moving his family and effects to Hollywood, California. Among Mr. Vekroff's recent work is the Pathe serial, co-starring Frankie Mann and Stuart Holmes in "Trailed by Three," and "Cynthia of the Minute," Hodgkinson release.

Travers Vale, the former Rex, Reliance, Biograph, Universal, World director, is about to complete the cutting of "Life," screen dramatization of the famous play, under the producing activities of William A. Brady. His next engagement has not yet been decided upon.

Jack Dillon expects to be five weeks more on the first Justine Johnstone picture for Famous Players, the locations having already been filmed.

Director R. William Neill is now cutting and assembling the seventh of Constance Talmadge's First National pictures, "Good References," by E. J. Rath, adapted for the screen by Dorothy Farnum, and at present running in five installments in the All-Story Magazine. Vincent Coleman will be seen as Miss Talmadge's leading man, and others who have important roles are: Ned A. Sparks, Nellie Parker Spaulding, Mona Lisa, Matthew L. Betz, Arnold Lucy and Dorothy Walters.

Thomas Heffron will direct the Rockett productions, for which space has been leased at Universal City, California, where the work is already under way.

While visiting another studio Henry King, director for H. B. Warner, watched an aeroplane dive into a church spire. He declared he would never ask his players to take such a risk. The next morning Warner was to fight with a villain in the sea. "Hold him under until he stops struggling!" shouted Henry to his star.

Jack Dillon expects to be five weeks more on "Blackbirds," which he is directing for Famous Players, starring Justine Johnstone, supported by a carefully selected cast.

John Joseph Harvey, known to his fellow directors as "Jack" has been engaged to direct a feature production for Weiss Brothers. The producers hail from California.

"By Golly" Has Long Run Two-Reeler Stays at Theatre for Four Weeks Chas. Murray Director

CHARLIE MURRAY'S success as a director under Mack Sennett's supervision, has created much comment among picture-folk, and his achievement in "By Golly" has developed something like a sensation.

For what is claimed to be the first time in the history of motion-picture-making, a two-reel comedy has remained at the same theatre for four consecutive weeks. "By Golly" accomplished that record at the Criterion and might have stayed on had not other bookings, previously arranged for, rendered a longer stay at the Criterion impossible.

"By Golly" is the first of what promises to be a series of comedies produced by Mack Sennett with Murray not only as star but as director. Much significance was attached managerially to the fate of "By Golly," and Murray's vindication is the more important and complete since "By Golly" was absolutely the first motion-picture over which he ever waved the megaphone.

Following the recent signing by Murray of a contract providing for the seventh consecutive year of his service at the Mack Sennett studios. It was announced by Mack Sennett that Murray would be given a chance to see whether he was as effective a director of screen-comedy as he used to be when he was the directing genius of the musical comedy-productions of Murray and Mack.

The results betrayed by "By Golly" are proof, says Mr. Murray, that he is right when he says that directing motion-pictures is an easy job compared with directing a musical comedy organization where every member of the chorus is a prima donna out of place and temperamental eruptions disturb the peace uninterruptedly.

Company Off for Bahamas Final Scenes of "Fathoms Deep" Will Be Filmed in West Indies

C. E. WILLIAMSON of the Submarine Film Corporation left for Miami, Fla., last Saturday night, heading a producing company of nineteen that will proceed from Miami to the Bahamas to complete work on the latest Williamson submarine feature, tentatively and probably permanently entitled "Fathoms Deep."

Williamson was enthusiastic about the prospects for this, his latest novelty picture and said that he was sure it would develop into the best picture he and his company have ever made. "Our pictures have always been financial successes," said Williamson just before leaving for the south, "because of the great novelty of the under sea scenes. We have always managed to get something 'bigger and better than ever' in each successive picture. At times we have slipped upon production and direction details but in the present instance all such slips are guarded against by our director—Ralph Ince."

"Mr. Ince, incidentally, regards 'Fathoms Deep' as one of the biggest opportunities he has had in the producing field. He is so confident as to the picture's success that we are all confident with him."

Mr. Ince is also making the present trip. The story for "Fathoms Deep" was written by Williamson himself and its author claims that as far as under sea stuff goes he has gone himself, one, two, three times considerably better than ever before.

Releasing arrangements for the present picture have not as yet been completed.

New Company in West to Make Comedies

A recently organized producing company of Los Angeles is making Nuart comedies, featuring Paddie McGuire, formerly of Sunshine and Sennett comedies. Production is in charge of Robert McKinzie, and the supporting players of the first subject include three-year old Fay McKinzie, who will be billed as the youngest leading woman of films; Helen Howell, who previously played in "Bill" Parsons Capital comedies; and Frank Hayes whose face is familiar in comedy. This company proposes to make comedies at the rate of one two-reel subject every three weeks which are to be distributed by the California Motion Picture Enterprises conducted by Ernest E. Gaemon.

Withey's Production Nears Completion

Chet Withey, who has been busily engaged in directing "Coincidence," announces that it is soon to be complete and is in the final stages of cutting and titling. Release is scheduled during the latter part of October.

Director Withey believes that this picture will make an especial appeal to those who are tired of sex and problem plays. It is taken from the Morton Macy story which appeared in the Cosmopolitan magazine, remembered for its interpersions of lively action, amusing comedy situations and love interest.

Mr. Withey has been meeting with success in his recent pictures, and especially so in "Romance."

Director Predicts Re- turn of Two-Reeler

"In five years—I am willing to stake my reputation on it—the two-reeler will have returned to its own in serious drama," declares Frank Borzage, director of Cosmopolitan's famous "Humoresque" production from the story by Fanny Hurst.

"I do not mean that pictures are going to be made that will be deliberately limited to the two-reel length. What I do mean is that the limit will be removed entirely and the number of reels will depend upon the demands of the story—not the length of the story upon the number of reels, as it is today."

Felix Orman With J. Stuart Blackton

Felix Orman, a writer well-known in magazine, newspaper and theatrical circles, has become associated with Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, and is located at the Brooklyn studios of the Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc. Mr. Orman for years has written extensively on the theatre, the opera and the motion picture.

Travel Aids Director Says Richard Stanton

DIRECTOR RICHARD STANTON, who will shortly leave for Europe, announces that he is going on business, believing it is the duty of every director to study foreign people and conditions, if he is to attain true realism in picturing foreign life. He will spend several months in Italy, France, Ireland, Belgium and England, and expects to meet Marshal Foch and ex-Premier Clemenceau.

Mr. Stanton also believes that progress towards internationalism can be greatly advanced through the medium of the motion pictures. In an effort to faithfully depict the peoples of foreign countries in his future productions and believing that the screen will reach its greatest usefulness in spreading the doctrine of the brotherhood of man, Mr. Stanton is taking his trip abroad. He is confident that an international perspective will necessarily aid him in his work.

In Italy the director will visit Rome and Pompeii in order to study the Latin temperament.

Lewis Abandons Plans to Work in East

Because of the scope of the plans arranged for him by Pathe Exchange, Inc., Edgar Lewis has been obliged to give up his preparations for working in the East, and has returned to Los Angeles. Soon after his arrival he will resume his production activities, staging "The Sage Hen," a play he has been waiting to produce for two years. He had planned to make "The Hangers On" in a New York studio, but, after a consultation with Elmer R. Pearson, Director of Exchanges, he decided the picture would not be of the magnitude Pathe desired, and the switch to "The Sage Hen" followed. "The Sage Hen" is only a tentative title.

Schenck Announces New Talmadge Picture

Joseph M. Schenck has purchased "The Chessboard," a short story recently published in Young's Magazine, by Madeline Sharp, for Constance Talmadge's next picture, to follow "Good References." The name of the magazine story has been changed to "Dangerous Business," and R. William Neill, is now directing Constance in this picture. Kenneth Harlan and George Fawcett will be seen in the principal roles in support of Miss Talmadge, and Matilda Brundage, Nina Cassavani, Florida Kingsley and Jack Raymond all have important parts. "Dangerous Business" is replete with humorous situations, and is one of the peppiest vehicles in Constance's series of First National lively comedies.

Miss Talmadge is working both day and night, in order to finish this story in time to sail on the "Imperator" for Europe on August 12th.

Stanton Directing New Fox Special

To combine drama with thrilling spectacle in one production, to convey a lesson by means of action alone, without a hint of preaching—these are the aims of "The Face at Your Window," a William Fox special all-star feature which is to be released shortly.

The author is Max Marcin, author of "Eyes of Youth," "Cheating Cheaters," "The House of Glass" and other Broadway successes. The director is Richard Stanton, who made "Checkers," "The Spy" and other William Fox screen classics, and the cast includes Gina Rely, celebrated Parisian actress, who came to America specially to play in "The Face at Your Window," Earl Metcalf, Diana Allen, Frank Farrington, William Corbett, Edward Roseman, Robert Cummings, William McEwen and Henry Arnetta.

Nebraskan Exhibitors Appreciate Farce

That Nebraskan exhibitors are susceptible to a good farce is the report of S. MacIntyre, Metro branch manager at Omaha, Neb., to William E. Atkinson, general manager of the corporation in New York. Mr. MacIntyre states that the ten or twelve showmen who were present at the private showing laughed continuously throughout "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," the all-star screen version of the A. H. Woods stage hit by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan.

Russell Feature to be Released Soon

"The Man Who Dared," William Russell's latest Fox production, from the pen of Julius G. Furthman, is to be released at the end of August. It is a story of the giant redwood lumber country of California, and the action takes place amid the great forests. It is said to afford the live-wire exhibitor unlimited scope for advertising and supplies him with the means for an effective and inexpensive lobby and stage exploitation medium.

Churchill Novel Picturized Hampton Produces "The Dwelling Place of Light"; Released Shortly

THE W. W. HODKINSON Corporation announces that Winston Churchill's novel, "The Dwelling Place of Light," has been converted into a photoplay production by Benjamin B. Hampton. Commenting on the results achieved by the producer in his treatment of Churchill's story, Hodkinson writes as follows:

"He has made from the Churchill novel a photoplay with all the action and conflict needed in shadowland, but with something more—with the very heart of the great novelist's message to his public retained in the unfolding of the powerful, dramatic story." "The Dwelling Place of Light" will be released by the Hodkinson organization in September.

Believing that Mr. Churchill's authorship of the story will add additional force to the production turned out by Benjamin Hampton under the original title of "The Dwelling Place of Light," the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has devoted some space in a statement, just issued, to the literary achievements of this American novelist. The salient points of this statement are submitted as follows:

"Mr. Churchill is a most painstaking writer as his novel, 'Richard Carvel,' illustrates. He rewrote the manuscript of that novel five times in order to get the characters of John Paul Jones, Charles Fox and other historical personages just right, and he spent many weeks visiting the localities associated with the life and exploits of the great American seamen so that his descriptions might be accurate.

True Characterization in Browning Pictures

Great care has been taken in the production of Tod Browning's melodrama of the 'Frisco underworld in order to insure against any anachronisms. The picture, which stars Priscilla Dean, is entitled "Outside the Law," and is being made for Universal. "Mr. Browning has kept in close touch with Thomas H. Gubbins, son of the American vice-consul at Shanghai, who will see to it that the characterization of the Chinese parties are true to the most minute detail.

Rialto Bills Christie Comedy as Feature

"Out for the Night," the third of the new two reel Christie Comedies released through Educational Exchanges, has a prominent place on the bill at the Rivoli theatre this week and is featured in the electric lights. "Out for the Night" features Eddie Barry with the cast including Neal Burns, Charlotte Merriam and Margaret Collington FitzRoy and the Follies Girls. This is the third of the new Christies that Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld has selected for his theatres in four weeks.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

DETROIT

The LaSalle Garden theatre, possessing a seating capacity of 2,500, is rapidly nearing completion, and is scheduled to open in the latter part of this month. The theatre proper is built on the rear of lots facing two streets, and is connected with the street entrance by a lobby 36 feet wide and 124 feet long. The theatre will offer a combination of vaudeville features and photoplays at prices ranging from 25 to 30 cents. The LaSalle Garden Theatre Co., capitalized at $275,000, will operate the house.

A safe containing $3,476, was removed from the office of the Orpheum theatre some time between midnight Saturday and Sunday afternoon. The money represents the Saturday receipts. How the job was accomplished has not yet been ascertained.

The Princess theatre, South Haven, has been purchased by Burrell Tipp, of Alligau, who recently opened the new Center theatre in South Haven.

INDIANAPOLIS

A company for the production of child drama movies exclusively has been formed in Indianapolis. Cortlandt J. Van Dusen, former director and actor in several big companies, is the president of the enterprise, which is named The Cortlandt Picture Corporation, and which is capitalized at $250,000. Stock is being sold in Indianapolis.

Other officers, all of Indianapolis, are: Alvah J. Ruckelshaus, president and general counsel; C. R. Hamilton, secretary; Otto L. Klaus, treasurer; James A. Collins, George V. Collin and J. F. Wild, Jr., directors.

The strike of musicians in Indianapolis theatres, which began July 21, was still in progress this week, all managers, excepting one, continuing to refuse to grant an increase in wages to $1.50 per hour with double time for Sunday. The Park, a burlesque house, made an agreement with its orchestra in order that the opening of the fall season on August 9 might not be delayed.

Movie houses continued to use pipe organs, phonographs and patent orchestras in lieu of musicians.

The Citizen's Theatre Company of Brazil, Ind., will erect a new motion picture house on the site of the present Sourvine theatre. The cost and size have not been determined. Directors of the company are: A. C. Miller, president; A. B. Cooper, vice-president; William Seigelin, secretary-treasurer; William Zeller, Sr., Simon Zeller, M. M. Doyle, Carl Cutshall, J. A. Morgan and A. W. Knight.

SPOKANE

Favorable conditions for a new cinema theatre to cost at least $750,000 were found in Spokane by Frederick Frisk, manager of the United States Exchange of San Francisco, who recently spent two weeks here in the vicinity of the city in consultation with men representing local capital, and locations and specifications were discussed. Uncertainty of building conditions prevented the immediate procedure with this plan, it was stated by friends of Mr. Frisk today. It is understood Mr. Frisk intends to build a new theatre partly with local and partly with California money, a large part being already pledged.

The newly organized division of general college extension of Washington State college at Pullman, south of Spokane, will operate in four principal departments, one of which is that of educational moving picture films and stereoscopic slides. The films, which are in circulation approximately 40 miles of films, to which additions are being made weekly. The films picture industrial processes, scientific experiments and demonstrations, travel, public service and social welfare work. The films and stereoscopic slides will be circulated among schools, churches and other organizations free of charge.

Robert Fisher, who has been playing with Mack Sennett in Keystone comedies for the last four years, is in Spokane to take part in the first of a series of ten comedies to be produced by the Hilaris film company of New York at the Playtist studio at Minnehaha park during the summer. Mr. Fisher was during the summer. Mr. Fisher was with Komaine Fielding for two years and has just completed an engagement with Burton King in New York. He will take an important part in "His Home Town Girl," the first of the comedies, on which work will begin August 1. Ralph Neely, a Spokane boy, will have an important part in this comedy, also.

The Playtist studios at Minnehaha park served as the scene of an attractive ball recently when motion picture manufacturers and exhibitors of the city joined in the affair. The whole plant was lighted and both the out-of-door stage and the studio proper were used for dancing. Flags in every form were employed in the decorative scheme. A set was up showing the interior of a ranch house with a stone fireplace, and there one of the orchestras was stationed. Shaded searchlights were in each corner, and there were also searchlights that threw all the colors of the spectrum on the dancers. Mr. and Mrs. Wellington Playtist, members of the board of directors of the company and the various officers of the organization were present.

Bert Lytell in "Alias Jimmy Valentine" proved a big drawing card at the hotel recently when motion picture theatres had a repertoire of big stars, the Casino showing Sessue Hayakawa in "Li Tung Lang" and the Lyric in Douglas Fairbanks picture, "Arizona." The Majestic showed Geraldine Farrar in "The Flame of the Desert" and Class A had a William Fox production, "What Would You Do," starring Madeline Travers.

BUFFALO

T. R. Gardiner of the Gardiner Pictures, Inc., has sold the Abbott and Costo theatre in the South Park district. The Abbott goes to Paul W. Smith and the Costo to James Wallingford.

John Stevens, formerly with Stevens Attracts, Inc., has been named manager of the Marlboro theatre by Harry Marsey, president of General Theatres, Inc., who has also shifted Billy West from the Circle to the Allendale, and Art Ames from the Allendale to the Circle.

Niagara Falls is in the midst of a building boom. Loew, Inc., has filed plans for a $1,000,000 house on Third street, Charlie Hayman, Joseph Schuchman, Falls street. J. M. Brothers $250,000 house at Suspension Bridge in the north end of the city and a plan to remodel the International theatre on Falls street is under consideration.

Fred W. Zimmerman, president of Nu-

Art, has returned from his vacation in the Thousand Island district. He has purchased the Olver theatre property in North Tonawanda. B. S. Wallenstein, former manager of the Broadway theatre, has been engaged to cover the small towns in the territory. H. C. Bissell has taken upon himself a bride, and "Hub" Taylor reports the arrival of a bouncing eight-pound baby boy at his domus. All are happy at Nu-Art.

P. H. Smith, Robertson-Cole; Hugh Rennie and Eddie Hayes, First National; J. H. Greenwald, Fox; J. E. Kimberly, Pathe; Harry E. Lotz, Realar; A. Lawlor, Nu-Art; A. W. Moses, Select; Bill Allen, Vitagraph; John Sitterly and W. A. Chase, Universal; Howard Brink, Dooley; Dan Savage, Empire State Sales; Hauer Howard, Nonaal Theatres and Bob Murphy, Pioneer, were members of the exchange-men's expedition that advanced on Rochester, Tuesday and Wednesday, August 2 and 3 to sign up contracts for fall business with Rochester exhibitors. Ed Fay of Providence was in town and conferred with the men.

Hugh Rennie, manager of the First National office, reports the sign-up of contracts for the showing of the company's big specials at the Elmwood, Victoria and Regent theatres. J. E. Dickson, formerly with Robertson-Cole, has joined the F. N. sales staff. Hugh Rennie and Murray Hawkins toured the territory the week of August 9.

E. O. Weinberg of the Strand theatre had a bunched presentation of Wanda Hawley in "Miss Hobbs," for the Rain bow club of the Kemmore Y. W. C. A. on Friday evening, August 6, which drew a capacity audience.

George W. King, owner of the Lyric theatre, Binghamton, has purchased the Laurel theatre in the same city. The Laurel was owned by Timothy E. Carroll, who leased it to Louis W. Goodman, proprietor of the Court theatre. Mr. King will take possession of the house September 1.

The musicians at the Winter Garden and Mozart theatres in Jamestown, N. Y., are on strike. The scale demanded is $49 a week. It is reported that the managers of these houses made a compromise offer which was rejected.

S. W. McKelvey is the president of the new producing company formed in Bolivar, N. Y., to produce C. M. Van Curen's new book "The Wolf of Wall Street." The company is capitalized at $100,000. Mr. Van Curen and Arthur Los Angeles to aid in the direction of the production.

Robins speed indicators have been installed in the screening room and the orchestra pit of Shea's Hippodrome, which enables the management to get perfect synchronization of music accompanying the films. The instruments are also being installed in the Shea Criterion.

Frank Scully, former manager of the New Haven branch for Famous Players-

Lasky and Louis Wiener, formerly with the Kinemacolor company in Boston, have been engaged by Manager Allan S. Moritz as members of the F. P. L. sales staff.

Harry E. Lotz, manager of the Real-art office has signed a contract with Potter and Newton for the showing of Real-art subjects in the Andrews theatre, Salamanca, Columbia and Majestic theatres, Erie, Pa., and Columbia and Library theatres, Warren, Pa.

T. W. Brady, local representative for Associated Producers, toured the territory the week of August 9 renewing acquaintances with exhibitors and explaining the A. P. plan.

CLEVELAND

George P. Jacobs, manager of the Masterpiece Film Exchange, Cleveland, just returned from New York and announces that he has bought for distribution in Ohio the third Olive Tell production, "Wings of Pride;" "Blind Love," featuring Lucille Cotton; a seven-reel spectacular feature, called "A Common Level;" and the Harry Carey two-reel re-issues; and some startling features to be announced later.

Mr. Jacobs says that it looks like a big year for the independents, and the wise exhibitors and the exhibitors will keep dates open for the big things that are on the way.

The Ohio Film Classics, an independent motion picture exchange with headquarters in Cleveland, has recently been reorganized with Fred G. Scram, W. B. Papineau and V. L. Scram at the helm. Instead of devoting all their time to the exploitation of one big feature production at a time as heretofore, Ohio Film Classics will go into the feature distribution on a much larger scale and will start the season with a full line of products to be announced later.

Shorty Hamilton has just completed his six weeks' engagement in Ohio, where he has been making personal appearances at the motion picture theatres under the auspices of the Ohio Film Classics. He has left for the coast to make a series of two-reel western pictures for Victor Krenner Film Features.

H. A. Bandy, in charge of the local fortunes of Associated Producers, Inc., is temporarily located at 318 Slone Bldg., until the new Slone and Film Building is completed in the fall.

Sheldon Lewis saw himself as the featured member of the cast in "The Silent Barrier" for the first time last Friday night, when the picture was screened privately at the Hippodrome, Cleveland, before several hundred invited guests, through the courtesy of the W. W. Hodgkinson Corporation. Mr. Lewis was appearing at the Hippodrome last week in a sketch with Miss Virginia Pearson. This was the first time he had seen the picture completed and he was delighted with the result. So were the exhibitors present, all of whom had a good word to say for the picture. Mr. Lewis met many of the exhibitors who were anxious to congratulate him upon his successful screen work.

SAN DIEGO

The Ocean Beach theatre has been re-opened after being closed for a long time. It will be conducted again as a motion picture house under the management of J. E. Brink of Armstrong & Brink.

R. E. Hicks, owner and manager of the Cabrill theatre, has inaugurated a 16-piece orchestra, with Emmett Robert Gader as organist and musical director. Mr. Gader was for some years director of the orchestra at the Michigan theatre in Chicago. Manager Hicks also has established a new schedule of prices, of admission, including his matinee prices of 15, 30 and 40 cents for front, middle and rear sections respectively, and evening prices at 30, 40 and 55 cents, war tax included in each case. His former prices were 15, 25 and 35 for matinee and 25, 35 and 50 for evening, with war tax extra.

Motiograph De Luxe

Whenever a motion picture projector is to be operated hundreds of miles away from its place of manufacture, unquestionably, the biggest item in its favor is its dependability under all conditions of service.

If it costs five dollars to have a projector break down within a stone's throw of where it is made, it will cost many times that to have it break down hundreds of miles from where it is manufactured.

THE MOTIOGRAPH—A LEADER MANY YEARS — HAS ESTABLISHED AN ENVIABLE REPUTATION FOR BEING ALWAYS ON THE JOB.

It is built to stand the wear, and give perfect projection. Every user will tell you that you cannot wear out the gears or the sliding disc which connects the framer to mechanism. Other parts will give you that same dependable service.

In hundreds of theatres throughout the United States it is providing that faultless projection which has done so much toward elevating the motion picture industry to its present high plane.

FOR A SPACE OF MANY YEARS THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. COMPANY HAS HAD AN EARNED REPUTATION FOR RELIABILITY AND SQUARE DEALING.

Chicago's Handsome Panacea to Have Excellent Ventilation

Importance of Fresh Air Appreciated in Design of This Theatre

CHICAGO, not to be outdone in theatre construction by other large cities in the country, has constructed and is now constructing some of the handsomest theatres in the United States, and the most recent of these is the Panacea theatre, owned and operated by Lubliner and Trinz of Chicago, who expect to have the structure complete in time for opening in the early fall.

The Panacea theatre, with its large seating capacity of about 4,000 seats, was planned and designed by Mr. Walter W. Ahlschlager, one of Chicago's foremost architects, and it can truthfully be stated that Mr. Ahlschlager, in his plans, has left nothing to be desired in the way of modern equipment for the comfort of Chicago's moving picture public.

One of the most important items to be considered in the equipment of the Panacea was the cooling, heating and ventilation, and after careful consideration of the various systems on the market, it was decided to install the Typhoon System, manufactured by the Typhoon Fan Co., New York City. Cooperating with Mr. Ahlschlager, the Typhoon engineering department laid out a complete system that will thoroughly cool and ventilate the entire house during the warm weather, while at the same time, the system also provides for the heating and ventilation during the winter months.

The Typhoon System is based on a common sense principle. Instead of small high-powered fans operating at high speed, as is used by other systems, the Typhoon System uses fans of large diameter, running at comparatively low speed. All the duct work is entirely done away with, thus securing a considerable saving not only in the cost of installation, but also in the cost of operation. The primary idea underlying the duct system has always been to secure a smooth, even distribution of air. It required, in addition to a heavy outlay for the ducts themselves, a high-pressure fan with a motor powerful enough to counteract the resistance which the ducts offered to the passage of the air. Not a little of the electric current consumed by the duct system has been due directly to this resistance. The Typhoon installation in the Panacea theatre consists of two No. 112 Typhoon Single Sets, one No. 212 Typhoon Twin Set, four No. 19 Typhoon Single Sets, and one No. 28 Typhoon Twin Set.

For heating purposes during the winter months, the two No. 112 Typhoon Single Sets, which are located in special chambers in the attic space, draw the air through 5,244 square feet of vento heaters and discharge this air in the theatre through grilles located on each side of the stage. This equipment will blow seventeen and a half millions of cubic feet of fresh heated air per hour into the theatre. To heat the theatre before opening up, the air can be recirculated through the auditorium by the No. 28 Typhoon Twin Set, located in a specially constructed chamber on the roof of the theatre at the back of the balcony. This No. 28 Typhoon Twin set takes the air from the grilles located underneath the balcony, and the grilles located in the ceiling in the lounging room, and returns the air to the No. 112 Heating Typhoons, located in the attic space on each side of the stage. Thus, by this recirculating, a considerable saving in consumption of fuel is obtained.

By a simple damper arrangement, this same No. 28 Typhoon Twin Set is made to exhaust the air when necessary. For the cooling and ventilation of the Panacea,

KENTUCKY

Bowling Green—The Crescent Amusement Company, through its local manager, J. P. Masters, has made application for a building permit for the erection of a

Crump Theatre in Columbus, Ind., to be Remodelled and Enlarged to 2000 Seat Capacity Over $40,000 to Be Expended by C. E. Rogers in Endeavor to Make Theatre Best in Indiana

R EPORTS are often received that tell of alterations that increase a theatre's seating capacity fifty to a hundred per cent, but it is unusual to find a case where the seats have been tripled. This, however, is the plain fact in the Crump theatre, which has a capacity of 976 but which with alterations completed will be able to accommodate nearly 2,500. Just how C. E. Rogers, the manager, intends to carry out these changes may be of some interest to other officials who are thinking of enlarging their own theatres.

As the theatre now stands, it has 976 seats and is equipped with a stage 60 feet wide, 33 feet deep and 55 feet high, a stage that has been found ample in size for any show traveling that territory. Inasmuch as at one time 68 people, 5 horses and two carloads of scenery were taken care of on the stage it was felt by Mr. Rogers that this part of the theatre needed but little attention. He did feel sure, however, that the seating capacity should be materially increased.

To gain this, he is removing two store rooms in front as well as the two apartments on the second floor front, and is also shortening his present lobby, which is 59 feet long, to 49 feet. With these removals and changes the entire building will be devoted exclusively to the theatre. When the alterations have been finished the capacity $125,000 theatre building. The new theatre will be located on Main street, and includes the building now occupied by the Elite theatre. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 1,500.

LOUISIANA

Lake Charles—Arthur Taylor announces plans for a modern moving picture theatre in the building of the Lake Charles Jewelry Company. Knapp & East, local contractors, will do the work of remodeling the building.

New Orleans—The town of Opelousa is to get a $60,000 motion picture theatre, to be built by a corporation headed by Adolphe Jacobs and Alex. Bloomenstiel, of Donaldville.

Eunice—It is reported that a new theatre to cost $100,000, will be started soon in this town.

MASSACHUSETTS

Boston—The Fleischman Construction Company, of New York, has started work on the foundation of Loew's theatre building at the corner of Massachusetts avenue and Norway street. The theatre will have a seating capacity of about 4,000.

will be close to 2,500 and Columbus will boast a first class house. There will not be a post on the floor. All the beams will be of reinforced concrete with the floors of the same material and with the latest conveniences for its patrons. A mezzanine floor of unusual beauty will be added. There will be a large, roomy fireproof projection room with two machines having a direct throw to the screen of 120 feet.

One feature of the new house will be that the crowd leaving will not come into contact with the entering throng. The entering patrons will come into the foyer at the center of the building and directed from there to the different locations. When leaving, the audience on the main floor leave at either of the front corners of the theatre, while those in the balcony leave by a special exit.

About $30,000 will be expended for the alterations, exclusive of the plumbing, heating and electrical wiring. With the latter the total cost will approximate $40,000.

Pennsylvania Showman to Erect New House

Max Stahl, Pennsylvania exhibitor, recently announced ground would shortly be broken for a new $75,000 house in Farrell.

The Better Upholstery Material

Duratex is the Better Upholstery Material for Theatre Seats—and The Most Economical

BEAUTY and durability are the outstanding characteristics of Duratex, the Better Furniture Upholstery.

Here is a material that fits in admirably with the needs of Moving Picture Theatres.

It comes in a wide variety of grains and colors—fits in with any decoration scheme or color motif.

It stands up wonderfully under the hardest usage—it does not crack or check or scuff and it never spews. That is to say no oil ever comes to the surface to soil dainty clothing as often happens.

This last feature is due to the exclusive Duratex process—and for this one reason alone Duratex is particularly suitable for seat upholstery—to say nothing of its finer, richer appearance and its longer wear.

If you are building a new theatre or planning to re-upholster your theatre seats get the Duratex facts first. Duratex will save you money.

Extension Reel for General Use

THERE are a multitude of places about the theatre, studio and laboratory where flexible cord extensions have to be used for lighting up dark places, for locating trouble or for emergency illumination. On account of the hard usage to which the insulated cord on these extensions are placed the cord deteriorates rapidly, until within a short time the covering is gone and the protection from electrical shock becomes nil. An entirely new cord is then necessary.

To overcome this evil, an Ohio manufacturer has devised an automatic extension reel which has already found wide use in other industries. Believing that his invention is applicable to the motion picture field he is making a special appeal to the purchasers in that industry.

The illustration shows the method of working. The reel, which is nine inches in diameter and two inches wide, is simple in construction and durable. It is equipped with twenty-five feet of reinforced weatherproof cord. The swivel head allows the reel to swing in any direction and when the lamp has been carried to the desired place an automatic lock takes effect and holds the reel from further action. To release the reel, a slight pull removes the lock and the cord is automatically rewound on the reel.

This reel should be especially adapted to

Automatic Reel

"back stage" work where the ordinary cord has short life. It should also find wide usage in laboratories since the automatic feature would prevent the cord from lying on the damp floor through the carelessness of employees.

Shea Acquires New Theatre

THE Shea Amusement Company of Buffalo has acquired control of the new house being built by W. F. MacDonald at Hertel and North Park avenues and will name the house Shea's North Park theatre, according to an announcement by Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome. The house will be operated in conjunction with other theatrical interests in Buffalo which will be announced at a later date.

The house when completed will cost $200,000 and will have a seating capacity of 1,600 on one floor. The proprietors will be the Shea Amusement Company and the owners, the Hertel Avenue Theatre Company. Henry L. Spann, 52 West Chippewa street, is the architect. The theatre will open about November 15.

The outside dimensions of the house will be 150 by 85 feet and the inside measurements practically the same. The interior color scheme will be old ivory and rose and there will be a large stage adaptable for scenic sets, such as are put on at Shea's Hippodrome by Mr. Franklin. There will also be dressing rooms for soloists and other entertainers who will appear from time to time.

The seats will be arranged on one floor with five aisles and a composition floor covering and carpets will be used. The lighting will be direct and indirect. The projection room, which will be 15 by 30 feet, will be in the rear over the mezzanine. The equipment will include Simplex projection machines, Klugel spot-lights and a transverters. The size of the picture, when projected on the screen, which will be of local make, will be 12.8 by 18.6.

The lobby of the North Park will be 20 by 40 feet and the decorations will include rich tapestries and panels in gray and gold. The ticket office will be of glass and marble and will be equipped with an Automatic ticket selling machine. Included in the special equipment of the house will be dictaphones, aisle lights, exit lights and special scenic effects on stage. There will be a full stage equipment with lighting on dimmers. The heating will be of the direct and indirect system and the typhoon cooling system will be used. The front will be of terra cotta brick. There will be a large marquee with monogram letters. A large electric light will be used in front. It will be of upright style and nitrogen lamps, similar to those on the Criterion, New York, will be used.

The entire house on Hertel avenue will be wired on the three circuit plan, which will permit the diffusion of colors and the carrying out of an appropriate atmosphere in keeping with the theatre. Only the best in motion pictures will be shown at the North Park, the policy being to maintain the same high standard set by other Shea theatres.

The North Park is in the midst of the rapidly growing Hertel avenue district and on the edge of the high-class Central Park residential section, so that the house will cater to a select patronage. The town of Kenmore, nearby, will also furnish a large number of patrons.

Five Buffalo theatres are now under control of the Shea company and another is building. It is the big Metropolitan in Main street, near the Hippodrome. Among the houses under control of the Shea interests are the Court street vaudeville house, the Hippodrome, the Majestic and the Gayety.

DU PONT
FABRIKOID

When Theatre Seats are Censored

YOUR upholstery will have a clean bill-of-health, if it is Fabrikoid. For more than the beauty of this upholstery material, is the safeguard of its sanitary surface.

Fabrikoid absolutely excludes germs and germ-laden dust. It absorbs no perspiration. It is inherently clean and cleanable. Soap and water keep it healthful and beautiful.

And Fabrikoid, in rich colors to harmonize with any interior, is an artistic covering of comfortable softness. It is non-fading, non-staining and always pliable.

Fabrikoid greatly outwears other theatre seat coverings. It is not only extremely rugged and of immense tensile strength, but it escapes the rotting effect of perspiration that destroys so much theatre upholstery.

Insist on Fabrikoid for your theatre seats. Write to us for samples and complete information.

during the summer months, the cooling equipment consists also of the two No. 112 Typhoon Single Sets (in summer the heating stacks being cut down and by-passed), and in addition there is also used the No. 212 Typhoon Twin Set, located in a specially constructed chamber over the stage. This equipment takes fresh air from high above the street and blows it into the theatre through grilles located at the proscenium arch, and on each side of the stage.

Above the balcony there is also located in addition to the above equipment in a specially constructed chamber in the attic space, the four No. 19 Typhoon Single Sets. These are arranged in pairs and also blow large volumes of fresh air directly into the theatre through circular grilles located just over the balcony. The air is blown out of the theatre through the entrance doors and through the grilles located in the ceiling in the back of the balcony, assisted by a No. 28 Typhoon Twin Set which, during the summer, is used for exhausting purposes.

Through the use of the entire Typhoon Cooling System there is blown into the Panacea every hour, fifty-six million cubic feet of pure fresh air, creating a steady refreshing breeze throughout the entire theatre without draft.

Owing to the fact that the theatre is not yet completed, we are unable to reproduce actual photographs. However, the accompanying cuts will show a reproduction of the architect's drawing of the exterior of the Panacea. The line cuts herewith will give a general idea of the installation and location of the different Typhoons.

These two illustrations show the scheme of ventilation as worked out for the Panacea.

Questions
AnsweredScreen Illumination and Elements of Condenser Design

A Paper by Dr. H. P. Gage, of the Corning Glass Works*

Dimensions of Elements
Objective

The equivalent focus of the objective is fixed by the size of the picture which it is desired to project and the distance to the screen (throw). The necessary focus can be found in any of the numerous tables which are published on the subject. For a given theatre, the focus is fixed by the condition in that theatre.

The diameter of the objective should be as large as can be obtained in order to utilize as much of the light passing through the aperture as is possible. When using the arc lamp as an illuminant, experience has shown that it is much easier to obtain an even screen illumination free from shadows and dark corners with a large than with a small objective. With the incandescent lamp the entire area of the objective is utilized to image each point of the picture, hence a large objective will give a more brilliantly illuminated screen than will a small one. See Figs. 10 and 11. Objectives are regularly manufactured with free diameter as great as 27/16 in. and equivalent foci of 5.62 in. or greater. The objectives studied in the preparation of this article has an equivalent focus of 5.62 in. One had a free diameter of 27/16 in. and the other 15/8 in., i. e., photographing speaking they had a speed of $f/2.3$ and $f/3.6$ respectively. It is possible to make an objective of even greater speed than this and at least one has been made up on special order with a speed of as great as $f/2.0$ which worked successfully with motion pictures. The head of some machines will not take these large-sized objectives. This is unfortunate as it imposes a limitation upon such machines which will be increasingly felt in the future. In general, the largest commercial objectives of 5 3/4 in. focus or greater have a free diameter of 2 1/2 in. and those of shorter focus have a smaller diameter, so that the ratio between diameter and focus remains about the same.

LESSONS ON PRACTICAL ELECTRICITY

The series of valuable lessons on this subject has been suspended for this issue only. They will be resumed in next week's Projection Department.

With the exception of Fig. 4 in which the diameter of the objective is drawn absurdly large in order to make clear the formation of the image of the condenser, the different optical parts are drawn correctly to scale, and the objective is drawn with 5 1/2 in. equivalent focus, 2 7/16 in. free diameter corresponding to the photographs.

Aperture

The aperture opening (i. g.) shown in drawings is the standard width of 29/32 in.

Condenser

In a given projection apparatus the dimensions of the objective and the aperture are fixed, and the condenser and light source are the elements which must be varied in order to secure efficiency. While the condenser to be described was developed to meet the needs of the incandescent lamp the optical reasoning applies equally well to any light source.

As illustrated in Fig. 6 the clearance between the surface of the condenser and the filament L must be sufficient to allow room for the bulb. The greatest angle of light receivable by this type of condenser for efficient operation is 78 or 80 and the reflector obviously must cover at least as great an angle as the condenser. The large diameter reflector (R) is preferred as it is farther away and does not get as hot as does the smaller one. For the largest bulb shown G-T-28 a condenser 47/16 in. in diameter with 2 1/2 in. focus answers well. The smaller and more compact condensers give the same efficiency but as they afford less space between condenser and aperture plate (Fig. 2) they are not much used for professional projection.

The general elements in the design of the corrugated condenser are illustrated in Fig. 1. This illustrates the method of bending the light originating from a single point of the light source. The fundamental principles involved in screen illumination are: first, the illumination must be even, without streaks or shadows, and

Fig. 7—Filament of ordinary stereopticon lamp backed by spherical reflector.

Fig. 8—Filament of special monoplane filament projection Masda lamp backed by spherical reflector. After burning for some time the filaments bend slightly so that there are small dark places between the filaments even when using the reflector.

Fig. 9—Apparatus used in testing condensers. This shows the lamp, reflector, condenser, aperture, large objective, and screen placed at the aerial image of the condenser. The dark rings shown in this image do not appear on a screen placed at the usual distance for viewing the pictures.

second, that it must be sufficiently intense. The light from each point of the light source is collected in such a way that it evenly illuminates the entire aperture. This is necessary with the incandescent lamp, as it is made up of a number of sharply defined streaks of light separated by dark spaces. If the condenser design or adjustment is such that the illumination from a single point is non-uniform then the illumination from an incandescent lamp will be streaked.

The relation between the diameter and distance of the condenser from the aperture for maximum efficiency is fixed once the diameter and focus of the objective are determined upon. For a given point P in the objective to be effective in transmitting light to the screen from all points of the picture between f and g, Fig. 2 it must receive light between a1 and b1 of the larger condenser or between a2 and b2 of the smaller one. If the condenser is located too far away as in the case of C3 (12 in. separation between condenser and aperture) and especially if the condenser is diaphragmed down by the slide holder permanently fastened in front of it, and is now too often the case, it is evident that the objective is not functioning to full efficiency. (See Fig. 10, c and d.) Light bent too sharply as in the case of the ray a f_k is not useful nor would light such as d-g-m collected by an extra ring or reflector outside the condenser serve any useful purpose. Such light while striking the film, would unnecessarily heat it, and entirely missing the objective, would never reach the screen. Thus is determined the proper proportion between condenser and objective.

Position of the Shutter

There has been considerable discussion as to the proper position of the shutter. When the shutter is located in front of the objective (outside shutter) it is desirable to place it in the narrowest part of the beam. With the arc lamp as an illuminant, there is a restriction in the beam at the position of the condenser image similar to C' in Fig. 4 and this is the preferable position for the shutter. With the incandescent lamp, however, owing to the closeness of the condenser to the objective, its image is larger than the objective, and the narrowest part of the beam is immediately in front of the objective. This is also illustrated in Fig. 3 where the extreme edge rays of light diverge from the objective as does the lower ray in the illustration.

A Plea for More Active Co-operation Between Exchange, Theatre and Projectionist

What One Observing and Broad Minded Projectionist Has to Say on This Important Subject

During the last six months the Projection department of the News has carried a number of interesting and instructive articles on the condition of film as encountered by the theatres, especially those in the smaller towns. But the best of all articles has just been received and we hasten to publish it for the benefit alike of Exchange Manager, Theatre Manager and Projectionist. If the publication of this letter does not create discussion between the three principals involved it is because neither one of the three cares a whit whether films are received from Exchanges in a fit condition for projection. If you as a Projectionist are having trouble with "poor service" clip this article and send it to the Manager of the Exchange with whom you do business.

The letter, which was written by E. C. Scobey, Projectionist at the Oriental theatre, Indianapolis, reads as follows:

TECHNICAL EDITOR, MOTION PICTURE NEWS:
From time to time I have read in the columns of the Projection Department of your valuable paper, articles written in regard to the condition of film and as to who is responsible for the same. I am very much interested in this subject and while I agree in part with the different writers I believe that the subject takes in more territory than they have mentioned and for that reason I would like to express my personal views on the subject and my reasons for having these views. No doubt there will be several who will not agree with me and may resent what I have to say, but as I am writing this with the hopes that it may do SOME ONE, SOME GOOD and if it does, then I will feel that I have done my bit, regardless of those that do not agree with me.

In the last sixteen years I have been employed as inspector on the bench of film exchanges, shipping clerk, in charge of the repair department and inspector on the road for exchanges. Projectionist and manager of theatres and editor of the projection department of a trade paper. At the present time I am projectionist, inspector of machines for two film exchanges and inspector of film service for Local No. 194—I. A. T. S.

ALPHA THEATER

Southern Theatre Equipment Co.
Atlanta, Ga.

Gentlemen:

In reply to your inquiry as to results being obtained from the two Power's 6-B machines with type "E" equipment which have recently been installed in the Criterion Theatre, I am glad to advise that they are most satisfactory in every respect.

One of the principal features under consideration in selecting new machines was the projection.

After a thorough trial, during which particular attention was paid to the steadiness, definition and brightness of the picture, the Power's machines were purchased.

In fact, the work of the Power's machines was such that we felt absolutely safe in placing an order for these machines for installation in the Metropolitan Theatre, which is now under construction.

Consistent with our action in selecting Power's machines, I do not hesitate to recommend this equipment to any exhibitor who is interested in offering his patrons high class projection.

Yours very truly,

E. of U. S. and Canada, and right here let me explain what is meant by inspector in Local No. 194. Our present contract with the exhibitors of the city has a clause in it which holds the projectionist responsible for any damage done to film where it is caused by negligence on the projectionist's part. This word negligence covers a multitude of sins and as some of the exchanges were sending out service that never saw an inspection bench and theatre managers did not seem to be interested or else they were unable to get results, so Local No. 194 appointed our business representative, Brother J. O. Benner and myself as a committee to investigate complaints coming from members of the Local on bad film.

We, the committee, wrote to each exchange that was doing business in this city and explained to him that we were not going to try to run his business or the theatre manager's either but that we did insist on his service being sent out in good condition. In case a complaint came to the inspection committee from the projectionist at a theatre, that the service was bad, then we called at the booth at once if possible and if we found the service in bad condition we notified the manager of the house that the projectionist on the job would not be responsible for any damage as long as he had to handle this film and at the same time we notified the manager of the exchange sending out this service, and asked him to take up the matter with his inspection department. We had a little trouble the first week or so but once the exchange managers found out that we were really trying to help and cooperate with them and that we would go after the projectionist that was careless in handling his film just as quick as we would complain about poor service, our troubles ended. We have a complaint once in a while which is to be expected but I believe that the exchange managers, theatre managers and projectionists of this city will agree with me when I say that film inspection and service has improved 100 per cent in the last three months and the one word COOPERATION gets ALL of the credit.

In my opinion, the cause for the condition of film can be divided into three divisions—namely exchange, projectionist and theatre manager.

Any one of these three can be the cause of poor condition of film and if all three would cooperate as they should we would have no more kicks on poor film.

I believe in the old adage "Charity begins at Home" and I also believe that the start of damaged film is in the exchange so will give my views on the evils of the exchanges first.

Remember, Mr. Exchange Manager, Mr. Projectionist and Mr. Theatre Manager, you may not be guilty of all of the things mentioned in this article and you may possibly not be guilty of any of them but if any part of the following belongs to you then for your own good and the good of the film industry in general, correct your faults and stop passing the buck from exchange to theatre and projectionist and vice versa.

The Film Exchange

Let us start with the film as it enters the exchange from the laboratories. Most of it comes in unmounted and is mounted by the head inspector or an assistant, ready to be put into service. It is a notorious fact that the new film is never mounted on a new, straight sided reel if there is an old reel lying around. The trouble starts when the film is mounted on the bent and crooked reel. I would like to ask the exchange manager to spend a few minutes of his valuable time as follows:—Go to your film vault and pick up at random a reel of your new film that is mounted up on a deformed reel, i. e., bent and crooked, and take it to your screenroom. Take your film inspectors along with you for the lesson that they will learn will be of great help to them and as they handle the film, it may do them some good. Have your projectionist thread up the machine with your sample reel, leaving both the upper and lower magazine doors open. You do not need any light from the lamp for this lesson. Have the projectionist start the machine and see what happens. You will see the reel in the top magazine wobble from one side to the other and if you pay close attention you will see that the film is put on a strain at its weakest point, the edge of the film and the sprocket holes. This occurs first on one side and then on the other. You do not have to be an expert projectionist to see what is happening to your new film. It leaves the top magazine, goes through the machine and into the lower magazine and the same thing happens again, it is pulled from one side to the other and is under a greater strain as a rule, because the lower reel is on a greater tension than the upper one. Remember Mr. Exchange Manager that this film when in service is used from three to ten and twelve times a day and with bent reels most of the time at that as most of the theatres use the reels that you send to them. Remember another thing, the bent reel is the cause of magazine valves being cut and ruined, did you know that? Look at the valves in the machine in your own projection room. You will find them out on both sides providing the machine has been in use very long. The exhibitor that pays you for service has to pay for magazine valves also. They do not cost a fortune but you can buy several new empty reels for what one valve costs. Let us go on with the reel of film that you have just been looking at in the projection room. It goes out into service and at the end of forty to sixty days, often sooner, your head inspector reports to you that this reel is ready for the junk and you are much surprised and wonder who the "OPERATOR" was that caused the damage. YOU, the exchange, is the one to blame and no one else. If you do not take enough interest in your own property to protect it how in the name of common sense do you expect anyone else to take care of it or take any interest in it? I mentioned the damage done by the bent reel to two gentlemen who hail from New York City and who represent one of the largest film concerns in the country and I took them into the screening room of their local exchange here and demonstrated the bent reel to them. They both agreed with me but gave this as an alibi: "We tried sending out new reels for a time but found that the "OPERATOR" sent back old ones instead of the new ones and reels cost too much to have them lost in this manner." I explained to them that no doubt the "OPERATORS" that kept the news reels had them framed and hanging up in their booths as souvenirs as they were not used to seeing such things.

(This article will be continued in next issue)

A Real Automatic Arc Control

The Peerless Automatic Arc Control is made for use on all projectors having direct current at the arc. The device is so sensitive that less than one sixty-fourth of an inch increase in gap will start the motor and bring the carbon back to the proper position. Operation is so slow and delicate that the carbon movement is not noticeable to the eye.

Practically frees the operator from giving any attention to the arc, and enables him to attend to other duties. Durably made of best materials. Can be adjusted to maintain any desired arc gap.

With Explanations of the Various Systems Now in Use

By H. F. O'Brien and H. A. Campe

As a general rule, and particularly where heavy currents at low voltages must be handled, it is desirable from a standpoint of copper economy to install the three-wire distribution system. Most studio electricians have found that the three-wire system has many advantages. For example, a two-wire system handling 300 KW., at 125 volts, would require that each side of the line be of sufficient capacity to carry 2400 amperes. This would call for 4,000,000 CM. of copper for each side, or 8,000,000 CM. of copper per circuit. Such an installation would require very large conduit and would be very difficult to install.

If the same load were to be handled on a three-wire system, each conductor would be required to handle 1200 amperes which would call for 2,000,000 CM. in copper and as most code regulations demand that the neutral or third wire be the same size as the two outside wires, it would take three conductors, of 2,000,000 CM. each. Thus, in this case, 6,000,000 CM. of copper are required for three-wire distribution where it is found that 8,000,000 CM. of copper would be required to handle the same load on a two-wire system.

It is evident, from the above example, that a 25 per cent. saving in copper would be effected by using a three-wire instead of a two-wire system. This saving would be somewhat further increased because of lower installation costs. There is only one argument against the use of a three-wire system and that is the proposition of unbalancing the system. This subject will be discussed under Classification of Apparatus.

III. CLASSIFICATION OF APPARATUS

The characteristics of the incoming power supply with respect to voltage and frequency regulation will determine largely the type of equipment to be used. It would be difficult here to make suggestions that would satisfactorily cover each and every installation but the suggestions given later in this paper should, at least, act as a good guide.

In the case of selecting additional apparatus for the studio it is wise to consider equipment similar in characteristics to the apparatus already installed, as undoubtedly, parallel operation of units will be desired. In other words, it would not be good engineering practice to parallel rotary converters with motor-generator sets unless such a scheme would be recommended by a reputable engineer who, after making a careful study of the conditions, would guarantee satisfactory operation.

There are only two practical means of converting alternating current to direct current in the capacity required in the studio; namely, rotary converters and motor-generator sets. We will first consider some of the inherent characteristics of each, for these characteristics determine which type of apparatus will best be suited for the installation.

1. ROTARY CONVERTERS. The rotary converter is a single-unit machine which received its power from the incoming alternating current line and furnishes direct current at the desired voltage. Power is supplied to the rotary through a bank of transformers having primary or high-tension windings designed for the voltage of the power circuit. The low tension or secondary windings are designed, in the case of a three-phase rotary, to give a voltage of .62 times the direct current voltage desired. In the case of a six-phase diametrically connected rotary, this ratio is .72.

1a. TWO-WIRE ROTARIES. While the rotary may be considered ideal, it can only be recommended for studio's application under ideal conditions and these should be very carefully investigated both for present and future possibilities. Inasmuch as the direct-current voltage of a rotary varies in direct proportion to the change of either the voltage or frequency of the circuit supply, the rotary should only be selected for use on a power line having ideal voltage and frequency regulation, since constant direct-current voltage is essential for correct studio illumination. Graphic charts should be taken covering a period of at least two weeks to definitely determine whether or not the conditions of the power circuit will permit this application. The variation in either voltage or frequency should not exceed 3 per cent.

1b. THREE-WIRE ROTARIES. If it is desired to obtain a three-wire direct-current system using a rotary this can be accomplished by bringing out the neutral point of the transformers which would be interconnected star. The maximum balance that is allowable under such conditions is 25 per cent. of full load current.

Either two or three-wire rotaries can be paralleled on the same bus without difficulty. It is understood, of course, that each rotary requires its own bank of transformers for the alternating-current end and therefore the cost of the complete installation will closely approximate the cost of a motor-generator installation.

The new Thomas Ince Studios at Culver City, California, are securing excellent results from their 250 KW. three-wire rotary installation. In the case of this installation, constant voltage on the 2200-volt power circuit is obtained by means of an induction regulator installed in the sub-station of the Southern California Edison Company.

Lasky Studio to be Rewired

ACCORDING to an announcement by Charles F. Eytan, general manager of the Lasky studio, plans are almost complete and work will soon be started upon the mammoth project of rewiring the three big enclosed stages of that studio so as to provide for greater lighting facilities in film production and increase the electrical capacity of the equipment. The present equipment was installed some time ago and production work has so greatly increased that this equipment is inadequate to fill present and future requirements.

Arrangements have already been made for the installation of a high tension switchboard and a low tension switchboard, so designed as to give either alternating or direct current to any stage box, and more than doubling the capacity of the present stage boxes by which the electrical lighting energy is transmitted to the arc lights.

The first carload has already been ordered of 500,000 circular mill cable, which is just twice the size of the cable now in use, which averages 250,000 circular mills. A carload of conduit has also been contracted for. More carloads of both cable and conduit will be needed before the work is complete.

With the new wiring, it will be possible to light up an entire big setting with the energy supplied through one cable, connected with one stage box, whereas, in the past, it has been necessary to run several smaller cables and use, in most cases, more than one stage box, to supply the needed electric power.

Excavation under the three big stages for the installation of the conduit pipes will be the first step in the big project.

The cost of the new system will approximate about $150,000 and Frederick S. Mills, electrical illuminating engineer at the Lasky studio, will personally supervise the work of installation.

Under the new system, much small surplus cable will be dispensed with, the work of lighting will be greatly simplified and a far greater efficiency will be attained.

At a banquet and election meeting held recently of the newly formed Electrical Illuminating Engineering Society of Motion Picture Producers, Frederick S. Mills, chief electrical illuminating engineer of the Lasky studio in Hollywood, was elected president of the society for the ensuing year.

This is an organization composed of motion picture studio electrical engineers and its purpose is to promote the efficiency and attain greater perfection in studio electrical illumination for motion picture production by the exchange of ideas among the various studio representatives and by cooperation with the manufacturers.

New Spotlight for Theatre and Studio

The Acme special spotlight is adjustable from 35 to 75 amperes and is constructed throughout of heavy steel with a special tilt for all angles. It is equipped with a 6" condensing lens which gives a small bright spot. The rheostat is interchangeable for use on 120 volts or 240 volts. Each "spot" is accompanied by 25 feet of stage cable. The Acme is manufactured by Clifton R. Isaacs, Inc., of New York City.

Music for Your Theatre

No. 11

Utilizing the Newspaper

By Charles D. Isaacson

Author, "Face to Face with Great Musicians"

PUBLICITY is swinging over to the theatres which are musical headquarters. Witness this fact—in the cities where managers have taken the lead in this direction, they have been rewarded by ample space in the newspapers.

There are several reasons for this.

The novelty of fine music in the local picture theatre is considered good news "stuff" by the editors. Of course after a competitor has taken the bite out of the novelty, the news value of the step lessens. But every original step in the musical direction with most news editors stands a mighty good chance of getting by.

But you must not forget that there is the music editor. He is always looking for material. He is your new avenue for entering the newspaper columns, when you add music. You gain an additional method of getting space. If you are the first theatre to go after the musical programs, he will be willing and ready to tell your story. No matter how much has already been done, unless he's a fool, he'll keep you well listed in his columns.

You must not forget that the musical-movie news matter is comparatively a new feature even in the cities where it is most successful, and that the music part of your program stands a better show of getting space than the straight film publicity. It stands to reason—everybody's sending along film paragraphs, but you'll be lonelier with your music paragraphs.

When you go after the musical feature in a big way in your theatre, I would summon the musical editors for a chat or a luncheon, and I would talk to them in this way:

"As the writer of musical news, you are interested in every measure which will spread an interest in music. Now we're going to make a very serious venture. We're going to back our faith in music, by spending a lot of money on the real composers and interpreters.

"In our theatre we will be presenting high-class musical entertainments to so many thousands of our patrons.

"Now here is the point which must appeal to you. We are virtually doing missionary work for music. Today how many of the readers of your newspaper are reading the music column? A comparatively small percentage, you must admit. Now we will be increasing your possible music readers by many thousands of people a year.

"We present the project we are carrying on as worthy of your earnest, conscientious support, because, irrespective of the returns to us, what we are doing is just as important in its art aspects as the enterprises of any symphony orchestra, concert artists or traveling concert companies.

"We present the project to you also for its civic and local aspects—we are doing our part to make this city more musical.

"Now we feel that the musical commentators of our city will not be slow to draw attention to our work, and through the splendid power of their pens make music-lovers understand what it means to them. In fact, we are certain that our local music writers will not be behind their brethren in the metropolitan dailies, who have written lengthy eulogies of the film theatres which essayed this task under no more trying conditions than that which we face.

"Finally, to those of you who might feel that the film music is less worthy of your serious attention than that of the concert hall, let us say that this objection has long since been removed by the attitude of the most distinguished writers on music in the country—such men as Huneke, Krehbiel, Phillip Hale, Donaghey, Sanborn and others,—all of whom have written serious criticisms of picture theatre programs."

This is the point of view with which the music writers are to be approached.

And let me say in passing, that even if you are already well launched on your musical activities and you have not been given the attention by the music reporters you deserve—it is not too late. Call them in now and show what you are doing, and insist upon the missionary element and art-spread factors in your activities. I am sure it will work.

Then there is still another set of writers to be considered. In many cities the newspapers have started pages known as "Our Family Music" (named after my page in New York), "Home Music," "Music for Everyone," etc. These pages are attempting to discuss music in a very popular style. The editors are much more alive to the new developments in the art than some of the old-fashioned dyed-in-the-wool conservatives, who still look upon the picture house as a place of iniquity. These new men and women in music are not critics. They are broad-minded protagonists of a beautiful art, eager to see it spread among all the people. They will listen eagerly to you.

If there is not such a page in your city, you will be aiding your own ends to investigate what is being done elsewhere and show your editors why they ought to adopt one. If you like, you can mention my department in New York, which has brought thousands of new readers to the Globe and has lifted the newspaper to first place among all the evening newspapers in point of musical advertising carried. It has been one of the prestige and good-will builders for the newspaper and is conceded to be one of the biggest features of the oldest and finest newspaper in the United States!

There is a point in the success of the Globe even for the theatre manager.

Think of it! The first paper to use music as it ought to be used (instead of being cramped away in a little corner) has gained thousands of new patrons and hundreds of thousands of dollars. That indicates what can come back to the musical picture house.

In any event, irrespective of the lineup among the newspapers, if you move strategically, you can be sure of very liberal publicity because of your music activities.

You will remember that last week I mentioned ways of making alliances with the local musicians, music-clubs, teachers, choruses, etc. Now you can readily understand that the music patrons and art leaders command the respect of the editors. Hence you will see that every alliance you make with music-folks assures you of additional newspaper attention. The same point should be applied to the alliances with the publishers and to all those other ideas which I plan to present to you from time to time.

Now, I wish in closing this article, to present a very daring idea which if I were present in your place, I would not hesitate to try to engineer.

The newspaper is the mouthpiece for public opinion. It responds to the call of its community. Now when you show your local editors that the city wants lots of music facts—that will bring about an eager attempt on the part of the newspaper to do their duty.

Thus, if you should get together some off-afternoon in your theatre the entire music fraternity of your city—teachers, dealers, artists, club people, etc.—and you should put in writing a statement from them all, signed—asking for larger recognition of music in the newspaper columns, the editors would "sit up and take notice." You might even bring in the rival theatre managers, or not, as you like. You might even take a week's patronage of your theatre, with their signatures and send them along.

Each person in your conference might send a letter separately to the editors, or might call or telephone where possible.

Your part in the proceedings will be to foster the united efforts to get larger newspaper attention for music and be closely identified with the movement.

Once you become a factor in music your game should be to play every card which will make your name and your theatre name part of the public conception of music. The more musical interest, then the more your benefit. It's like a game of ping-pong. You strike it over and it's struck back to you.

If you find yourself against a peculiar newspaper situation let me help you handle it. If you come into contact with an editor who says, "Well show us what we ought to do," let me hear about it; perhaps I can help there, too.

(Next week Mr. Isaacson will write "Ways of Announcing Your Music Venture.")

Questions and Answers Discussion

My Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I am greatly interested in your articles contained in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and will appreciate your kindness in suggesting anything which will contribute to the success of our orchestra.

We have the representative theatre of the city,—orchestra of 12 men with piano and pipe-organ. Men are all capable of handling the best class of music. Anything offered personally or through your magazine will surely be considered most favorably. Can you suggest where I can obtain a first class organist for the relief periods during orchestra sessions? Hours are not more than two (2) each day. Salary per week, $50.—Edward C. Marquardt, Leader, Strand Theatre, Akron, Ohio.

(Note: Several names were sent to Mr. Marquardt through the Musical Exchange.)

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I have read with interest your frequent articles in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, particularly your last article inviting musical directors seeking positions to get in touch with you.

I have had ten years experience as an organist and orchestra director in the better class of picture theatres and was the past winter the director of a fifteen-piece orchestra in a new house, but resigned this position mainly for the reason that the management of the house felt that they could not support such a large orchestra. I was engaged there mainly for the reason of the strong competition existing at that time. This factor was finally eliminated, therefore the reason for reduction in personnel. I prefer a house only where an orchestra of twelve or more is used. Any manager desiring up to the minute musical programs and artistic setting for the pictures would not regret obtaining my services.

I am in personal touch at all times with plenty of good musicians and can furnish any number of musicians at a moment's notice. This information for the owner or proprietor of a new theatre.

I would appreciate your putting me in touch with a responsible manager desiring someone in my line, and would be glad to see him personally. I can furnish references of the highest order.—Lester Huff, Orpheum Theatre, Elkhart, Ind.

(Mr. Huff's name has been sent to several managers through the News Musical Exchange.)

From a Famous Composer

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

When I learned that you had been appointed editor of the music column of MOTION PICTURE NEWS I realized at once that at last a motion picture class sheet had taken a proper step; it had chosen a music editor without an axe to grind, one who neither had his own music to sell nor was bounden to promote a particular publishing concern—and it had chosen a man who is a musical enthusiast, a recognized authority on matters and persons musical and an impartial critic who seeks ever to do constructive work.

I congratulate you and MOTION PICTURE NEWS, especially since I have just read your article in the current number of July 31st, on what type of director managers should choose for their motion picture orchestras. You and MOTION PICTURE NEWS are both on the right track, and you have my best wishes.

Very sincerely,

Joseph C. Breil.

Concerning the Music Tax

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

In the July 17th issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS appears your reply to an inquiry from the Princess theatre, Gillet, Arkansas, relative to this Society.

Your answer is a clear and correct statement except as to your statement, "that the largest theatre would not be required to pay more than $5 per day" for the license to use the repertory controlled by us.

The fact is that the largest amount received from any theatre does not exceed 82 cents per day, and the average amount paid by theatres is approximately twelve and one-half cent per day.

We are sending you this information in order that you may advise your correspondents accordingly.—American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

THE END

An Appreciation

Mr. Charles D. Isaacson,
502 Washington Avenue,
Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Isaacson:

I am indeed glad to see you enter the field of the motion picture. With your wide and practical knowledge of music I feel sure that you are prepared to better a condition that is sadly in need of development. Volumes could be written about the relation of music to the motion picture and in my opinion it is almost the very life of it. If you can make the exhibitors realize this one thing you will have accomplished a life work.

There have been great strides made in the past two years, but I am afraid that we are all in a rut and having in mind the experience such as you now bring to the motion picture, I for one, welcome you with open arms and ask you to feel that you can count on every cooperation from the writer and his staff at all times.

Very cordially yours,

S. L. ROTHAPPEL,
Capitol Theatre, New York.

Asbury Park Manager Announced

Announcement was made this week in regard to the ownership of the new 2,300-seat house which has been under course of construction for the past six weeks at Asbury Park, N. J., which set at rest the number of rumors afloat as to the allegiance of the managership of the enterprise. The theatre is being constructed by Walter Reade and will be added to the chain he already controls in New Jersey and will be an independent house featuring productions of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

The structure will be known as Main Street theatre, getting its name from its location on the busiest street in the popular New Jersey seaside resort. In plans and material it outclasses any theatre now existing in New Jersey and compares very favorably with the better-known of the theatres in New York City. It will be of red brick with a ceiling 80 feet in height supported by steel girders and no interior columns. A balcony will seat 1,000 while the main floor and boxes will accommodate 1,300 more.

A special organ is now being constructed to be embodied in the theatre. When completed the new show house will represent an outlay of $150,000. Mr. Reade hopes to be able to open it to the public about the middle of September.

An Estey Organ can be installed in theatres with a seating capacity of 600 and up.

The Complete Plan Book

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

"Run 'Em Ragged"

(Snub Pollard Comedy—Pathe—1 Reel)

RUN 'EM RAGGED" is distinctly a chase comedy, with mediocre slapstick in abundance. Pollard decides the easiest way to get money is in the hold-up business, so he and a stout friend waylay two pedestrians. The remainder of the reel is taken up with the pursuit of the two comedians by a dozen or so police. There is the usual stumbling and falling and a chase down the river in rowboats. This latter action, speeded up ridiculously, provides a laugh.

There is a rather novel opening when some half a dozen thugs emerge from inside a small barrel. A very ancient joke is pictured which probably will not go over for a laugh because it is so well known. It is the story of the Jew who pays his creditor when they are both covered by the gun of a hold-up man. There are few good gags, but the reel does not drag despite this.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"The Hold-Up Man"

(Young Buffalo Series—Pathe—2 Reels)

THIS is a two-reel Western with a surprise ending, that may surprise some, but not a great many, of your patrons. Philip Yale Drew is introduced as a hold-up man, robbing the stage. The girl passenger notices his curly hair, and when he applies for work at her ranch later, she suspects him of being the criminal. It turns out of course, that the supposed robber is a Secret Service man on the trail of counterfeiters. We suppose that he stole the money to get a closer inspection of the counterfeit gold, or to keep it from general circulation. At any rate, the City Marshall comes along in the nick of time to prevent him from being arrested, and the quartet of real villains are marched off to their punishment. The girl assists in bringing the real culprits to justice, and a few scenes after the climax, are intended to inject a bit of romance.

There is some fast riding, but it is not perilous and consequently, provides only minor excitement. Drew has personality, and obvious as the story is, it will fill the need for pictures showing the absolute triumph of the hero and the inevitable discomfiture of the villains, laid in a Western setting.—MATTHEW A. TAYLOR.

"Out of the Night"

(Christie Comedy—2 Reels)

EDDIE BARRY, Neal Burns and a girl, whose name we do not remember, with pretty blonde curls and a fascinating smile, are the principals in Al Christie's latest two-reel fun-maker, "Out Of The Night." Building around the proclivities of a professor, in a girls' boarding school, for prize fights and the usual good times of the night rounder, Mr. Christie has fashioned a comedy that lives up to his reputation in the field of comedy makers. With an excellent production standing back of the picture and clever situations given the principals, headed by Eddie Barry whose facial expressions and appreciation for comedy always get a laugh, "Out of the Night" is well worthy a place on any program. It held the comedy position at New York's Rivoli and despite the fact that the hot weather had driven most of New York to the beaches, those who remained and attended the Rivoli were obliged to forget the heat and laugh during the run of this subject. Nicely photographed, well directed, acted and produced, "Out of the Night" is a good bet for any house and especially for the hot-weather house.—JOSEPH L. KELLEY.

"One Week"

(Keaton Comedy—Metro—2 Reels)

PUT all you've got on this Keaton comedy—it's a feature in itself. Unfortunately it is only two reels but into this two reels, Buster Keaton guided by the experienced hands and fun-making skill of Director Eddie Kline, has crowded more good, clean, wholesome comedy than has been seen in similar reelage in a long time. Not only is the comedy of the real hilarious brand but without an exception, every incident, every situation, are original and present a front new to the comedy-loving public. The devices, particularly the moving building stunt and the manner in which Buster as the home builder gets his portable house mated as to sections, with the main entrance one flight up, are singularly unique in the comedy world end give this little topper in the fun-making world, every opportunity to extract the laughs, not eliminating his inimitable somersault and tumbling tricks. Buster is a show in himself and is one of the few eccentric comedians working before the camera who appreciates that the day of the pie-throwing comedy has passed. With the exception of a part of trousers that fit him too quickly, he works "straight" and is due a lot of credit for putting the stuff over. He sure does this in "One Week" and then some. The little girl, working opposite Buster, whose name has slipped us, is not found wanting when all things are considered. She's cute, possesses the comedy instinct without attempting to act and gets over strong. Give this comedy to any audience and rest assured that it will create a demand for more just like it.—JOSEPH L. KELLEY.

"Children Not Wanted"

(Carle E. Carleton Production—Released Through Republic Distributing Corp.)

EDITH DAY, who originated the title role of one of last season's most successful musical comedies, "Irene" is the brightest spot in this Republic release and because of the popularity she has gained through her appearance in "Irene" on Broadway, she will, no doubt, attract in this picture. The title, too, has its drawing propensities, inciting, as it does the curiosity of that part of the public who are ever ready, even at the cost of admission, to satisfy that baser human craving for scandal and dirt.

The story, which we are told by the immortal Shakespeare, "is the thing" would in this case surely disconcert the Avon Bard, for if he were to attempt analysis, seeking the why or the wherefore and especially the logic in its plot construction, he would give birth to some such expression as that which reads, "what fools we poor mortals be."

Stuart Sinclair wrote the story. Who he is we do not know but if this be an example of his writings, he must be a beginner. Paul Scardon directed. Mr. Scardon if given a plausible story can put it on the screen with the best of them, as he has proved on a number of occasions, but in this particular incident he is due no more credit than the author. The lighting of Miss Day is noticeably bad excepting in a few scattered scenes.

The opening scenes show a heavy rain effect which, to the credit of Director Scardon, has been well staged, although one will have to stretch the imagination to the breaking point to discover just why Miss Day and the adopted child should be submitted to this downpour of the elements. There is a reason, of course, but so flimsy that we finally come to the conclusion that the producers just insisted that this thrill be injected to bring the production in the independent class. A dog has been dragged in as one of the members of the cast, supposedly because of its unusual hugeness and to give the heroine an excuse for awaiting the re-appearance of the man she loves on twenty-feet-of-film-notice. Miss Day is a good bet—the story and production in general are selling-platters in which you will have to trust in the Goddess of Chance. The story may be synopsized in a few words—a poor girl falls in love with a rich guy with the villain trying to get there first.—JOSEPH L. KELLEY.

Index to Complete Plan Book and Exhibitors Box Office Reports

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the last twenty weeks arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to April 3, 1920.

"LOVE MADNESS"

(J. Parker Read-Hodkinson)

Excellent Crook Story; Finely Acted and Produced

THE formula of "Love Madness," Louise Glaum's latest production, is a familiar one in screen circles. But Gardner Sullivan has the happy faculty of refurbishing old material and giving it a touch of freshness. He has even used the idea before but his skill at situation and climax, the surprises, the up-to-the-minute details which he, invariably, incorporates are what make his stories so entertaining. He is always resourceful. And he knows screen technique. Hence "Love Madness," a story of New York underworld, with the central idea based upon a woman's faith in her erring husband, is a subject that will certainly excite interest.

Certainly it carries a healthy punch throughout its seven reels, and though the denouement is revealed fairly early, the suspense still remains. One can puncture the plot when looking for coincidence. This factor is quite arbitrary in the development thus taking away a measure of reality. Still one's interest is held to the tense and compact action which depicts a man condemned to die for a crime of which he is innocent. The big motive is the wife's faith in him, holding to the belief that whatever sin he may be guilty of, he certainly could not commit murder. So she decides to solve the mystery in her own way without any assistance. And the scenes which show her hunting the evidence in the underworld, carry the burden of the plot.

Sullivan's conception of the murder is evidently inspired from Lincoln's assassination, the victim being shot while he is attending a play. And he has used the "ouija board" as a medium to wring a confession from the guilty party. It hardly seems reasonable that the accomplices would go "soot-free" after their grilling by the police. And it is difficult to imagine a man like the accused being convicted on the testimony of a crook. Mr. Sullivan has spared us the trial. The picture is the last word in lavish appointments. The underworld den takes first prize in interior decorations. Joseph Heneberry's direction is praiseworthy in the manner he has handled his scenes and players. Miss Glaum is at her emotional best. And supporting the star is the capable Noah Beery, Jack Nelson, William B. Ashford, and others. While not carrying the big idea of "Sex," the picture is as rich in production.—Length, 7 reels.—Laurence Reid.

By C. Gardner Sullivan.
Directed by Joseph Heneberry.
Photographed by Charles Stuart.

Louise Glaum, who scored such a decided hit in C. Gardner Sullivan's photoplay, "Sex," will appear in "Love Madness," the latest of this author's contributions to unbridled passion with its heroine represented as a selfish pleasure seeker. "Love Madness" is a melodrama of the underworld with its central figure the wife of an erring husband. It is a picture painting the faith of a woman's love—who refuses to give up hope that the man she loves will ultimately find regeneration. He is convicted of murder and the evidence looks hopeless. But unaided she penetrates the mystery of the murder.

She pieces together the bits of evidence and at the opportune moment catches the guilty parties. Mr. Sullivan has composed his scenes like a true artist. Every incident is in harmony, the details, the conversations of the characters being thoroughly in order. "Love Madness" is a tense melodrama which teems with fast-moving action. Miss Glaum gives an emotional performance in the role of the wife and Matt Moore, Noah Beery and Jack Nelson give competent assistance. Joseph Heneberry directed.

PROGRAM READER

Her husband was accused of murder although he was uncertain whether he committed a crime or not. But his faithful wife, whom he had long neglected, had unbounded faith in him. She refused to believe that he could commit murder and, unaided, resolved to free him. The brief outline of this picture cannot do justice to this tense melodrama, one of the finest photoplays that the gifted Gardner Sullivan ever wrote. The scenes are packed with teeming action and breathless suspense and it is lavishly presented. Louise Glaum is the star of "Love Madness" which comes to the next Be sure and see this picture.

SUGGESTIONS

If you played "Sex" you can excite interest by announcing that Louise Glaum, the star of that picture, is coming in "Moon Madness," by the same author, C. Gardner Sullivan. Tell that it is a tense melodrama of a woman's faith in her innocent. Play it up as a graphic story of New York's underworld. And follow by stating that Mr. Sullivan cannot be excelled for writing graphic and interesting photoplays. Mention his name, the director's and the star's in all your billing. You might bring out that Heneberry used to direct Douglas Fairbanks. Mention that Miss Glaum displays a wonderful wardrobe. This will excite interest among the feminine patrons. Play up the title. And use your circular letter.

CATCH LINES

She refused to believe that her husband was a murderer even though he was guilty of other sins. How did she go about to prove his innocence? See Louise Glaum in "Moon Madness."

"WHAT WOMEN LOVE"

(Sol Lesser-First National)

Kellerman in Thrilling Water Feats—Good Comedy—Unusual Under-sea Stuff

ANNETTE KELLERMAN in a one-piece bathing suit as a complement to a photodramatic subject, presented as a feature attraction at a theatre, is a drawing quality that can not be disputed and the exhibitor who contracts on the strength of this is pretty sure to realize satisfactory on his investment. The rest—meaning the story, direction, production, photography et cetera—may be more or less disregarded so long as these remaining qualities are tolerably acceptable. They are in this Sol Lesser-First National attraction. They are good and much of each, exceptionally good, particular reference and stress being brought to bear on the under-sea water stuff; the dive made by Miss Kellerman from the mast of a steamer rolling in the sea; a fist-fight on board the schooner; the "shots" of beach activities and last but not least the work of Wheeler Oakman in a most difficult role, given him as chief support to the star. Mr. Oakman, in so far as dramatic qualities of the picture are concerned, takes first honors and gives a performance with the able assistance of Ralph Lewis, Walter Long, "Bull" Montana and Carl Ullman, that eclipses and overshadows any defects in story that might, otherwise, be accentuated.

"What Women Love," presumably, bases its right to the titular position in this drama, on the fact that the average woman loves the "cave-man" stuff, as Katherine Hilliker, who titled the picture, makes sure to impress on the minds of an audience. This title, however, misses by a good bit the real intent, if there be one, for the creation of this drama. As anyone, striving to get the most out of both the commercial value of the subject as a picture and the name and beautiful physique and swimming and diving proclivities of Miss Kellerman, would do, the producers of "What Women Love," have borne in mind, and rightly, that the public will expect to see as much of Miss Kellerman as a one-piece bathing suit will permit and water in which she can perform her feats. This they have done omitting no possible detail that would add to these expectations. In consequence it is to be expected that Bernard McConville's story would suffer a bit. It has but thanks to the excellent work of Wheeler Oakman, the drama has been retained in its full strength. The title doesn't imply comedy, in particular, but there is much of it and some verging onto the slapstick. The under-sea stuff is excellent. As a whole, Miss Kellerman's picture is no mean attraction, especially for summer business.—Joseph L. Kelley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Annette Kellerman, the Diving Venus, as she is known throughout the world, and said to possess the most perfect female figure of any woman, whose activities in water and exhibitions of fancy high-diving have been the features of our big theatre week in her latest work before the camera, "What Women Love," is said to be wholly different from and to exceed anything Miss Kellerman has ever done before the camera, a 150 foot dive from the mast of a pitching schooner serving as one of the many thrills Miss Kellerman gives her audience. One of the unusual episodes in photodramatic presentations are the under-sea exhibitions of fancy diving in combat with one of the mutinous crew. Ex-efforts of James Cotton (Ralph Lewis), whose daughter with the moral reform movement is particularly fond of swimming and a one-piece bathing suit. Willie St. John (Wheeler Oakman) is also strong for the moral up-lift stuff and is a model young man. The cave-man stuff, however, is thrust unexpected on our Willie and he deludes into a real he-man gaining the respect of Annette.

PROGRAM READER

The Diving Venus, otherwise known as Annette Kellerman, is presented in a photodrama that gives the first real drama ever enacted under the sea. Miss Kellerman is known to nearly every American as the most expert woman swimmer in the world and her perfect physique has been made the subject of comment by perfect figure of any woman and her feats in the water, especially her fancy diving Women Love," her latest picture, Miss Kellerman is seen in a dive made from the mast of a schooner at sea; in a combat with one of a mutinous crew, Wheeler Oakman, who will be remembered as leading man for Priscilla Dean in "The Virgin of Stamboul," is seen in the leading supporting part opposite Miss Kellerman in "What Women Love."

SUGGESTIONS

Miss Kellerman's name is sure to attract—play it up in all your advertising. Mention the big thrill of the picture—Miss Kellerman's combat under water with one of a mutinous crew. Give mention to Miss Kellerman's supporting cast including the names of Wheeler Oakman, Ralph Lewis, Walter Long, "Bull" Montana and Carl Ullman.

CATCH LINES

Annette Kellerman, the Diving Venus, in "What Women Love." A 150-foot dive from the mast of a schooner at sea, is one of the many thrills in Annette Kellerman's late picture. A fight under-sea between Miss Kellerman and one of a mutinous crew.

"A CUMBERLAND ROMANCE"

(Realart Pictures)

M. M. Minter's Best—A Real Picture

REALART, Mary Miles Minter, Charles Maigne and all others concerned in the production of "A Cumberland Romance" are to be congratulated on the fact that at last this little star has been given a real, honest-to-goodness story, and a director whose early training as one of the screen's best scenarioists has fitted him to become as equally proficient in the art of direction, as he proves by his skillful handling of the finer points of this production. Realart had everything in its favor when the camera opened on the introduction of this picture—Charles Maigne at the megaphone; a real story, by John Fox, Jr., to work from; a clever little star when she has the right backing; an excellent supporting cast, the honors going to Monte Blue and John Bowers and a man at the camera who knows when to blow and when to lift the shutter.

Planting his scenes and characters with the deftness and subtlety of an artist, Director Maigne brought the mountain characters of the play through a series of situations to a climax, which for its latent capacity for containing surprise, has seldom been excelled in dimensions. The secret of Director Maigne's success with this production, lies, not so much in the direct action that he has created, which in itself is an example of perfected action, but in the suspense he has builded and the manner in which he has insinuated, by clever direction, the real personality and character behind these primitive people who enact the drama of "A Cumberland Romance." The fight scene between the young preacher and the girl's father; the magnanimity of the preacher when he learns that the girl he loves is to marry the "furriner"; the nice bits of comedy obtained from the wedding scene and the most satisfactory ending of it all—these qualities of "A Cumberland Romance" are attributable, first to the author and secondly, but with greater stress of importance, the credit goes to Director Maigne and his players. Miss Minter is to be complimented on her artful make-up or more properly, the lack of facial make-up. She has never been seen to better advantage. "A Cumberland Romance" is a real picture, real entertainment and one of which Realart may well be proud. Director Maigne is also credited with the adaptation, an admirable piece of scenario work originally titled "A Mountain Europa."—Joseph L. Kelley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The Realart Pictures Corporation is presenting an attraction at the theatre beginning the week of — which is credited by the critics as being the best picture in which Mary Miles Minter has starred. "A Cumberland Romance" is the title, adapted by Charles Maigne from John Fox, Jr.'s novel, "A Mountain Europa," and according to the critics after its premiere showing in New York, Miss Minter has been given an A-1 production. The story is builded around Easter Hicks, the pretty daughter of "Pap" Hicks, who is obliged to keep under cover to avoid the revenue officers. A young fellow from the city comes into her life. "Sherd" Raines, a typical mountain youth, is completing his crude course of study for the circuit rider's life. He loves Easter, but when he learns that the city fellow loves her and wishes to marry her he consents to give up all claim to Easter's heart so long as the city fellow will do the right thing. It happens that his first duty as a preacher is to marry the couple. Something happens, however, which proves to Easter that she can never be happy with the city fellow. "Sherd" wins her hand, the respect of the city fellow and reforms her father.

PROGRAM READER

If "Sherd" Raines hadn't proved himself to be the real he-man that he was, he might never have won the heart of Easter Hicks, her father would have gone the way of all habitual drinkers and he would have found himself the most unhappy youth in the Cumberland Mountains. But "Sherd" was a man—a real he-man—and he proved it to the satisfaction of all concerned. Charles Maigne, who directed, has given the silent drama one of its best pictures and one that is said to surpass in real entertainment value anything that Mary Miles Minter has ever done.

SUGGESTIONS

The exploitation of this picture should be centered around the excellence of the story, by John Fox, Jr., the perfect direction by Charles Maigne and the commendable work done by the cast headed by Miss Minter. Call attention to the fact that this production contains one of the best fight scenes that has been staged for the benefit of the camera for some time. Place in prominence the names of the supporting cast including the names of Monte Blue, John Bowers, Guy Oliver, Martha Mattox and Robert Brower—all of them popularly known to screen fans.

CATCH LINES

Easter Hicks, a primitive little girl of the mountains, knew she would never be happy with the city fellow. A real he-man's magnanimity and his reward. A story that gets under the skin with its realistic thrusts.

DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES

"FICKLE WOMEN"

(David Butler Production-State Rights)

David Butler Has Real State Rights Attraction

COMING to Broadway without an advanced press agent, practically unheralded and with the assuming title of "Fickle Women," David Butler's state rights attraction proves to be one of our best mid-summer productions. It is announced on the program of the Broadway theatre as a First National Attraction, but inquiry proves that First National controls only the New York rights. The state rights man who gets some or all of the remaining territory will make no mistake for he will have a picture that deserves, in every respect, the classification of an independent attraction.

"Fickle Women" was produced under the original title, "Sitting on the World," a story, by Sophia Kerr, which carries with it all the finer attributes of a sound picture drama with sprinklings of real comedy; a corking good fight scene; one of the best staged county fair or carnival scenes that the reviewer has ever seen, beautiful photography, praiseworthy atmosphere, commendable continuity and direction and fine bits of acting by the star David Butler. In a good many respects Butler is a second Charles Ray, as natural in his timidity and actions and as winning in that peculiar brand of personality commonly ascribed to Ray, and described as "boobish." Mr. Butler doesn't try to convince his audience that he is a graduate of some high-brow dramatic school where technique and not naturalness dominate in its curriculum of studies, but he is just David Butler, a common every-day American, with an easy-going disposition and displaying a good judge of fickleness and constancy in women as his selection of Rosy, the Redhead, in the play for a wife, will attest.

The supporting cast is up-to-the-minute, noteworthy in it, being Eugenie Besserole, as the mother, Harry Todd, as the father (very good); Lillian Hall and Julianne Johnston as the ingenue leads, Miss Hall's part verging on to the slavery type; Helen Gilmore, William Sharpe and Fred Bond. In the early part of the picture, Miss Hall is seen in the role of a little countrified Miss, of the slavery type. Her hair is noticeably dressed by a hair-dresser. Little country girls, as a rule, do not have their curly locks marcelled. Apparently, she's an exception. "Fickle Women," we repeat, is one of the bets of the mid-summer season.—Joseph L. Kelley.

THE CAST

Mrs. Price.....	Eugenie Besserole

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

David Butler, a strong competitor of Charles Ray for "boob" part honors, comes to the — week in his independent picture, "Fickle Women," adapted from Sophia Kerr's post-war story, "Sitting on the World." Sitting on the world was a favorite expression of the boys in the army when they wished to imply they were "in soft" or "on easy street." You will judge from this that "Fickle Women" contains some good comedy. You're right. The story deals with a young private who returns from service in France wearing several medals for bravery, to find that the community in which he lives (small town), is "up in arms" against him because it has been reported that he gambled and became intoxicated. His former sweetheart agrees with the community, and practically the only real friends the returned soldier has are his father and a little red-headed slavey at his home. The young soldier being of a good natured disposition only smiles until he learns that one of his friends had lied about him. He gives him a good beating and then the real truth comes out and the young fellow is placed in the good graces of the town and wins as his bride Rosy, the red-head, who proves to be the only girl in town who was not fickle.

PROGRAM READER

Calvin Price (David Butler) returned from France with two medals for distinguished service. He lived in a small town and word had reached there before he arrived that he had gambled and drunk while in the army. The little hamlet was all upset and when Calvin arrived no one was there to greet him. A good natured young fellow was Calvin and he only smiled and went about the work on his father's farm ignoring the indifference of the community. It develops that a certain young fellow of the town who had been in France with him had circulated these statements about him in order that he might win the girl who had been Calvin's sweetheart. Calvin learns of this and—well—you will have to see it told on the screen.

SUGGESTIONS

Advertise the star of this picture as a second Charles Ray in semi-"boob" parts. Also lay stress on the story which is one of the best that has been adapted for screen purposes during the present year. The supporting cast contains the names of many well known screen actors—Eugenie Besserole, Lillian Hall, Harry Todd and others. Sophia Kerr, who has written many excellent works, wrote this story under the title, "Sitting on the World." Play up the picture as a big independent production.

CATCH LINES

Calvin Price just knew that a fickle woman was not for him, so he wooed and wed the Redhead.
Have you ever seen an old-fashioned carnival in a small town? "Fickle Women!"

"The Enchanted Valley"

(Globe Trots Scenic—One Reel)

FOR beauty of scenery, for some of the most marvelous collections of picturesque shots that have ever come out of Yosemite National Park, "The Enchanted Valley," Globe Trots scenic, comes near winning the blue-ribbon prize of the season. The man behind the camera here has taken great care to catch Nature in all her grandeur. Beautiful vistas greet the eye with every flash. The Silver Valley of the Yosemite comes in for most of the scenic display. One sees picturesque waterfalls tumbling over rocks framed on each side by giant fir trees. A lake adds harmony with its mirror effects as the woodlands are shown reflected in its quiet water.

The magic of the woods comes over one when the giant trees are flashed. They have stood as silent sentinels for centuries and, certainly, as the title says, know the secret of eternal life. Only accidents such as fire can destroy them. They are even majestic in death. A fact testified to when the nature-seekers stand in awe before a mute trunk. Its branches are still. Its voice is silenced. Such a picture makes one appreciative of the open spaces. Those who have never been moved by the eloquence of scenic grandeur will surely respond to such a colorful picture as "The Enchanted Valley." Such an offering as this will spell a deal of pleasure to those people who haven't the means to enjoy a trip to the Yosemite. The picture is quite in a class by itself.—LAURENCE REID.

"King Buddha's Maze"

(Chester Scenic—Educational—One Reel)

THIS picture is like taking a rubber-neck wagon through Peking. One is constantly on the move as new vistas open up before the curious spectators. This age-old city, as history has it, is surrounded by a number of walls, one inside the other until the innermost one is reached. And so the Forbidden City is yours to enter. The walls themselves don't look as they would stand the bombardment of modern siege guns. The natives are certainly conscious of the camera here and cluster about with great curiosity. They are shown galloping about with their "rickshaws" and holding funeral processions. A title tells us that the mourners are paid to attend. And the final resting place is reached. Here is a huge funeral pyre where the replicas of the dead Chinaman's effects for bringing joy are burned. He will have them again OVER YONDER. The funniest sight is when one of Henry's cars comes into the camera's focus. It caused a salvo of laughter. A sure indication that China is conventional and economic in quite the same way as Podunk and Frog Hollow.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Alchemy of Winter"

(Paramount—Post-Nature Scenic)

THE cameraman who "shot" the scenes coming under the general head of "The Alchemy of Winter" sure did see something when he looked through the "finder" of his camera and likewise "shot" something when he turned the crank. "Snowed In" would have been a more appropriate title for the country caught by the camera was in the grip of this element. The scene showing the cascade of water falling over a steep declivity enshrouded in ice is one of the most beautiful scenics ever viewed on the screen. The photography could not have been better. For a hot night this short subject is one of the best mental coolers we can imagine.—JOSEPH L. KELLEY.

"HELD IN TRUST"

(Loew-Metro Special)

Incongruity and Sadness Mars Entertainment Value

THE fellow with the little theatre where they announce coming and current attractions by glaring, melodramatic posters in the lobby and where the patrons wildly acclaim smoking revolvers, a villain's grimace, the fair-haired lover and the romantic ingenue, irrespective of logical sequence in story, problematical situations in plot construction or to "twentieth century" direction, can leave his box-office after the last performance of "Held in Trust" with perfect assurance that he has supplied a demand. The fellow with the theatre where coming and current attractions are announced by the customary one-sheets and the conservative but ornate lobby-display stand of "stills," depicting plausible action in story and character poses of star and supporting cast and a title that conveys to the intelligible mind a conception of what the picture is all about, may feel a bit uneasy on the point and turn the key in the door of his house with a dubious expression.

May Allison's appearance in this Loew-Metro special is not encouraging for it is not meant that her vivacious temperament and winning personality should be the complement of such incongruity. The Metro press sheet announces that "Held in Trust" was adapted by Sarah Y. Mason from George Kibbe Turner's story as published serially in one of our popular monthlies. "Serially" is used advisedly by the editor of the press sheet as some of our specialists on serial productions missed an assured chance for blood-curdling, knock-down-and-drag-out serial production in fifteen or more episodes, when they overlooked Turner's brain-child. With this story the serial director could have realized his fondest dreams of improbability and re-actionary fantasy.

A certain sadness, never lifted by probable circumstance permeates the endeavor of producer and cast. Beautiful exterior atmosphere and interior sets are glimpsed serving only to heighten the contrast with the disagreeable, predominating and lingering to the last. A clever dog enacts a clever part and is in evidence throughout much of the reelage. This dog gives the only touch of humaneness and represents the only character in the picture that makes us realize that we still tramp terra firma and move in an atmosphere of reality. The supporting cast is adequate. John E. Ince directed. William Edmond photographed.—Length, six reels.—Joseph L. Kelley.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

May Allison in the screen version of a popular serial story as published in one of our widely-read monthly magazines, brings her vivacious and charming personality as a complement to an unusual, fast-moving drama relating the romantic and sometimes hazardous experiences of Mary Manchester, who is taken from humble surroundings and placed in a palatial home to impersonate a wealthy woman whose fortune is sought by unscrupulous relatives and representatives. Rapid action, changing events and unusual incident are elements that give to this photodramatic entertainment an exclusive classification in the silent drama. Not the least important in the well-balanced cast supporting Miss Allison in "Held in Trust" is a dog whose uncanny intelligence and almost human actions give it a place of importance not to be overlooked. John E. Ince, one of the screen's most able workers directed Miss Allison, who is supported by Darrell Foss, for a long time leading man for Mary Miles Minter, Walter Long, one of the screen's best character men; John E. Elliott, Lawrence Grant and G. Burnell Manly are seen in support. Sarah Y. Mason adapted the story.

PROGRAM READER

Mary Manchester lives in humble surroundings, her only congenial companion being a faithful dog. Her striking likeness to a Mrs. Rutherford, a very wealthy resident of the same city, appeals to Jasper Haig, president of the trust company in which Mrs. Rutherford's millions are held. He persuades Mary to impersonate the wealthy woman, having as an accomplice Mrs. Rutherford's husband, an unscrupulous man. Mary settles in her new home of palatial surroundings and meets with romance and hazardous adventure. She detects the perfidy of her would-be benefactor and with the help of the legitimate claimant to the fortune, turns the tide.

SUGGESTIONS

May Allison is a long-time favorite and her name can be placed in prominence in announcing this attraction. The story, "Held in Trust," appeared serially in one of our popular magazines and doubtless thousands have read it. This fact announced will bring you patrons. The cast has been well selected and John E. Ince's name affixed to the announcement as director should attract attention.

CATCH LINES

She lived in the humblest of surroundings and was suddenly thrown into the most palatial of homes with an immense fortune at her disposal. What would you do?

Romance filled with hazardous adventure fills the life of Mary Manchester. From obscurity and poverty to the home of millions and love.

"THE GAUNTLET"

(Vitagraph)

Poor Treatment Puts This One in the Mediocre Class

THE feud story with all its "moonshine" trimmings has been done so often on the screen that it now has very little recommendation as entertainment. Vitagraph has gone back to first principles in using it to fit Harry Morey's personality. The conventions are obeyed with a vengeance since there is no inspiration in theme or treatment. Perhaps "The Gauntlet" might have hit the bull's eye had the sponsors developed it with a touch of novelty or shown some imagination. As it is the picture follows a familiar groove with the result that very little interest and suspense are measured out. One sees the conventional characters who live up in "them thar hills," the Yankee who intrudes, and the "edicated" heroine who loses her heart to him. Which introduces the time-worn conflict.

Every detail in the action is cut and dried, even to the extent of having the intruder mistaken for a "revenuer." He is warned to keep away by the girl's "moonshine" suitor which arouses a spirit of rebellion on her part. The climax reveals a deal of gun-toting and shooting when the native son kills one of her kinsmen and revives an ancient feud. He places the blame on the Northerner. However, the bloodthirsty mountaineer confesses to the crime on the strength of the girl's promise to marry him. And for the sake of the good, old love interest, let it be said that the man from the North wins when the native son is killed by her relatives.

There is supposed to be a motive for the hero's appearance in the mountains, but it is lost track of in the development of the moth-eaten ingredients which compose the orthodox feud story. The plot takes a long time in getting started due to the planting of divers characters, many of which have no place in the action except to make it "in-rikrit." Even though the material is of ancient vintage the sequences might have presented more highlights had the director used his imagination instead of playing safe. Still such a picture carries very little appeal because it has outlived its usefulness. A feud story should be placed upon the shelf and allowed to accumulate a little dust. It has become unduly conventional. The production of the picture is mediocre aside from some appropriate backgrounds. Harry Morey's rugged portrayal is the only point of interest.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Roderick Beverly	Harry T. Morey
Nessy Worthing	Louise Valentine
Buck Higby	Frank Hagney
Dan Barrow	Walter Horton
Dave Worthing	Charles Eldridge
Ham Worthing	Arden Page
Sally Worthing	Eleanor Barry
The Sheriff	Robert Gaillard

By Lillian Bennett-Thompson and George Hubbard.
Scenario by Fred Schaefer.
Directed by Edwin Hollywood.

Harry T. Morey, famed for his portrayal of rugged, virile "man's man" roles, will come to the theatre on _____ of _____ week in "The Gauntlet," a vivid story of the Tennessee mountains by Lillian Bennett-Thompson and George Hubbard. The star appears in the role of Roderick Beverly, who finds himself involved in the feuds of the mountaineers while looking after his father's lumber interests. These men are dangerous when aroused and his adventure in Laurel Ridge is fraught with extreme peril.

His first introduction to anything connected with the little township is quite interesting and pleasant, for on the train he meets Nessy Worthing on her way home after six years at school in the North. Her manner towards him is enough to make him an object of suspicion and hatred by her own people. Real dramatic conflict is revealed at this point and the events are well fortified with action and suspense. In the end Roderick runs the gauntlet formed by his enemies and triumphs over them. Mr. Morey is as convincing as ever in his portrayal and his support is adequate. Edwin Hollywood, the director, has kept the story moving in tip-top shape and has framed it in truly picturesque settings.

PROGRAM READER

Harry T. Morey has another of his fighting roles in "The Gauntlet," the Vitagraph feature which will be shown at the _____ next _____. From the moment of his arrival in the mountain community of Tennessee he is menaced with death through the hatred and suspicion of the mountaineers and moonshiners. His only friend is a girl who has been educated in the North. How he triumphs over his enemies—how he runs the gauntlet and wins through sheer pluck and courage is told in five reels of most interesting drama. The strange, wild beauty of the Blue Ridge mountains forms a fitting background for this play of intrigue, adventure and "moonshine."

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the fact that Harry Morey is coming to your theatre in another of his "he-man" roles. Emphasize the fact that your patrons always get their money's worth whenever he appears in a picture. Bring out that the story is a fascinating one of intrigue and adventure and romance in the Tennessee mountains, where "moonshine" is the order of the day. Play up the title. Use it in catch lines. It suggests pluck and courage. You can dress up the lobby with atmosphere. The big angle is the star's name. He has quite a following and they will be interested in any copy you write about him.

CATCH LINES

The mountaineers were determined to "get" him. He came from the North and they distrusted him. See "The Gauntlet," a picture of adventure in the "moonshine" regions of Tennessee.

See Harry Morey, the screen's most virile star, in another of his "he-man" pictures. See "The Gauntlet."

"WHAT HAPPENED TO JONES"

(Paramount-Artcraft)

Good Hookum and Farce Comedy

GEORGE BROADHURST'S farce-comedy, "What Happened to Jones" has been keyed up to conformity with the anniversary of the death of our much esteemed friend, John Barleycorn by the clever pen of Elmer Harris and created for screen presentation by James Cruze with Bryant Washburn in the role of Jones. Good comedy is carried throughout the five reels by cleverly constructed situations and a most competent cast.

The screen version is wholly unlike the original stage production, but the changes made by Mr. Harris, the scenarist, add to rather than detract from the entertainment value. This Broadhurst play has been presented as a road attraction by practically every reputable stock company in the country which fact adds a good bit to the value of the picture to the exhibitor. Everything is in its favor as a farce-comedy to headline any theatre's program.

James Cruze, who directed Mr. Washburn in this picture, will be remembered by many as one of the best character men in Famous-Players stock. Recently he has taken to direction and his work at the megaphone has proved that the directorial world has won to its ranks a worthy member. But the director's gain has been the Thespians' loss for his works behind make-up stand out as some of the best characterizations in the silent drama.

Mr. Washburn's supporting cast includes Margaret Loomis, J. Maurice Foster, Frank Jonasson, Lillian Leighton, Caroline Rankin and Richard Cummings. Each of these have added considerable to the success of "What Happened to Jones." Kinley Martin has contributed some excellent camera work.—Joseph L. Kelley.

THE CAST

Jimmie Jones.....	Bryant Washburn
Cissy Smith.....	Margaret Loomis
Bobbie Brown.....	J. Maurice Foster
Anthony Goodley.....	Frank Jonasson
Matilda Brown.....	Lillian Leighton
Alvina Smith.....	Caroline Rankin

Scenario by Elmer Harris.
Directed by James Cruze.
Photographed by Kinley Martin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bryant Washburn in the screen version of George Broadhurst's successful farce-comedy, "What Happened to Jones," is billed as the main attraction at the theatre for the week beginning..... This Broadhurst comedy has been played in stock in pretty nearly every city in the country and ran for a successful season in New York. The original play has been brought up-to-date by the scenarist with the effects of the Eighteenth Amendment playing an important part. "Why Smith Left Home," another Broadhurst comedy, was only recently done by Mr. Washburn in pictures and its success is known to you all.

The story deals with the visit of Jimmie Jones to the country where lives his old pal, Bobbie Brown. Bobbie has married for money and his wife is a crank on morals being especially antagonistic to the demon rum. Bobbie pleads with Jimmie to bring along a couple of quarts. Jimmie does but they are stolen from his trunk en route. A reformer comes to town preaching against the awful effects of cigarettes. Between the two bottles and the reformer, Jones is in trouble from one end of his visit to the other. But the reformer turns out to be a crook, the two bottles explains and Jones wins a charming wife—so—what could be sweeter.

PROGRAM READER

"What Happened to Jones," one of George Broadhurst's most successful farce-comedies, has been adapted to the screen with Bryant Washburn appearing in the role of Jones. The screen version has been brought up to date by inserting incidents showing specific incidents of the effects of the demise of John Barleycorn in the year of our Lord, 1919. Two bottles of the best branded stuff stolen from Jimmie Jones' trunk while en route to his old pal's home, Bobbie Brown; the arrival of a cigarette reformer and a maiden aunt's eccentricities serve as the basis of some of the best comedy ever screened. Bryant Washburn has a suitable role and he is supported by an excellent cast.

SUGGESTIONS

Give the name of George Broadhurst, the author, prominent in your exploitation. Mr. Broadhurst is one of America's foremost writers for the stage. It was he who wrote one of Mr. Washburn's recent successes, "Why Jones Left Home." Mr. Washburn has a large following and his name with that of the author's is due first place in your advertising. The play itself is popular, as it has been played in stock in every city of importance in the country.

CATCH LINES

Two bottles of the best branded stuff, stowed away in Jimmie Jones' trunk cause a lot of trouble in a small town where the "constabable" has his ear to the ground.

A cigarette reformer turns out to be a man wanted by the authorities, which fact saves Jimmie's neck and wins him a bride.

"THE WEEK-END"

(American-Pathe)

Typical Hamilton Story Well Produced

COSMOS HAMILTON'S genius for relating spicy little scandals in a romantic fashion and at the same time getting plenty of plot action in his stories has served him to a good purpose in his "The Week-End," adapted to the screen by Arthur J. Zellner for the American Film Company for distribution through Pathe. Margarita Fisher, ably supported by Milton Sills and Bertram Grassby, who has done notable work in villainousapid male roles before the camera, is the vivacious, romantic young person around whom all the scandal that can possibly be fashioned by the tongues of the hypocrite, is centered. It all happens because this young person is invited to the seashore for a week-end to find that her hostess has been called suddenly to the side of a sick friend, leaving her in full possession of a charming bungalow and a certain young captain, the nephew of her hostess.

As a romantic, comedy drama, "The Week-End" is good summer entertainment, having as it has, the greater part of its locale, on the beach. The story has been well told and a good cast assembled to interpret the action and personnel. George Cox, the director, has appreciated the true worth of a Cosmos Hamilton story and accentuated the not-too-severe spice of the scandal element. Miss Fisher, always of the vivacious nature and looking well in the unconventional one-piece bathing suit, has a role that suits her talents along these lines and gives her freedom to make the most of them.

Milton Sills and Bertram Grassby add a good bit to the success of this picture and the balance of the cast do good work. For the summer season, "The Week-End" makes a little-above-the-average attraction. The photography and exterior scenes are especially to be commended.—Joseph L. Kelley.

THE CAST

Vera Middleton.....	Margarita Fisher
Arthur Trecourt.....	Milton Sills
Spencer Jardine.....	Bertram Grassby
Watt Middleton.....	Harvey Clark
Mrs. Watt Middleton.....	Mary Lee Wise
Mrs. Grace Maynard.....	Mayme Kelso
Mrs. Clara Churchill.....	Beverly Travers
Mrs. James Corbin.....	Harry Lonsdale
Mrs. James Corbin.....	Lillian Leighton

Story by Cosmos Hamilton.
Directed by George L. Cox.
Adapted by Arthur J. Zellner.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

One of Cosmos Hamilton's stories of romantic mix-ups, enlivened by his inimitable touch of the unconventional spice in life's romances, has been adapted to the screen by Arthur J. Zellner, one of our ablest scenarists and comes to the screen of the theatre week with that vivacious star, Margarita Fisher, in the role of the romantic young thing who gets talked about because she spends three delightful days of a week-end in a bungalow by the sea in a fetching one-piece bathing suit. The only harm she does is to fall in love with a dashing young captain but the tongues start wagging and she becomes a vampire of the first water in the opinion of the conventional country-side.

This story of Hamilton's, who will be remembered as the author of "Scandal," which has met with unusual success both on stage and screen, gives to the public another "scandal" when he presents the Week-End." It is fashioned pretty much along the same lines as his "Scandal" and offers just a sure-fire entertainment. Milton Sills and Bertram Grassby, two popular screen actors, appear in her support. George L. Cox directed. For hot weather, "The Week-End" serves excellent entertainment.

PROGRAM READER

Margarita Fisher has been given one of Cosmos Hamilton's unconventional stories of modern society life. There is bound to be tongues a-wagging when a romantic young girl attired in a one-piece bathing suit spends a week-end at the seaside with an equally romantic young man. All this happened because Vera Middleton's hostess was called away to the side of a sick friend on the day that her guest was to arrive. Her nephew decides to make a visit the same week-end with the result that the two find themselves the sole possessors of the bungalow by the sea. A vivid young gentleman back in Vera's home city awaits her return and learning of the scandal that has arisen because of Vera's week-end romance he sees a way to force Vera to marry him despite the fact that she does not love him. A nice mixup, you will say.

SUGGESTIONS

Cosmos Hamilton's name is popularly known in connection with his romantic fiction by pretty much all of the fiction-reading public. Give it prominence in your newspaper notices of this attraction. Margarita Fisher has been before the motion picture public for some time and she commands a large following. The story, "The Week-End," is one of the author's most popular works and should be given prominence. Call attention to the fact that many of the scenes are laid at a popular bathing beach in California which fact adds to the picture's value as a summer attraction.

CATCH LINES

Cosmos Hamilton, author of "Scandal," wrote "The Week-End." Week-end parties are always tainted with romance and pretty generally give rise to scandal. An one-piece bathing suit, a bungalow and a dashing young man—some scandal.
